A few years ago we owned a large dog by the name of Duke, writes Josephine Maguire to the Philadelphia Ledger. He was a wise old fellow and loved to play with children. He would allow my little 4-year-old brother to pull his hair and sit on him. The dog would not show the slightest annoyance. One moonlight night we were all sitting on the front piazza except my mother, who had gone up stairs to put our little brother to bed. She remarked as she came down again that we had better come in and have some music, as it was getting cooler. Some hours after that we were annoyed in the middle of the game by Duke scratching on the piazza floor and otherwise behaving as no dignified old dog should. We paid no attention to him, but he commenced barking and scratching again. At last my brother walked out, and Duke went on ahead, wagging his tail and looking behind him. Down at the very foot of our garden was a small river, and there my brother found our little brother lying on the bank fast asleep. The wee toddler had walked out in his sleep, as my mother had left the door open. Of course she was frightened when she saw my brother come in with the child whom she had put to bed some time ago. Duke was a much petted dog after that, and many offers were made to buy him, but we all said that we would not sell him for his weight in gold.

A Baby Canary's Music Lesson.

In the account of a pair of canaries and their offspring which is published in The Ladies' Home Journal Florence Morse Kingsley tells how the oldest baby bird, as soon as he had learned to flutter from one perch to another and to reach for a seed and crack it, was put into a cage by himself and hung out on the veranda near the father bird, who was named Wee Willie Winkie and was a superb singer. Then the baby bird's education began. First, he learned to jump fearlessly into his china bathtub and flutter his wings and get himself gloriously wet, just as father did. Next, he cuddled himself into a delightfully comfortable little bunch on his perch and listened attentively while Wee Willie Winkie sang his wonderful song. The second week we heard a funny, sweet little chirping and gurgling. It was the young canary. One day he trilled a little trill, and the next day he had learned three new gurgles, and the day after that he wove the trills and the gurgles together and added a longer trill on a higher key. In six weeks' time we were asking, "Is it Wee Willie Winkie who is singing or the baby?"

At Twilight.

A rocking horse, with a painted mane,
All battered and broken with play,
Was left with a fuzzy woolen dog,
Just at the close of day.

"If I were a thoroughbred, my friend,"
Said the horse with the painted mane,
"I'd have a pedigree to reach
To Boston and back again!

"My master would feed me on sugar and oats;
Of riding he'd never tire,
And I shouldn't be left to stand like this,
Alone by the nursery fire!"

"And if I were alive," said the fuzzy dog,
"I'd like to have you know,
There'd not be a purer Skye than me
In all of the kennel show.

"I'd wear a collar of silver bells,
With a ribbon of beautiful blue,
And I'd sleep on a cushion of softest silk
And not in a stable, like you!"

The nursery fire was burning low
When a wee little man in white
Came pattering in at the open door
To kiss his toys good night.

He tenderly hugged his painted horse;
"You know I love you!" he said.
Then he gathered the dog up close in his arms
And carried him off to bed!

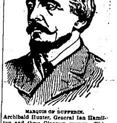
PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Honored With Carnegie.

The Marquis of Dufferin, who with the marchioness has been very prominent of late in English royal circles, was honored by the Glasgow university the other day. The university conferred upon him the degree of LL. D. Andrew Carnegie was a recipient of the same honor at the same time. Others similarly honored were General Sir Archibald Hunter, General Ian Hamilton and three Glasgow women. This was the first time a woman received the degree from Glasgow. The occasion was a memorable one, as the university was celebrating the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its foundation, and delegates were present from all over the world.



MARQUIS OF DUFFERIN.

Joe Jefferson's "Horse."

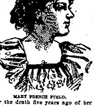
Many of Joseph Jefferson's amusing sayings are quoted by James S. Metcalfe in the account in The Ladies' Home Journal of a visit paid to the veteran actor in his winter quarters at Palm Beach, Fla. He uses a tricycle for the short journeys possible about that place. Once as he dismounted from it he remarked: "My horse is like David Harum's; he'll stand without hitching. And he's better than a bicycle because he doesn't have to have anything to lean up against." On another occasion when caught in a rainstorm and the wind made it difficult for one rain coat to keep both the actor and his companion dry Mr. Jefferson said philosophically, not complainingly: "I don't mind being wet all over, because then you don't notice any one place. But this being wet in spots kind of calls your attention to them."

Mrs. Wu Goes Home Alone.

Mrs. Wu, the wife of the Chinese minister, has left Washington. It is announced that she will go to San Francisco and there take a steamer to China, where she will remain for the summer. Mr. Wu did not accompany her, and one of the jokes that are going the rounds of the diplomatic set is that he was afraid to go home for fear the powers that be have not taken kindly to the suggestions he has made regarding various reforms for China. Mr. Wu does not intend to stay in Washington during the hot spell, but he is telling his friends that he hopes to be able to make himself comfortable at some of the American resorts. Mrs. Wu was accompanied by a good sized retinue.

Eugene Field's Daughter to Marry.

Chicago announces the engagement of Miss Mary French Field, daughter of the late Eugene Field, to William C. Engler. Miss Field, called "Trottie" by her intimates, is probably the best known young woman in Chicago. Soon after the death five years ago of her gifted father she became a public reader, presenting the works of her father so entertainingly as to become widely popular throughout the country.



MARY FRENCH FIELD.

Mr. Engler is a Marylander who has lived in Chicago for several years and has made his home for the past six months at the Field residence in Clarendon avenue. He is secretary of a big manufacturing concern and is popular in North Shore social circles.

The marriage is to be celebrated in the fall.

Miss Beveridge Angry.

Miss Kuehne Beveridge, the sculptress, who was made to pay $103 duty on her baggage by the customs officers when she arrived at New York the other day, has sailed away for London, vowing she will never again come to this country because of her treatment by the customs officers. Miss Beveridge will remain only a short time in London, but will go on to South Africa, where she intends to make her home.

Secretary at Seoul.

Gordon Paddock, the young New Yorker whom President McKinley recently named for the post of first secretary of the American legation at Seoul, Korea, went from New York to Washington the other day to report before going to his new post of duty. Friends gave him an elaborate "stag" dinner at the Union club by way of a godspeed.

ELECTRICITY AT WORK.

San Francisco's largest suburb, Oakland, obtains its electric force from a stream 150 miles away. Experience proves that long-distance transmission of electric power is a success in every way.

Forty thousand volts were successfully transmitted over 140 miles with a loss of not over five per cent. from the power plant on the Yuba river and used in propelling the electric railway cars in the city of Oakland, Cal.

A self-generating electric light buoy off Bunsum, on the North sea, is so sensitive and so efficient that the slightest motion of the waves operates it. This automatic light has been sufficiently tested to predict its general use.

A German inventor has devised electric eyeglasses or spectacles. The frames are made of alternate layers of zinc and copper, which being moistened with a dilute acid gives an electric current which is claimed to restore dimmed vision.

A progressive if not overhonest New Jersey farmer tapped the feeder of a trolley line, conveying the electric current under his truck garden by means of a network of wire, and had his radishes in half the time it took his slower neighbors to raise them.

Edison's dream, and we hope his prediction, bids fair to be realized by the discovery of immense bodies of the rare mineral, cadmium, in a Colorado mine. Cadmium is used by Edison in his recently invented storage battery, and he declared that with such a discovery "electricity would become cheaper than water."

It has been proved that electrified seed germinates more rapidly than others, and also by burying in the soil one zinc plate and one copper plate, placed vertically and connected by a wire, that potatoes and other roots grown in the electrified space thus secured produce about three times the crop that others do in similar soil close by, but without the electricity. It is also applied to the ripening process and found to be successful.

WHERE THE KAISER RULES.

Golden and diamond weddings were celebrated by 614 couples in Prussia last year, and the state contributed medals to each husband and wife.

A local Berlin paper recently announced that an invalid soldier had no other way of passing his time than collecting picture postcards. This has been responded to by some 5,000 cards from all parts of the world.

Germany's two African possessions are nearly equal in size, the sphere of influence on the east coast having an estimated area of 345,000 square miles; on the west coast the territory embraced is about 342,000 square miles.

Nearly 8,000 persons committed suicide last year in Germany. Roughly speaking, the proportion of men to women was three to one. More than a quarter of the suicides were persons mentally infirm. Nearly one-half had been addicted to drink.

RIVERS AND RIVER SYSTEMS.

Thre are five rivers in the world which drain over a million square miles. They are the Amazon, La Plata, Obi, Congo and Mississippi.

The Paraguay river, so called from the republic of the same name on its banks, is 1,800 miles in length. At points in its lower course it is from five to fifteen miles wide.

The outflow of the Nile varies from 16,000 cubic feet a second in June to 400,000 in September. From these figures the value of the new Assouan dam in preventing this gigantic waste will be plain.

The Mississippi is the longest river in the world, but estimated by amount of water discharged into the sea it ranks third only, the Amazon discharging 1,000,000 cubic feet a second, and the La Plata 850,000, to the Mississippi's 500,000.

CRAZY MAN'S WORK

[illegible] PEOPLE, KILLING ONE AND FATALLY WOUNDING ANOTHER.

FINALLY KILLED BY OFFICERS

[illegible] Battle in a Crowded Street—Insane Over Politics, He Starts Out for Revenge on Men Who Had Been Responsible for Sending Him to an Insane Asylum—Four Slightly Wounded.

Leavenworth, Kan., July 26.—Michael Kelly, an insane man, yesterday at the office of the Robert Garrett Lumber company, in the business district, shot six people, killing one, probably fatally wounding another, and more or less seriously wounding four others. He was himself finally killed by officers who tried to overpower him.

Kelly was eccentric, and during the presidential campaign of 1896 lost his mind entirely. At that time he was arrested and adjudged insane, Garrett and four others testifying against him. After a year in the Topeka asylum Kelly was released. He had been acting queerly again and had declared that he would kill the five men who sent him to the asylum. For two weeks past he has been practicing shooting with a revolver daily at the Fort Leavenworth range. Tuesday night he drank heavily. Soon after 11 o'clock yesterday he appeared at Garrett's office at the corner of Sixth and Cherokee streets, and without warning shot Garrett as he sat at his desk. Garrett fell from his chair and into the doorway, when Kelly deliberately fired four shots more into the prostrate form. Leaving his victim for dead, Kelly ran fifty yards to the rear of the company's lumber yard and began [illegible]

Reloading His Revolver.

Presently he returned to the office to find Dr. McGee, who had been attracted by the shooting, bending over Garrett. Leveling his revolver on the window sill Kelly took deliberate aim at the physician from the sidewalk and fired. The bullet struck McGee in the spine, and he toppled over near where Garrett lay.

Then followed an exciting street fight between the madman and officers who came upon the scene. Kelly, flourishing his revolver, dashed through the lumber yard. He met Ike Healer, a laborer, and shot him in the hand. A few yards farther on he encountered Sergt. Dodge. The two exchanged shots as they ran. One bullet from Kelly's revolver struck Dodge in the neck, but not before that officer had shot him in the shoulder. Kelly kept running and was soon confronted by Detective McDonald and Officer Faithager. McDonald dropped Kelly with a bullet in the neck. Dodge raised his revolver but it failed to work, and catching up with the murderer he crushed his skull with the weapon. Kelly sank to the ground and was carried to the station in an unconscious condition, dying soon after his arrival there. Garrett did not regain consciousness and died an hour after being taken to the hospital. Dr. McGee still suffers severely and it is believed he cannot recover. Dodge's wound is not considered fatal, while the wounds of the others are slight.

NEWPORT BOMBARDED.

Shell From the Kearsage Explodes in the City and Creates Consternation.

Newport, R. I., July 26.—The screeching of a shell that proved to have come from the Kearsarge and its explosion into fragments that broke a small piece of stone out of the new city building on Broadway and cut a limb from a tree near by, caused consternation shortly after five o'clock last evening. Half an hour later two officers came ashore from the Kearsarge, traced the shell to the city hall and obtained information as to its passage over the city. They examined some of the pieces and pronounced the shell a one-pounder from the Kearsarge, after which they returned without making any explanation. How the shot happened to be fired has not been explained. The ship had been engaged since the breaking up of the camp at Nantucket in target practice at sea. The matter will be thoroughly investigated.

ACCIDENT TO BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

Delays Traffic and Causes Much Excitement.

New York, July 26.—About 6 o'clock last evening a number of the vertical supporting cables of the Brooklyn bridge pulled out of their sockets and are dangling in the air. The accident happened at the north side of the New York end of the bridge and this end sagged from four to six inches. This completely stopped all street car traffic over the structure, but after a temporary delay pedestrians and wagons were allowed to proceed. The vertical cables which pulled out were imbedded in the great cables upon which the bridge is hung. What caused the pulling out of these cables is not known. The accident caused great excitement and the police reserves were called out.

HAIL LIKE CANNON BALLS.

Some Weighing Three Pounds Are Reported in Russia.

St. Petersburg, July 26.—A hailstorm in the district of Schatsk, government of Tambov, July 22, destroyed the crops over a wide area. Three men and many cattle were killed, while an entire flock of sheep and two shepherds were carried off by the flood. Some of the hailstones weighed three pounds.

FOR ALLEGED WIFE BEATING.

A Man Is Tarred and Feathered by a Mob.

Elgin, Ill., July 26.—Valentine Miller, of West Chicago, was tarred and feathered by a mob Tuesday night for alleged wife beating and was given a ride to the outskirts of the hamlet on the edge of a scantling. Miller is said to have been intoxicated when the alleged offense was committed. He is [illegible] which was threatened.

FEDERATION WILL [illegible]

[illegible], July 27.—President Shaffer of the Amalgamated association was in a more hopeful mood yesterday than he has been for some time. He declared that he is perfectly satisfied with his personal inspection of the conditions in Wellsville and apprehended no difficulty in keeping his men in line in that place. He evinced no surprise when mention was made of the criticism that had been offered by other labor leaders regarding his bringing on this battle at this time. He said that he expected criticism from many people, but that it did not alter his position nor the conviction he held that he was perfectly right. During the afternoon Organizer Flynn of the American Federation of Labor was a caller at the office of the Amalgamated association. He held a lengthy conversation with President Shaffer and set at rest all stories to the effect that the federation was not in sympathy with the Amalgamated association by saying that the entire organization was ready and willing to assist the Amalgamated association, both financially and morally in this strike whenever their assistance was asked. Regarding the methods being pursued by the Amalgamated association in fighting the steel trust, it was said by officials of the organization that their organization is complete, that they are fully prepared for battle and have equal facilities for learning the movements of the manufacturers as the manufacturers have for studying their own movements.

COLUMBIA WINS A RACE.

Constitution Twice Strikes a Rock and May Be Damaged.

Newport, R. I., July 27.—The Columbia yesterday in a rattling thrash to windward from New London to Newport gave the Constitution a great beating, the latter finishing a good third of a mile astern of her antagonist and being defeated two minutes and five seconds. The victory was surprising for the race was sailed in weather that as a rule has just suited the Constitution, the wind never exceeding six knots and the sea being comparatively smooth. The Constitution, following in the wake of the Columbia, the leading yacht in the big sloop class, struck twice on the Race Rock lighthouse. There was a substantial bump on each occasion, and after this accident the Constitution behaved like a lame duck. All her oldtime smartness was lacking. Her speed was diminished and she slagged off to leeward. Mr. Duncan, who is in command, said that he believed some of the plates on the keel were wrenched off by the force of the impact on the hard rocks, and these plates from the fin acted as a drag and made her incapable of showing her usual racing form. A diver was sent down shortly after the Constitution was moored last night, but he was unable to make a satisfactory examination, and Mr. Duncan decided not to race the boat further until she has been hauled out and opportunity given for a thorough investigation. The Columbia had the best of the start yesterday, but had it not been for her streak of ill fortune the Constitution would have crossed the line first and the result might have been different.

SEES HER IN SWIMMING.

Fatal Result From the Accidental Interruption of a Woman's Sport.

Franklin, Ind., July 27.—William E. Gray, a well known stone contractor, was shot and instantly killed yesterday afternoon near Boggstown by Mrs. Martin Freese. The woman was visiting relatives near there and had gone to the creek to fish. She also took a bath. Gray came upon her while she was bathing. Mrs. Freese escaped and came to town, secured a revolver and, accompanied by her husband, a former employe of the murdered man, returned to the place where he was working. Without word of warning she shot him twice, one bullet piercing the heart, causing instant death. Mrs. Freese has not been arrested.

HELPLESS BATTLESHIPS.

French Submarine Torpedo Boat Demonstrates Its Superiority.

Paris, July 27.—The newspapers are enthusiastic over the successful feat of the submarine torpedo boat. Admiral Fournier ordered the Morse to proceed from Cherbourg to Havre and there torpedo the gunboat Cocyle. The Morse arrived at Havre after a run of eleven hours. Eight miles off the harbor she was submerged. She arrived undetected close enough to fire a torpedo to the gunboat. She then returned to Cherbourg.

FREE TRADE FOR PORTO RICO.

President McKinley Issues a Proclamation.

Washington, July 27.—The president issued his proclamation, establishing free trade between Porto Rico and the United States and declaring the organization of civil government for the island. The proclamation is purely formal, and only in the body of the resolutions adopted by the Porto Rican legislature does it appear that the island is set free, commercially, in commemoration of the anniversary of the planting of the American flag on the island.

KRUGER GOING BACK.

It Is Reported From Rome That Such Is Oom Paul's Intention.

The Hague, July 27.—Mr. Kruger arrived here and proceeded to the residence of Mr. Wolmarans, one of the Boer envoys at Scheveningen, a watering place on the North sea.

Brussels, July 27.—Le Soir publishes a dispatch from Rome which says Mr. Kruger will arrive in Rome early in October on his way to South Africa via Naples.

GOLD STRUCK.

Rich Diggings Ninety Miles North of Nome—A Stampede There.

Port Townsend, Wash., July 27.—The steamer Nome City has arrived from Nome bringing twenty-three passengers. Among them was J. Wilson, manager of the North American Transportation company. Passengers report a rich strike in the Fairhaven district, ninety miles north of Nome, and that a stampede has occurred from Nome. Over half a million dollars has been [illegible] winter dumps near Nome.

TO END BOER WAR

EMPEROR WILLIAM IS SAID TO ASSUME THE ROLE OF PEACEMAKER.

KRUGER EMPOWERS HIM TO ACT

Willing to Take Initiative in Order to Popularize Himself With the German Public, Who Disapprove of His Friendship for Great Britain—Something on Whether William Is in It or Not.

London, July 27.—The rumor as to early peace negotiations which has pervaded the house of commons for several days, says the Daily Express, has taken the more definite form that Emperor William is soon to assume the role of peacemaker. Mr. Kruger and his advisers are represented as having empowered the kaiser to act for the Boers, and he is considered willing to take the initiative in order to popularize his relations with the German public who disapprove of his friendship for Great Britain. Something is on foot whether Emperor William is in it or not.

Mr. Kruger's arrival at The Hague is connected, the Daily Express thinks, with the rumored peace suggestions.

CAN'T LAST MUCH LONGER.

Boer War Will End in a Few Months Is the General Opinion.

Kimberley, Cape Colony, July 27.—The western border of the railway is now well protected by blockhouses. Gen. Lord Methuen is actively harrassing the scattered bands of Boers. His forces have captured or killed a considerable number of the burghers. His work is very difficult but the results thus far are encouraging. The Boers are in a miserable condition. Whenever one of their laagers is captured both men and women are found to be attired in rags. Two hundred rebels under Vansl attacked Settlagoli Friday but were repulsed. Gen. Delarey is reported to have been present. He afterward recrossed into the Transvaal and attempted to blow up the railway. The Boers are practically impotent and it is the opinion of every one, the military included, that the war will end in a few months.

MISTAKEN BOERS RETREAT.

Overestimated a Force and Fall Back With Heavy Loss.

Cape Town, July 27.—A fight is reported to have taken place between Jamestown and Lady Grey, Eastern Cape Colony, Fouchee's commando attacked a hundred Connaught Rangers, but scouts from Aliwal North approaching, the Boers retreated, apparently thinking that the scouts were strongly supported.

The Boers are said to have lost heavily.

REINDEER FOR ALASKAN FIELDS.

American Officer's Expedition to Siberia a Grand Success.

Washington, July 27.—News was received at the bureau of education yesterday of the entire success of Lieut. Bertholf's expedition after reindeer in Northern Siberia. The information came in a long cable message from Lieut. Bertholf, dated Vladivostock, where he arrived a few days ago after a perilous trip of nearly 1,000 miles by reindeer and dog teams over the snows of sub-arctic Siberia. He informed the bureau that he had purchased 500 deer at 18 roubles each, with a prospect of 100 more. The deer are now awaiting shipment and he says that he will charter a steamer immediately and transport the animals to Port Clarence, Alaska, where he expects to arrive the latter part of August.

GIANT CHILD OF THE WEST.

Baby Boy Who Tips the Scales at Seventeen Pounds.

Colorado Springs, Colo., July 27.—A son has just been born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Leaf, Germans, whose weight is seventeen pounds, whose height is twenty-four inches and whose chest measurement is fifteen and three-quarters inches. Dr. D. H. Rice, attending physician, pronounces the child normal except in size. He is strong and vigorous.

Mr. and Mrs. Leaf are of average size, as is each of the seven other children born to them. Dr. Rice says the child is the largest ever born in Colorado and perhaps in this country.

DRANK CARBOLIC ACID.

Musician Uses Foot Wash With Suicidal Intent.

Springfield, Ill., July 27.—William Gorman, a member of the field musicians of the Seventh regiment, committed suicide at Camp Lincoln yesterday by drinking a bottle of carbolic acid. Gorman had complained of sore feet. He went to the hospital, and the surgeon prepared to wash his feet in a solution of acid and water, but turning to speak with some one behind him, the doctor was horrified on returning to find that Gorman had gulped down all the contents of the bottle. He died in five minutes.

Montana Forest Fires.

Helena, Mont., July 27.—Disastrous timber fires are raging in the Blue lake country, forty-five miles from Livingston. Fifty square miles of timber have already been burned over, and fires are still raging.

ST. PAUL [illegible]

Temperature the Highest Ever [illegible]—Wind Storm Cools the Atmosphere.

St. Paul, July 26.—Yesterday was the hottest day St. Paul ever had. The maximum temperature recorded at the weather bureau was 104.2 degrees, an even three degrees higher than Saturday which was the highest record observed by the government bureau during its thirty-one years here. The maximum temperature was registered at 3 o'clock. Forty-two minutes after the record-breaking temperature the sky became overcast. A wind with a velocity of thirty-six miles came from the northwest and struck the city, sending the people hurrying into stores and buildings and teams to convenient barns. For twenty minutes a hurricane of dust raged throughout the city. After ten minutes rain began to fall and in another ten minutes the storm was over. The storm had a remarkable effect on the temperature, and in an hour a drop of 32.1 degrees was recorded. Then the mercury began to rise again. At 7 o'clock last night the government thermometer registered 82, and during the "cool of the evening" fell off again.

ELKS' GREAT PARADE.

Best Thing of the Kind Ever Seen in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, July 26.—While Salt Lake City was honored by being selected as the next meeting place of the grand lodge of Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Grand Rapids, Mich., captured the first prize in the big Elks parade yesterday afternoon. The Toledo "Cherry Pickers" were awarded second and the Chicago contingent third moneys. In this class the determining points of the judges were general appearance and bearing, beauty and originality of costume and number in line. The Greenville, Miss., lodge was given first prize for the most unique display in the pageant, Omaha being a close second. The parade was by all odds the most beautiful and successful of its kind ever seen in Milwaukee. Fully 5,000 Elks took part. It was made up of seven divisions under the marshalship of Gen. Louis Auer. About fifty lodges from all parts of the country took part. Half of these brought bands of music which preceded the marchers.

DAMAGED BY THRESHING.

Barley Expert Says Farmers Are Ruining Barley.

Winona, Minn., July 26.—E. C. Buts of Chicago, a barley expert, was in the city yesterday and states that great damage is being done to barley in this section by the threshers threshing too fine. On account of the season having been so dry the barley is very brittle, and the berry of the barley is being broken and the germ end knocked off by the machines. This could be prevented with care. The maltsters do not want this, and the price will be lowered on account of it from 2 to 4 cents. Mr. Buts says that the quality of barley is fine, especially in this section, if it is not ruined by the threshing.

CORN IN GOOD SHAPE.

But Relief Must Come Soon or Damage Will Result.

Parker, S. D., July 26.—This section of the country has had thirty days of very hot weather with only one or two rains. Corn is in good shape yet but is in jeopardy if the heat continues. Harvest is progressing as fast as possible with the heat. Many farmers are losing horses from sunstroke. One man north of here lost seven horses in one day from heat. His hired man also died. Several others report the loss of one or more horses.

FIFTY CENTS A HEAD.

Price for Carrying Harvest Hands From La Crosse.

La Crosse, Wis., July 26.—The officials of roads running in here are said to have unearthed a conspiracy between certain trainmen and employment agents whereby laborers en route to North Dakota are stowed away in box cars for 50 cents per head and hauled to the Twin Cities. In some cases it is said $1 has been charged. A secret investigation is being made.

TO DECLARE IT A TRUST.

Demand Is Application for Receiver for the Amalgamated.

Butte, Mont., July 26.—Suit was brought against the Amalgamated Copper company to have it declared a trust and monopoly, and to have it forfeit all its property in Montana, and to set aside the acquisition of controlling interests in the Boston and Montana and other mining companies. A receiver was asked.

TWO DROWN.

Prominent Young Men Go Down in East Battle Lake.

Wahpeton, N. D., July 26.—Two young men belonging to prominent families here, Allen Huel and Allen Harris, each aged seventeen, were drowned yesterday at East Battle lake, Minn. They were in bathing and got beyond their depth. Both bodies have been recovered.

Funeral Team Runs Away.

Duluth, July 26.—While returning from the funeral of their father yesterday afternoon two sisters and two brothers had a narrow escape from death or serious injury through the running away of the horses drawing the carriage in which they were riding. The driver is fatally hurt.

Berries Spoil for Lack of Pickers.

La Crosse, Wis., July 26.—Advices from the blueberry districts north of here state that the season is about over, with many berries spoiled on the bushes for want of pickers. This is especially so in Jackson county.

WILL TRY SCHLEY

SECRETARY OF NAVY [illegible] THE COURT OF INQUIRY.

SAMPSON THROWS MORE DIRT

Says It Has Been Settled That Schley Was All Wrong From the Beginning—Dewey, Kimberly and Benham Are the Men Who Will Find Out the Right and Wrong of the Great Controversy.

Washington, July 27.—Secretary Long announces that he has selected Admiral Dewey and Rear Admirals Kimberly and Benham as members of the Schley court of inquiry. The precept to the court has not yet been published.

The court will meet at the navy department in Washington Sept. 12. Secretary Long announced these facts yesterday. He says that the proceedings of the court will be open, and that the widest latitude will be permitted in the matter of witnesses, and that Rear Admiral Schley will be allowed to be represented by counsel.

The secretary had nothing to say about the composition of the court, except that he thought it spoke for itself, and to express the hope that the members chosen would be satisfactory to all concerned. He pointed out that none of the officers chosen had, so far as he knew, expressed an opinion concerning what is known as the Sampson-Schley controversy, and it was, therefore, to be presumed that they would enter upon their work in an impartial and unprejudiced spirit.

Secretary Long has selected these three men to sit in judgment in this controversy regarding the Santiago campaign, first because they are men removed from the factions and jealousies in the navy just prior to the war with Spain, and, second, because they are men of experience who have ever been equal to their opportunities in winning their laurels for the American navy.

Capt. Lemly, judge advocate general of the navy, will act as judge advocate for the court.

Sampson Yawps Again.

Admiral Sampson is glad that a court of inquiry has been asked for by Schley. When asked regarding the code signals arranged with the insurgents at Cienfuegos Sampson said that he had given instructions that the order should be communicated to all the captains of the fleet and that if Schley did not receive it it was not Sampson's fault. However, the admiral said he had every reason to believe the order was received by all. Rear Admiral Evans is quoted as saying that had Schley had the information he could have gotten away thirty-six hours earlier. To this Sampson replied:

"Yes, I should say it was about that length of time earlier that Schley should have gotten away. This whole matter has been settled, settled time out of mind."

"Settled that Schley neglected orders, disobeyed and did not get away quick enough?" the admiral was asked.

"Yes, that has been settled. All was wrong with him from the time he had anything to do with it; yes, from the beginning. There never was a real misunderstanding of orders."

Rear Admiral Evans denies having made the statements recently attributed to him that Schley had not received the signal code order.

FARMERS LOSE $900,000,000.

Drouth Causes the Heaviest Loss to Farmers Ever Known.

Chicago, July 27.—The loss to the farmers from drouth is the heaviest ever known. An estimate by one statistician made it $820,000,000. This does not include the loss in value of hogs and cattle. The loss on corn is estimated at 600,000,000 bushels. This, at 35 cents, is equal to $370,000,000. Oats are short 200,000,000 bushels, which at 30 cents equals $60,000,000. Hay has been cut down 15,000,000 tons, and at $10 per ton, equals $150,000,000. Loss on pasturage, potatoes, roots, vegetables and fruits will amount to $140,000,000. Rains might cause a recovery of part of this loss. The effects of the drouth throughout the west on the holders of livestock was illustrated by the rush of cattle to market. The farmer whose feed has given out, or is about to, is selling, and those who have fat cattle don't feel like paying the high prices for feed, and are disposing of stock. Receipts of cattle here yesterday broke all records, being 35,000, the heaviest run since April 25, 1892. Prices were off 10 to 24 cents.

NAPHTHA KILLS AND MANGLES.

Explosion in the Center of a Russian City Raises Havoc.

Batoum, July 27.—A terrible explosion of naptha occurred at noon yesterday in the center of the town, which is now in ruins. Many persons were killed. Many of the dead were horribly mangled and fragments of bodies were scattered broadcast by the force of the explosion. The number of victims cannot yet be estimated, but as the area affected was the most thickly populated part of the city it is feared that the loss of life was great. Batoum is the well known Russian oil port. It is situated on the east shore of the Black sea and has a population of 30,000.

SENATOR M'LAURIN SHUT OUT.

Unexpected Action of the South Carolina Democratic Committee.

Columbia, S. C., July 27.—The state executive committe late last night adopted a resolution shutting Senator McLaurin out of the Democratic party. The action was totally unexpected.

English Boat Badly Beaten.

Montreal, July 27.—The Seawanhaka cup defender Senneville, of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht club, disposed of the challenger, Grey Friar, of the Royal Yacht club, England, easily yesterday in the first of the cup races.

Excitement Subsides.

Memphis, Tenn., July 27.—Reports from Osceola, Ark., yesterday state that the excitement there over the removal of the two county officers by Gov. Davis has entirely subsided and no trouble is anticipated.

[illegible], July 27.—[illegible] officials of the Amalgamated [illegible] steel company [illegible] breaking of the strike [illegible] shipping of some of the [illegible] that had been employed in the Vandergrift mills of the company [illegible] in the [illegible] plant there. It was stated that the men were to be shipped to Wellsville during the early evening and would reach there after dark. As a consequence of this report there was suppressed excitement pervading Wellsville, which at any moment might break out into a serious condition. Both strikers and officials of the company are on the alert and ready for any emergency. The impression is strong that the general officers of the United States Steel corporation have become determined on the subject of an early breaking of the strike and to ultimately force the operation of all the idle plants. The second move that is understood to have been instituted yesterday is the starting of the long idle Hyde Park plant of the American Sheet Steel company. This plant was taken into the combine burdened with objectionable contracts made by the former owners and has remained idle since the American Sheet Steel company took hold of the property. The long idleness of this mill has caused most of the men formerly employed there to leave Hyde Park for other places, and the company believes there will be less difficulty in starting this plant than where the Amalgamated association has control. It was apparent in Pittsburg last night that fresh and decidedly important developments in the strike of the steelworkers were about to take place.

JUST A LITTLE RELIEF.

Scattered Thunderstorms in Various Localities—Heat Records Broken.

Washington, July 26.—Scattered thunderstorms in the northern tier of states in the Central West yesterday gave some relief in that locality from the intense heat. These showers, which generally were light in character occurred in the Dakotas, Southern Minnesota, Northwestern Iowa, the extreme northern portion of Illinois, and in Michigan. More of these showers and over a wider area are expected by the weather bureau to-day. Their effect, however, will be temporary and warm weather is again predicted for Friday. In the great corn belt the intense heat still continues and there seems to be no immediate prospect of a general rain, though the fact that showers are becoming more general than for some days is encouraging to the officials here who hope they may be the forerunner of a general breaking up in the heat and drouth conditions, although the forecasters will not say that this is a probability. The maximum temperature line of 100 degrees yesterday again encircled the upper Mississippi valley and the middle and lower Ohio valley. St. Louis reported a temperature of 103 and St. Paul one of 104 degrees, both record-breakers.

GREAT IS CONSTITUTION.

New Defender Again Defeats the Columbia.

New London, July 26.—In a fine southwest breeze over the thirty-nine-mile course from New Haven breakwater to Sarah's Ledge at the mouth of New London harbor the Constitution again showed what a superb racing craft she is in light weather and smooth water. She beat the Columbia yesterday eight minutes and twenty-three seconds fairly and squarely. There were no flukes, the wind holding true and steady with the exception of a shift of a couple of points after two-thirds of the distance had been covered. The breeze at no time was of sufficient strength to raise a single white cap on the waves.

INCENDIARY AT WORK.

Attempt to Burn a Burlington Railroad Bridge.

Wymore, Neb., July 26.—What appears to have been an attempt to burn a Burlington bridge across the Blue river and thereby wreck a train, was foiled late Tuesday night. Frank Crawford, returning from the country about midnight, found the bridge in flames. He hurried along to give the alarm, when he was stopped by a stranger who told him to go no further. Crawford broke away, when the man shot at him three times without effect. The supposed incendiary disappeared when Crawford returned with assistance. Much of the bridge was burned and there was no traffic on the line yesterday.

ELECTRICITY AT WORK.

San Francisco's largest suburb, Oakland, obtains its electric force from a stream 150 miles away. Experience proves that long-distance transmission of electric power is a success in every way.

Forty thousand volts were successfully transmitted over 140 miles with a loss of not over five per cent. from the power plant on the Yuba river and used in propelling the electric railway cars in the city of Oakland, Cal.

A self-generating electric light buoy off Bunsum, on the North sea, is so sensitive and so efficient that the slightest motion of the waves operates it. This automatic light has been sufficiently tested to predict its general use.

A German inventor has devised electric eyeglasses or spectacles. The frames are made of alternate layers of zinc and copper, which being moistened with a dilute acid gives an electric current which is claimed to restore dimmed vision.

A progressive if not overhonest New Jersey farmer tapped the feeder of a trolley line, conveying the electric current under his truck garden by means of a network of wire, and had his radishes in half the time it took his slower neighbors to raise them.

Edison's dream, and we hope his prediction, bids fair to be realized by the discovery of immense bodies of the rare mineral, cadmium, in a Colorado mine. Cadmium is used by Edison in his recently invented storage battery, and he declared that with such a discovery "electricity would become cheaper than water."

It has been proved that electrified seed germinates more rapidly than others, and also by burying in the soil one zinc plate and one copper plate, placed vertically and connected by a wire, that potatoes and other roots grown in the electrified space thus secured produce about three times the crop that others do in similar soil close by, but without the

CRAZYMAN'S WORK

SHOOTS SIX PEOPLE, KILLING ONE AND FATALLY WOUNDING ANOTHER.

FINALLY KILLED BY OFFICERS

Exciting Battle in a Crowded Street—Insane Over Politics, He Starts Out for Revenge on Men Who Had Been Responsible for Sending Him to an Insane Asylum—Four Slightly Wounded.

Leavenworth, Kan., July 26.—Michael Kelly, an insane man, yesterday at the office of the Robert Garrett Lumber company, in the business district, shot six people, killing one, probably fatally wounding another, and more or less seriously wounding four others. He was himself finally killed by officers who tried to overpower him.

Kelly was eccentric, and during the presidential campaign of 1896 lost his mind entirely. At that time he was arrested and adjudged insane. Garrett and four others testified against him. After a year in the Topeka asylum Kelly was released. He had been acting queerly again and had declared that he would kill the five men who sent him to the asylum. For two weeks past he has been practicing shooting with a revolver daily at the Fort Leavenworth range. Tuesday night he drank heavily. Soon after 12 o'clock yesterday he appeared at Garrett's office at the corned of Sixth and Cherokee streets, and, without warning, shot Garrett as he sat at his desk. Garrett fell from his chair and into the doorway when Kelly deliberately fired four shots more into the prostrate form. Leaving his victim for dead, Kelly ran fifty yards to the rear of the company's lumber yard and began

Reloading His Revolver.

Presently he returned to the office to find Dr. McGee, who had been attracted by the shooting, bending over Garrett. Leveling his revolver on the window sill Kelly took deliberate aim at the physician from the sidewalk and fired. The bullet struck McGee in the spine, and he toppled over near where Garrett lay.

Then followed an exciting street fight between the madman and officers who came upon the scene. Kelly, flourishing his revolver, dashed through the lumber yard. He met Ike Healer, a laborer, and shot him in the hand. A few yards farther on he encountered Sergt. Dodge. The two exchanged shots as they ran. One bullet from Kelly's revolver struck Dodge in the neck, but not before that officer had shot him in the shoulder. Kelly kept running and was soon confronted by Detective McDonald and Officer Falthager. McDonald dropped Kelly with a bullet in the neck. Dodge raised his revolver but it failed to work, and catching up with the murderer he crushed his skull with the weapon. Kelly sank to the ground and was carried to the station in an unconscious condition, dying soon after his arrival there. Garrett did not regain consciousness and died an hour after being taken to the hospital. Dr. McGee still suffers severely and it is believed he cannot recover. Dodge's wound is not considered fatal, while the wounds of the others are slight.

Shell From the Kearsage Explodes in the City and Creates Consternation.

Newport, R. I., July 26.—The screeching of a shell that proved to have come from the Kearsarge and its explosion into fragments that broke a small piece of stone out of the new city building on Boradway and cut a limb from a tree near by, caused consternation shortly after five o'clock last evening. Half an hour later two officers came ashore from the Kearsarge, traced the shell to the city hall and obtained information as to its passage over the city. They examined some of the pieces and pronounced the shell a one-pounder from the Kearsarge, after which they returned without making any explanatison. How the shot happened to be fired has not been explained. The ship had been engaged since the breaking up of the camp at Nantucket in target practice at sea. The matter will be thoroughly investigated.

ACCIDENT TO BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

Delays Traffic and Causes Much Excitement.

New York, July 26.—About 6 o'clock last evening a number of the vertical supporting cables of the Brooklyn bridge pulled out of their sockets and are dangling in the air. The accident happened at the north side of the New York end of the bridge and this end sagged from four to six inches. This completely stopped all street car traffic over the structure, but after a temporary delay pedestrians and wagons were allowed to proceed. The vertical cables which pulled out were imbedded in the great cables upon which the bridge is hung. What caused the pulling out of these cables is not known. The accident caused great excitement, and the police reserves were called out.

FEDERATION WILL HELP.

Thoroughly in Sympathy With the Steel Workers' Strike.

Pittsburg, July 27. — President Shafer of the Amalgamated association was in a more hopeful mood yesterday than he has been for some time. He declared that he is perfectly satisfied with his personal inspection of the conditions in Wellsville and apprehended no difficulty in keeping his men in line in that place. He evinced no surprise when mention was made of the criticism that had been offered by other labor leaders regarding his bringing on this battle at this time. He said that he expected criticism from many people, but that it did not alter his position nor the conviction he held that he was perfectly right. During the afternoon Organizer Flynn of the American Federation of Labor was a caller at the office of the Amalgamated association. He held a lengthy conversation with President Shaffer and set at rest all stories to the effect that the federation was not in sympathy with the Amalgamated association, by saying that the entire organization was ready and willing to assist the Amalgamated association, both financially and morally in this strike whenever their assistance was asked. Regarding the methods being pursued by the Amalgamated association in fighting the steel trust, it was said by officials of the organization that their organization is complete, that they are fully prepared for battle and have equal facilities for learning the movements of the manufacturers as the manufacturers have for studying their own movements.

COLUMBIA WINS A RACE.

Constitution Twice Strikes a Rock and May Be Damaged.

Newport, R. I., July 27. — The Columbia yesterday in a rattling thresh to windward from New London to Newport gave the Constitution a great beating, the latter finishing a good third of a mile astern of her antagonist and being defeated two minutes and five seconds. The victory was surprising for the race was sailed in weather that as a rule has just suited the Constitution, the wind never exceeding six knots and the sea being comparatively smooth. The Constitution following in the wake of the Columbia, the leading yacht in the big sloop class, struck twice on the Race Rock lighthouse. There was a substantial bump on each occasion, and after this accident the Constitution behaved like a lame duck. All her oldtime smartness was lacking. Her speed was diminished and she slagged off to leeward. Mr. Duncan, who is in command, said that he believed some of the plates on the keel were wrenched off by the force of the impact on the hard rocks, and these plates from the fin acted as a drag and made her incapable of showing her usual racing form. A diver was sent down shortly after the Constitution was moored last night, but he was unable to make a satisfactory examination, and Mr. Duncan decided not to race the boat further until she has been hauled out and opportunity given for a thorough investigation. The Columbia had the best of the start yesterday, but had it not been for her streak of ill fortune the Constitution would have crossed the line first and the result might have been different.

SEES HER IN SWIMMING.

Fatal Result From the Accidental Interruption of a Woman's Sport.

Mrs. Freese escaped and came to town, secured a revolver and, accompanied by her husband, a former employe of the murdered man, returned to the place where he was working. Without word of warning she shot him twice, one bullet piercing the heart, causing instant death. Mrs. Freese has not been arrested.

TO END BOER WAR

EMPEROR WILLIAM IS SOON TO ASSUME THE ROLL OF PEACEMAKER.

KRUGER EMPOWERS HIM TO ACT

Willing to Take Initiative in Order to Popularise Himself With the German Public, Who Disapprove of His Friendship for Great Britain—Something on Whether William Is in It or Not.

London, July 27. — "The rumor as to early peace negotiations which has pervaded the house of commons for several days," says the Daily Express, "has taken the more definite form that Emperor William is soon to assume the role of peacemaker. Mr. Kruger and his advisers are represented as having empowered the kaiser to act for the Boers, and he is considered willing to take the initiative in order to popularize his relations with the German public who disapprove of his friendship for Great Britain. Something is on foot whether Emperor William is in it or not."

Mr Kruger's arrival at The Hague is connected, the Daily Express thinks, with the rumored peace suggestions.

CAN'T LAST MUCH LONGER.

Boer War Will End in a Few Months Is the General Opinion.

Kimberley, Cape Colony, July 27. — The western border of the railway is now well protected by blockhouses. Gen. Lord Methuen is actively harrassing the scattered bands of Boers. His forces have captured or killed a considerable number of the burghers. His work is very difficult but the results thus far are encouraging. The Boers are in a miserable condition. Whenever one of their laagers is captured both men and women are found to be attired in rags. Two hundred rebels under Vanai attacked Settingoll Friday but were repulsed. Gen. Delarey is reported to have been present. He afterward recrossed into the Transvaal and attempted to blow up the railway. The Boers are practically impotent and it is the opinion of every one, the military included, that the war will end in a few months.

Bertholf, dated Vladivostock, where he arrived a few days ago after a perilous trip of nearly 1,000 miles by reindeer and dog teams over the snows of sub-arctic Siberia. He informed the bureau that he had purchased 500 deer at 13 roubles each, with a prospect of 100 more. The deer are now awaiting shipment and he says that he will charter a steamer immediately and transport the animals to Port Clarence, Alaska, where he expects to arrive the latter part of August.

ST. PAUL'S AWFUL ROAST.

Temperature the Highest Ever Known—Windstorm Cools the Atmosphere.

St. Paul, July 26.—Yesterday was the hottest day St. Paul ever had. The maximum temperature recorded at the weather bureau was 104.2 degrees, an even three degrees higher than Saturday, which was the highest record preserved by the government bureau during its thirty-one years here. The maximum temperature was registered at 3 o'clock. Forty-two minutes after the record-breaking temperature the sky became overcast. A wind with a velocity of thirty-six miles came from the northwest and struck the city, sending the people hurrying into stores and buildings and teams to convenient barns. For twenty minutes a hurricane of dust raged throughout the city. After ten minutes rain began to fall and in another ten minutes the storm was over. The storm had a remarkable effect on the temperature, and in an hour a drop of 25.2 degrees was recorded. Then the mercury began to rise again. At 7 o'clock last night the government thermometer registered 85, and during the "cool of the evening" fell off again.

ELKS' GREAT PARADE.

Best Thing of the Kind Ever Seen in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, July 26. — While Salt Lake City was honored by being selected as the next meeting place of the grand lodge of Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Grand Rapids, Mich., captured the first prize in the big Elks parade yesterday afternoon. The Toledo "Cherry Pickers" were awarded second and the Chicago contingent third moneys. In this class the determining points of the judges were general appearance and bearings: beauty and originality of costume and number in line. The Greenville, Miss., lodge was given first prize for the most unique display in the pageant, Omaha being a close second. The parade was by all odds the most beautiful and successful of its kind ever seen in Milwaukee. Fully 5,000 Elks took part. It was made up of seven divisions under the marshalship of Gen. Louis Auer. About fifty lodges from all parts of the country took part. Half of these brought bands of music which preceded the marchers.

DAMAGED BY THRESHING.

Barley Expert Says Farmers Are Ruining Barley.

Winona, Minn., July 26.—E. C. Butz of Chicago, a barley expert, was in the city yesterday and states that great damage is being done to barley in this section by the threshers threshing too fine. On account of the season having been so dry the barley is very brittle, and the berry of the barley is being broken and the germ end knocked off by the machines. This could be prevented with care. The maltsters do not want this, and the price will be lowered on account of it from 2 to 4 cents. Mr. Butz says that the quality of barley is fine, especially in this section, if it is not ruined by the threshing.

CORN IN GOOD SHAPE.

But Relief Must Come Soon or Damage Will Result.

Parker, S. D., July 26.—This section of the country has had thirty days of very hot weather with only one or two rains. Corn is in good shape yet but is in jeopardy if the heat continues. Harvest is progressing as fast as possible with the heat. Many farmers are losing horses from sunstroke. One man north of here lost seven horses in one day from heat. His hired man also died. Several others report the loss of one or more horses.

WILL TRY SCHLEY

SECRETARY OF NAVY NAMES MEMBERS OF THE COURT OF INQUIRY.

SAMPSON THROWS MORE DIRT

Says It Has Been Settled That Schley Was All Wrong From the Beginning—Dewey, Kimberly and Benham Are the Men Who Will Find Out the Right and Wrong of the Great Controversy.

Washington, July 27. — Secretary Long announces that he has selected Admiral Dewey and Rear Admirals Kimberly and Benham as members of the Schley court of inquiry. The precept to the court has not yet been published.

The court will meet at the navy department in Washington Sept. 12. Secretary Long announced these facts yesterday. He says that the proceedings of the court will be open, and that the widest latitude will be permitted in the matter of witnesses, and that Rear Admiral Schley will be allowed to be represented by counsel.

The secretary had nothing to say about the composition of the court, except that he thought it spoke for itself, and to express the hope that the members chosen would be satisfactory to all concerned. He pointed out that none of the officers chosen had, so far as he knew, expressed an opinion concerning what is known as the Sampson-Schley controversy, and it was, therefore, to be presumed that they would enter upon their work in an impartial and unprejudiced spirit.

Secretary Long has selected these three men to sit in judgment in this controversy regarding the Santiago campaign, first because they are men removed from the factions and jealousies in the navy just prior to the war with Spain, and, second, because they are men of experience who have ever been equal to their opportunities in winning their laurels for the American navy.

Capt. Lemly, judge advocate general of the navy, will act as judge advocate for the court.

Sampson Yawps Again.

Admiral Sampson is glad that a court of inquiry has been asked for by Schley. When asked regarding the code signals arranged with the insurgents at Cienfuegos Sampson said that he had given instructions that the order should be communicated to all the captains of the fleet and that if Schley did not receive it it was not Sampson's fault. However, the admiral said he had every reason to believe the order was received by all. Rear Admiral Evans is quoted as saying that had Schley had the information he could have gotten away thirty-six hours earlier. To this Sampson replied:

"Yes, I should say it was about that length of time earlier that Schley should have gotten away. This whole matter has been settled, settled time out of mind.

"Settled that Schley neglected orders, disobeyed and did not get away quick enough?" the admiral was asked.

"Yes, that has been settled. All was wrong with him from the time he had anything to do with it; yes, from the beginning. There never was a real misunderstanding of orders."

Rear Admiral Evans denies having made the statements recently attributed to him that Schley had not received the signal code order.

FARMERS LOSE $600,000,000.

Drouth Causes the Heaviest Loss to Farmers Ever Known.

Chicago, July 27. — The loss to the farmers from drouth is the heaviest ever known. An estimate by one statistician made it $620,000,000. This does not include the loss in value of hogs and cattle. The loss on corn is estimated at 600,000,000 bushels. This, at 45 cents, is equal to $270,000,000. Oats are short 200,000,000 bushels, which at 30 cents equals $60,000,000. Hay has been cut down 15,000,000 tons, and at $10 per ton, equals $150,000,000. Loss on pasturage, potatoes, roots, vegetables and fruits will amount to $140,000,000. Rains might cause a recovery of part of this loss. The effects of the drouth throughout the west on the holders of livestock was illustrated by the rush of cattle to market. The farmer whose feed has given out, or is about to, is selling, and those who have fat cattle don't feel like paying the high prices for feed, and are disposing of stock. Receipts of cattle here yesterday broke all records, being 35,000, the heaviest run since April 25, 1892. Prices were off 10 to 74 cents.

NAPHTHA KILLS AND MANGLES.

Explosion in the Center of a Russian City Raises Havoc.

Batoum, July 27.—A terrible explosion of naptha occurred at noon yesterday in the center of the town, which is now in ruins. Many persons were killed. Many of the dead were horribly mangled and fragments of bodies were scattered broadcast by the force of the explosion. The number of victims cannot yet be estimated, but as the area affected was the most thickly populated part of the city it is feared that the loss of life was great. Batoum is the well known Russian oil port. It is situated on the east shore of the Black sea and has a population of 30,000.

TO BREAK UP THE STRIKE.

Steel Company Officials Determine on Important Moves.

Pittsburg, July 26.—Two moves are reported to have been made by the aggressive officials of the American Sheet Steel company yesterday toward the breaking of the strike. One was the shipping of some of the non-union men that had been employed in the Vandergrift mills of the company to Wellsville to assist in the starting of the plant there. It was stated that the men were to be shipped to Wellsville during the early evening and would reach there after dark. As a consequence of this report there was suppressed excitement pervading Wellsville, which at any moment might break out into a serious condition. Both strikers and officials of the company are on the alert and ready for any emergency. The impression is strong that the general officers of the United States Steel corporation have become determined on the subject of an early breaking of the strike and to ultimately force the operation of all the idle plants. The second move that is understood to have been instituted yesterday is the starting of the long idle Hyde Park plant of the American Sheet steel company. This plant was taken into the combine burdened with objectionable contracts made by the former owners and has remained idle since the American Sheet Steel company took hold of the property. The long idleness of this mill has caused most of the men formerly employed there to leave Hyde Park for other places and the company believes there will be less difficulty in starting this plant than where the Amalgamated association has control. It was apparent in Pittsburg last night that fresh and decidedly important developments in the strike of the steelworkers were about to take place.

JUST A LITTLE RELIEF.

Scattered Thunderstorms in Various Localities—Heat Records Broken.

Washington, July 26. — Scattered thunderstorms in the northern tier of states in the Central West yesterday gave some relief in that locality from the intense heat. These showers, which generally were light in character occurred in the Dakotas, Southern Minnesota, Northwestern Iowa, the extreme northern portion of Illinois and in Michigan. More of these showers and over a wider area are expected by the weather bureau to-day. Their effect, however, will be temporary and warm weather is again predicted for Friday. In the great corn belt the intense heat still continues and there seems to be no immediate prospect of a general rain, though the fact that showers are becoming more general than for some days is encouraging to the officials here who hope they may be the forerunner of a general breaking up in the heat and drouth conditions, although the forecastors will not say that this is a probability. The maximum temperature line of 100 degrees yesterday again encircled the upper Mississippi valley and the middle and lower Ohio valley. St. Louis reported a temperature of 103 and St. Paul one of 104 degrees, both record-breakers.

GREAT IS CONSTITUTION.

New Defender Again Defeats the Columbia.

New London, July 26. — In a fine southwest breeze over the thirty-nine-mile course from New Haven breakwater to Sarah's Ledge at the mouth of New London harbor the Constitution again showed what a superb racing craft she is in light weather and smooth water. She beat the Columbia yesterday eight minutes and twenty-three seconds fairly and squarely. There were no flukes, the wind holding true and steady with the exception of a shift of a couple of points after two-thirds of the distance had been covered. The breeze at no time was of sufficient strength to raise a single white cap on the waves.

INCENDIARY AT WORK.

Attempt to Burn a Burlington Railroad Bridge.

Wymore, Neb., July 26. — What appears to have been an attempt to burn a Burlington bridge across the Blue river and thereby wreck a train, was foiled late Tuesday night. Frank Crawford, returning from the country about midnight found the bridge in flames. He hurried along to give the alarm, when he was stopped by a stranger who told him to go no further. Crawford broke away, when the man shot at him three times without effect. The supposed incendiary disappeared when Crawford returned with assistance. Much of the bridge was burned and there was no traffic on the line yesterday.

LESSON of the CHILDREN.

Underneath the spreading maple happy children meet and play,
And I love to sit and watch them in the closing hours of day.
Watching them my thoughts will wander to the happy days gone by,
When I, with the neighbors' children, counted out to play "I spy."
Onery, orry, ickery, Ann,
Fillison, follison, Nicholas, John;
Queevy, quavey, English navy,
Rinktum, linktum, buck.
And I long to run and join them, long to be a boy again;
Long to lay aside the burdens borne by tired, busy men.
And my blood leaps fast and faster, and I clap my hands and shout
When 'midst merry peals of laughter my own boy is counted out.
Eeny, meeny, miny, mo,
Catch a nigger by the toe;
If he hollers let him go,
Eeny, meeny, miny, mo.
Thus the summer hours speed swiftly as the childish games are played
In my back yard by the children gathered 'neath the maple's shade.

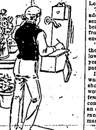
Dancing feet and happy laughter make the hours speed with haste,
And the back yard knows no rulers, knows no pride of birth or caste;
For upon an equal footing there they gather, girls and boys,
And I sit and envy them their healthy lungs and childish joys.
Wire, briar, limber, lock,
Three geese in a flock;
One flew east, one flew west,
One flew over the cuckoo's nest.
Pure democracy exists there, all for one and one for all,
Flitting here and romping yonder 'neath the green-leaved maple tall.
And I wonder as I watch them why men grasp for gold and fame,
Missing all the joys of living, risking misery and shame.
Monkey, monkey, bowl of beer,
How many monkeys have we here?
One, two, three,
Out goes he.
O, that men might learn the lesson! Be from greed and passion free,
Like the happy children playing underneath the maple tree.

Over the Wires.

BY GANET G. ALLEN.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

I am one of the few women in the world who has an opportunity to know exactly what is thought of her, for I am "the telephone girl," "the Central," "that stupid operator," and I answer to numerous other tender appellations which come to my ears over the wires, when business is brisk and my patrons in a hurry. It is a hard life, often an unpleasant one, but it has compensations; for instance, if one considers a kindly interest in the affairs of one's townspeople legitimate, it must be admitted that I have exceptional advantages in that line. self in an odd little affair, which turned out so well that I am tempted to confess my part in it. That nice chap, Alec Andrews, rang up some weeks ago and asked me to give him Miss Frances Cary's line, which I did with haste and no little interest since the flirtation has been town talk for some weeks. No sooner did I hear Miss Cary's cool "Well, Mr. Andrews," than I know love must be running its proverbial rough course, and I could almost see him stiffen up at his end, as he said abruptly: "Oh! I beg your pardon for disturbing you, Miss Cary, I merely wanted to make amends for anything I may have said last night that needed an apology. I was vexed, and I may have been hasty"——



"Miss Francis—what?"

His voice dwindled into a sort of expectant silence. But that stupid girl, instead of meeting him half way, wrapped her mantle of injured dignity about her, and gave him to understand that the less said about their difference of opinion, the better. I hardly needed the signal to disconnect their lines, after the last chilly words, but I drew a sigh of regret that there were to be no more daily conferences between them over walks and drives and good times generally.

"You have sent a nice fellow about his business, Miss Frances Cary," I said to myself, vindictively, "and you may be sorry by the time you have forgotten what the foolish quarrel was about."

But while I like Mr. Andrews for his courtesy to me, in my small connection with him, and was really sorry for his bad fortune in the direction of his lady love, I am much too busy for prolonged meditation over the affairs of the town, and I hardly gave him a thought for the next few weeks. Occasionally I caught echoes, in the talk of Miss Cary's girl friends, of the unhealed breach between Mr. Andrews and herself, but it was quite a month later that I recognized his voice, one morning, asking for 940, the town florist.

Mr. Mays didn't come to the 'phone himself, but sent rather a raw hand, judging from the extreme uncertainty of his replies. Finally, however, Mr. Andrews succeeded in ordering a dozen American Beauties to be sent before the dance, the following night to "Miss Um-m-mu."

"What was the name, sir?" asked the clerk.

"Miss Leary," answered Mr. Andrews, impatiently. "Miss Frances Leary."

There was a moment's silence, then, adding: "put in my card, which I'll send down." Mr. Andrews rang off before he heard the perplexed murmur from the timid salesman at the other end.

"Miss Frances—what? Why can't they stop long enough to make a fellow understand? I didn't hear—Oh! yes! Miss Frances Cary—that's his particular admiration."

I smiled grimly to myself, but it wasn't my business to run Mr. May's shop, and no doubt Mr. Andrews would straighten it out later. I confess I did feel some slight twinges of conscience about not correcting such an obvious mistake, when Fanny Leary rang, later in the day, and asked her married sister, Mrs. Johnson:

"Ella," she said, "I want your long white wrap for the dance tonight; I am going with Alec Andrews, and he always sends me flowers, and is so nice, that I want to look particularly well."

"Certainly, my dear," came back in placid tones from bland Mrs. Johnson, whose evenings are spent before the fire with Will and the children, and who hardly needs opera cloaks any longer. "Send Mary for it. So you are going with Alec? That's nice. Sends flowers, does he? What are they this time? I hope not red; with your pink gown. Is he still at odds with Fan Cary? I heard her cousin Anne say the other day she thought they were both tired of the row, and if Alec would only make some advance, Fan would respond. Young people are so haughty these days. They never are willing to take the first step. Yes, Will, I'm coming now! Goodbye child, have a good time."

As I belong to the great army of work-women, my paths don't lead me to dances and festivities, so my knowledge of the events of that evening, I gleaned from broken sentences over the 'phone, next day.

Fanny Leary rang her sister up again by breakfast time, and I fancy she sounded a trifle hurried and constrained: "Thank you ever so much for the cloak, Ella. Yes, I had a very nice time. What? Oh! Flowers? No! my dear. It was the oddest thing. None ever came. Alec came late himself and bundled me into the carriage without ceremony. The german had begun when we got there, so there was no chance to look around, even. What? No, he didn't say anything one way or the other. Most of the girls had flowers but not all. Yes, a little queer, as he always did it before. Thank you again, Goodbye."

Now for explanations, I thought, and, sure enough, presently Mr. Andrews called up the florist and asked in no gentle tone if he had send the roses to Miss Leary, as ordered.

Old Mr. Mays himself was answering, but he became rather bewildered, had to send for the assistant, and finally it all came out—the flowers had gone to Miss Cary, as I had known all along.

Mr. Andrews indulged in a pretty expressive exclamation of displeasure, and advised Mr. Mays to change clerks, but the mischief was done.

By and by Frances Cary's mother called for Mrs. Johnson, to ask for some recipe, and I held my breath to hear what followed the business talk.

"Frances isn't going out, I believe, Mrs. Cary. So she wasn't at the dance last night?"

"No; she stayed at home; but she had rather a pretty surprise in a big bunch of lovely roses which came in the afternoon."

"Oh! indeed"—a pause, while I fancied Mrs. Johnson gathering herself up for a question. "I suppose it would be indiscreet to ask who sent them?" she laughed.

"Yes, rather,' answered Mrs. Cary. "A very unexpected source; but I won't tell on her. Two spoons of butter and one of oil, did you say?"

Of course, it wasn't long before Mrs. Johnson wanted to speak to her sister Fanny, and in the interval she had quite settled in her mind that the roses had gone astray. In fact, she hit the truth almost exactly.

Now, Fanny Leary is a nice girl, but I suppose it isn't in girl nature to sit still and see another girl come in for one's own favors. I resolved to do a very unwarrantable thing. When Mrs. Johnson finished her story, and was hanging up her receiver, I spoke to Miss Leary myself.

"I beg you pardon," I said—and I confess I felt rather shaky—"but, Miss Leary, I unavoidably heard your sister and yourself, just now, and I feel as if I must put in a word, though it's none of my business." She started to answer, but I did not give her time. "I heard Mr. Andrews order those roses, and they were for you; but Mr. Mays' man misunderstood, and they have gone to Miss Cary by mistake. But, Miss Leary, don't you think it may smooth matters over between those two—and—I know I am impertinent, but I am so anxious for Miss Cary not to know!"

I gasped a little at my own boldness, but Fanny Leary laughed good-naturedly, and said: "Oh! very well, Miss Duncan, she shan't learn it from me!"

As I am neither messenger boy nor mail carrier, I can't say what Frances Cary wrote in her note of acknowledgment to Andrews. My part of the story ends with a telephone call, two days later, and it seemed to me that ring had a peculiar vibration, but that may be too fanciful a notion for a sedate public official, like myself.

"Give me Miss Cary, please. Oh! Good morning, Miss Frances. Thank you so much for your note—ah!—what did you say? Not at all; not at all; it was worth a whole garden of roses! And may I come to see you this evening, and apologize for past sins, and be taken back into"——

But here she interrupted him gaily. "Of course, you may. This—this—oh! well, this would never have happened if that telephone girl hadn't cut us off so quick one day several weeks ago, when I was about to explain that perhaps I was too quick in saying what I did. Yes; these "Centrals" are unfeeling creatures. Goodbye, then, until tonight!"

"These Central girls are unfeeling."

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm — A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Experience of One Novice.

W. C. Calkins, in an address before the Galesburg poultry association, thus tells of his first experience in poultry raising:

I woke up one morning with $4,000 and an idea. I still have the idea. It was this I learned from observation that the average hen could make a table d'hote dinner off a manure heap and lay an egg every working day. I also learned that this proud city of ours was entirely at the mercy of a few indifferent, non-union hens, distributed among the farmers round about, for its supply of fresh sweet-scented eggs. Putting the two together (the money and the idea), I thought I saw a chance to promote an industry which would rival John D. Rockefeller's oil plant when it came to a matter of declaring dividends. It was evident that there was nothing to do but collect a large, choice company of fowls, give them a happy home, and then lean back in my bounteous office chair and softly murmur, "Lay on, McDuff," or whatever their various names happened to be.

I, therefore, purchased a tract of rolling prairie. It was covered with a heavy growth of green, blue grass, shaded in spots by stately elms and flowering catalpas, and irrigated by a sparkling, babbling brooklet. It was a spot that would make a hen's life one long dream of happiness. It was a resort that would have coaxed eggs out of the most barren prospects. It was here I built a chicken house of such mammoth proportions that it resembled a snowshed on the Northern Pacific. It was built on the most improved plan of architecture. I gathered my ideas from personal visits to all the poultry farms in the country that were worth while, and every time I visited a new one I came home and changed my plans. There was an entire suite of rooms for every particular grade of chickenkind. There were drawing rooms for the aristocratic and hospitals for the feeble. There was a souvenir building for the Plymouth Rocks; there were temples for the Brahmas, improved foot-baths for the White Leghorns and china closets for the Cochin Chinas. I hired a small boy to do the scratching for them, so they might sleep during the early morning hours. I built a stable for my horse and delivery wagon, sunk a well, fitted up an office and bought a burglar-proof safe in which to keep the eggs pending a rise in price. Then I began to look around for tenants. This was difficult. At that time all hens looked alike to me. I was compelled to take the seller's word as to their pedigree and habits. I have since learned that hens, as a rule, do not always carry out the agreements of their former owners.

After getting into touch with every man in Illinois who had a hen he was willing to part with, I secured enough to open up business. The first roll call showed 375 present. Statistics show that one energetic hen will lay one egg a day, on an average. I did not have an average around the place, so I substituted a good, soft, well upholstered nest for each one of the 375. In a short time, through the courtesy of a dozen haughty roosters which I introduced among those present, and with the help of two steam-heated incubators, I swelled the total number to 1,260. Then I felt that my troubles were at an end. I had spent enough money to supply the town with eggs for years at Easter prices. I had purchased everything from hatchet powder for the prevention of lice to ground bone for aiding their digestion. I bought drinking fountains, hovers, footbaths, steam heaters and egg cases. I naturally supposed that it was all over but putting the income in the bank. I was hugging the delusion. It soon developed into a proposition of stupendous proportions. My health began to fail and my placid brow, on which my earlier years of struggle had left no mark, became as corrugated as a washboard.

I decided to secure a manager for my plant, one who knew the hen business, and give myself a needed vacation. I employed a man who came to me well recommended—by himself. He claimed he had made the chicken business a life study; that he was on speaking terms with every hen in Knox county; that he knew every ill that chicken flesh is heir to; knew all their little troubles, their faults and their accompaniments. When I thought of all he said he knew, I wondered how I got him so cheap. As soon as he entered the place he became a universal favorite. Day after day the hens grew more fond of him. They would eat from his hand, climb upon his knee and permit him to shampoo them and manicure their toenails. I turned the whole business over to him and went away on a two months' vacation, thinking that the next hen census would show a remarkable increase, and that the absolute control of the egg market of the world would be in my grasp. But I reckoned without my host, also without my manager. When I returned to the scene of my labors, bringing with me the latest style of cash register to figure up the profits, I found out of 1,260 happy, well-contented hens, only 27 were gathered to welcome me. My manager assured me that the great majority had passed into the dim, hazy unknown.

Some Good Advice.

The buttermaker in an eastern co-operative creamery sends out to the patrons a circular from which we make extracts as follows:

Gentlemen—Another year has almost passed. Has it been a profitable one? Do you think I am doing my best to serve you? I am trying to. Are you all doing your part? I fear not. The larger number of you are doing well; you bring your milk to the creamery nicely strained in bright, clean cans, and it is a pleasure to a buttermaker to receive it, as from such milk he can make a quality of butter that will sell for the top price in any market. But others, I am sorry to say, do not take proper care of their milk and do not bring it to the creamery in proper shape. A great deal of milk is brought in dirty cans, not strained at home, and no effort made to keep straws or filth out of it. Some of the cans look as if seldom or never washed and a sticky filth may be scraped off of them, both inside and outside. Do you expect that I can make good butter out of such milk? I cannot; neither can anyone else. I can strain the milk, run it through the separator, but no buttermaker on earth can remove the tainted and filthy smell that milk gets from unclean barns or bad smelling barns.

But you will say: "I get as much for my milk as my neighbor who takes extra care of his milk while I don't care how it reaches the creamery. I dump it in the weigh can and let 'er go Gallagher." But you are mistaken. Your milk will not test so well and, besides, every can of poor milk that goes into the weigh can reduces the average price of milk at the creamery. Some of our patrons would be horrified if they saw the dirt and filth I remove from my strainer and separator. Does anybody think that a bar of soap, a chunk of stable manure, potatoes, dish rags, hair pins, pan cakes, soaking in your milk can over night or longer will improve the flavor of milk? I have found all of the above, and more in the strainer of the weigh can. How can good butter be made from such milk? If I should grade the milk in two lots and make butter from each lot separately, giving each lot the same attention, would you expect each lot to sell for the same price? If you did you would be disappointed. The butter made from the poor milk would sell for one-half as much as that from the good milk.

No buttermaker on earth can change the flavor. If milk is off flavor the butter will be. When you send your jar to the creamery for butter for your own use, what would you say if I should put some of the dirt I find in your milk on top of the butter in your jar. You would say, "Oh! that dirty, nasty buttermaker, what does he mean? Is this the proper way to send me butter?" You would return the butter to that creamery and be mad besides. If the buttermaker would return your dairy milk to your home he would do his duty, although it would make you mad. Now, my friends, please help me to make good butter. Keep your cans and milk clean and away from the dirty barns and dirty tanks of water as much as possible. Strain your milk carefully; when you go to milk your cows rub off their legs and udders carefully and clean, and you will see a great improvement in the milk and butter.

Range Fence Dilemma.

Cattlemen are very much worried over the evident intention of the government to have all fences on the public ranges removed at once. The National Live Stock Association has been appealed to to use its influence in Washington to have the matter delayed, but there seems to be nothing that can be done. To put up a fence on the government range is contrary to the statutes, and to ask a government official to shut his eyes to violation when the violations are pointed out, is to ask him to violate the law and his oath. As long as the stockmen themselves were content to keep still, the government was willing to believe that there were no ranges fenced, but with a flood of protest and complaint pouring in, there is nothing to do but enforce the law. As long as there was plenty of range for all there was no trouble, but as soon as the range became crowded then there were plenty to find fault with the fences, and the only remedy seems to be to change the law. It is now generally admitted that the present land law will have to be changed, but as to the nature of the change there is a vast opinion. The latest proposition is that the government sell the lands to settlers at a low rate and on long time and get out of the free land business once and for all. There seems to be many in favor of this plan.—Denver Live Stock Record.

All the oleomargarine makers want is to have the government permit them to put coloring in oleomargarine. They know when this is done that the identity of the substitute is so concealed as in nine cases out of ten to defy detection by state officials or internal revenue officers after it is in the hands of the retailer or hotel keeper. And they know that it is the retailer and restaurant keeper who will find a way to use the colored article with which to deceive the public.

Radical changes in feed during the winter are open to objections, as changes generally cause shrinkage in milk. A more uniform flow is obtained by feeding the same ration all winter if possible. If it becomes necessary to make a change it should be very gradual, so that the system can adjust itself to the variation in bulk and the muscular action required by the stomach to digest that particular feed.

Do not judge the probable plumage of chicks as soon as they are hatched, as they will when fully feathered, come to the desired color.

Promising Horses for Soundness.

When handling the head of a horse under inspection feel if the bone of the lower jaw is thicker on one side than the other as an enlargement at this place indicates osteo-porosis, an incurable disease of the bones. Next dilate the jugular vein by pressing upon it with the finger in the jugular groove to determine whether it is intact or not. Sometimes the vein has been severed when "bleeding" and this constitutes unsoundness as the animal cannot get his head down to graze without falling. Examine the poll back of the ears for "poll evil" and the ears for abscess or running sore. Pass the hand down along the mane to see that there is not a chronic skin disease at the roots of the hair or a sore where the collar comes. The withers are next examined for "fistula" or the evidences of an old attack indicated by scars or the loss of some of the bone of the spines at that place. Examine the shoulders for collar boils or fibroid tumors caused by bad fitting collar. Now look at the elbow of the near side for "capped elbow" (shoe boil), then pass the hand down the leg, examining carefully under the knee for high and low splint, ossiets, bowed tendon, etc., and lower down for injuries or enlargements at the ankle joint or for evidences of interfering. The foot should be next very carefully inspected. First look for side bones at the seat of the lateral cartilages, then for quarter cracks, sand cracks, thrush, corns, seedy toe, dropped sole, contracted heels, stone bruise, quittor, ringbone, coronitis, etc. Now stand erect and examine the back, the place where the saddle presses, the point where the surcingle comes, the loins, to see if they are strong and the coupling short. Stoop now and look to see if the horse has been cleanly castrated and that a running sore or a tumor are not present in the scrotum or a rupture at either that point or the navel. If mare see that the udder is free from abscess or shows no signs of pregnancy. Next examine the hind leg in a manner similar to the process of viewing the fore limb. Commence at the stifle joint and look for dropsical swelling, looseness when in motion, signs of blistering or firing. Come down the leg to the hock and examine for spavin (bog and bone) and behind the hock for curb, while at the same time the point of the hock is seen to be free from callous or "capping" indicative of a post kicker. Examine tail to see if it is carried straight, if it has been docked, if there is a false tail attached (this is not uncommon in the cities). If a mare lift the tail and look for a tear of the perineum which constitutes a "gill flirt" and was caused by rupture of the tissues at a difficult labor. The same examination will serve to show if the mare is afflicted with leucorrhoea or has a cancer of the vagina, or polypus. The condition of the anus should also be examined for here are to be found evidences of worms if present or paralysis which is sometimes present and constitutes an unsoundness. In examination of the hind leg it should also be remembered to look for string halt and at the foot making a search for ringbone, thrush, evidences of interfering, over reaching, speedy cut, knuckling, etc. Having seen to all of these things next drive the horse and see how he behaves under all circumstances, is not a shyer, tail switcher, balker, stumbler, rearer, runaway, kicker, etc. If he passes all of this examination it then remains to test his wind. Take him out of the harness to halter. Place him broadside to a wall, then suddenly pretend to strike him with a whip and if he is windbroken he will grunt. This is but a partial test and it is necessary to next hitch him up and give him a gallop on soft road or with wheels locked, then suddenly stop him and note if he wheezes, whistles or roars, has "thumps" or pants inordinately. These few hints about testing horses for soundness will, we think, impress the necessity of care and help those who have horses to buy.

Inspection of Export Dairy Products.

An Associated Press dispatch from Washington, D. C., says:

The agricultural appropriation act for the current fiscal year authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion to apply the law for the inspection and branding of live cattle to dairy products intended for exportation, the purpose being to enable exporters of dairy products to give foreign buyers the assurance of certification by the government of the United States of the purity, quality and grade of dairy exports.

Secretary Wilson has decided to exercise the authority conferred on him by establishing in the customs districts of Boston, New York, Chicago and San Francisco a system of inspection of dairy products, but first will have experts in those districts gather all possible data in order that efficient regulations may be drafted for the conduct of this new service. A beginning will be made in a tentative way with the purpose in view to bring about a practical and an honest system by which all persons may be properly protected.

It is stated at the department to be "probable that at an early date the owners or shippers of products for export may, upon application, have the same marked and certified as to purity and quality, provided they are above minimum grade, yet to be fixed."

Cows differ as to the variation in the flow of milk at different milkings, some varying little, while other vary comparatively much. The same is true in regard to the per cent of fat. The milk of some cows seems to be influenced more by the feed than is the case with others.

OUR PHILIPPINE CABLES.

OWNED AND OPERATED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

When Manila fell there were practically no telegraph or cable connections anywhere in the Philippines. The system of land wires connecting the principal towns, and the cable between Manila and Iloilo and Iloilo and Cebu had been sealed and abandoned by the owners, the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Cable company, which announced that it would not open until the United States could assure protection for its employes and property.

Immediately upon the occupation of Manila the question of wires assumed a serious phase. Indeed the trouble began at the capture of the place, and the destruction of our wires was the first hostile act of the insurgents. Upon Aguinaldo's taking the warpath it became useless to stretch a line unless the army surrounded it or unless it was defended by a patrol close enough together to shout a message along. The system abandoned by the Eastern Extension company fell into his hands. He opened, repaired, improved and extended it with astonishing ability, utilizing even fence wire and untwisted wire rope, and always managing to destroy the portion of the territory he was forced from time to time to yield. The insurgents knew the value of wires and at every opporunity a few men would slip by our lines or between them and haul away as much as they could conveniently carry.

Cable, though far more costly and requiring more time to lay, could be maintained in the Philippines; for the Filipino had no "picking-up-gear" nor grappling and cutting utensils. The war department decided to establish a complete cable system, with alternates, as soon as possible. Contracts were placed, the work was rushed and the Hooker, the first Philippine cable ship, was dispatched post haste, taking on part of her equipment, which was procured in England, at Gibraltar.

The problem of securing a satisfactory force had been by no means an easy one, for the business of cable laying is a new one in the United States. The services of Mr. Otto Strubel, an engineer of the French Cable company, were secured and those of Mr. Henry Winter, an officer of the Anglo-American cable ship Manila. Only three men of the Hooker's crew had had experience in cable work. An expert jointer of rubber cable was enlisted in New York, but he deserted the expedition a few days before it left. Care had been taken, though, to have two sergeants of the signal corps instructed by him in the art, in case of such an emergency.

After arriving at Manila the Hooker was sent to Hongkong to coal, struck an outlying reef of Corregidor Island, and after all, down went the cable to the bottom of the sea. Of course, that was its ultimate destination, but not in a lump. The ship was a total loss, but most of the cable and machinery, though somewhat damaged, was recovered and taken back to Manila. Then the Romulus was chartered and equipped with the recovered paraphernalia and at the present time nearly every island in the group is connected with Manila by submarine cables.

It is now just a matter of time before an American cable will span from the Philippines to some point on the coast of China and Japan. The same Eastern Extension company now charges 75 cents per word for messages from Manila to Hongkong, about three times the rate from the United States to Europe.

This government is not in the International Telegraph union, which practically eliminates our voice from the conduct of the great cables, and in case of emergency gives other countries—those in the union—prior right to the use of them. The Philippine system is America's first step in cables. It is a good big strike, and when the trans-Pacific cable is a fact, this country will be abreast of the others.

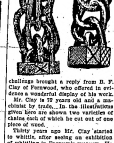
WHITTLES CHAINS OUT OF SINGLE PIECES OF WOOD.

A little while ago George A. Jones of Philadelphia challenged the world to produce his equal as a whittler. The challenge brought a reply from B. F. Clay of Fernwood, who offered in evidence a wonderful display of his work.



Mr. Clay is 76 years old and a machinist by trade. In the illustrations given here are shown two varieties of chains each of which he cut out of one piece of wood.

Thirty years ago Mr. Clay started to whittle, after seeing an exhibition of whittling in Barnum's museum. He has completed single, double, triple, quadruple and anchor chains. One chain is composed of links, within each of which there are eight other movable links. A walnut triple chain is marked with ornamental bits, including a revolving globe on a fixed axis, all cut out of one stick of wood.

The five-sided link, or anchor chain, shown is of cedar. The idea was taken by Mr. Clay from a watch chain. Another section of this chain is the eight-link production referred to above, with a fancy bit forming a pentagon, the hollowed-out inside containing a double loop knot made of the stick's core.

A chain made of links, each containing six links, is of the twist variety and lays flat. Mr. Clay has made many articles besides chains, such as tweezers, pincers and furniture sets, but he has made a specialty of chains and believes that in that line he stands foremost.

No Colored Masons Recognized.

Following the recent action of the grand lodge of Masons of the state of Washington, in reversing its former recognition of colored Masons, comes a pronouncement by Sereno D. Nickerson, secretary of the grand lodge of Massachusetts, that "no lodge of colored Masons in the United States is legitimate." "There have been individual colored Masons," he says, "made in white lodges of this country and England, and these Masons the white Masons recognize, but none other." Even the Prince Hall body of colored Masons is not recognized there being a question whether the authority given him in 1784 by the grand lodge of England to establish a lodge in Boston was valid, inasmuch as acknowledgement of the independence of the United States had been conceded by England two years before. Anyway, Prince Hall did not have authority to establish a grand lodge, or to charter other lodges, and his lodge is regarded by the white Masons as having been defunct since his death in 1807. In making this explanation, Mr. Nickerson says: "We don't recognize Prince Hall Masons because they were irregularly organized, but not because they are colored men. There is no color question in Masonry."—New York Post.

Had a Right to a Deal.

According to reports, strenuous efforts are to be made to suppress gambling frauds on the ocean steamers. It is said to have attained disgraceful proportions. The victims are many, and the card-sharpers are bold and defiant. This recalls a story which old Capt. Judkins, of the Cunard line—in his day the most famous of Atlantic captains—used to tell. There were stringent rules against gambling on the Cunarders, but there was another company that was most lenient in the matter.

One day a hot game was in progress on one of the boats of the latter line. There were several lookers-on, among them the ship's captain, who had come in for a moment. Another bystander noticed that one of the players, while dealing, dealt himself cards from the bottom of the pack and fortified himself for four aces. Shocked at the fraud, the bystander looked at the captain; but the captain gave no sign of having seen the trick. Pulling him away from the table, the bystander said:

"Did you see that, captain?"

"See what?" was the retort.

"Why, that fellow dealt himself four aces!"

"Well, wasn't it his deal?"—New York World.

Experiments in France have proved convincing, and the French believe they are certain to play a role of much importance in modern warfare. It is odd to note the different uses to which nature and science are put. For fifty years the Bitters has been curing dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation and biliousness. It will also prevent malaria, fever and ague.

Henry Watterson gives Bryan another dig;—

"For a man who had been dropped out of a balloon twice in five years, Bryan seems very active with his voice and pen. Almost any other man would have been killed. By constantly reiterating and reaffirming doctrines for which the people and a large part of the democracy will not stand, he has weakened himself mightily and provoked an opportunity for the choice of another leader."

The editor of the North American Review has arranged for a series of articles on the public debts of the leading nations of the world, which will be written by recognized authorities. The publication of the series begins in the August number with an introductory article, of a general charcter, on "The World's National Indebtedness," by O. P. Austin, Chief of the United States Bureau of Statistics. Mr. Austin traces the growth of the world's national debts from two and a half billions in 1793 to nearly thirty-two billions at the present moment and points to two factors which have been mainly responsible for this vast increase—the development of transportation routes and other works of public utility, on the one hand, and the expense incident to wars and the maintenance of armies and navies on the other. It is interesting to learn that only the United Kingdom and the United States have shown a disposition to decrease their national debts many of the other nationals—especially Latin nationals—seeming to treat their national debts in a spirit of levity. Mr. Austin gives interesting information regarding the class of persons who hold the obligations incurred by the various countries and of the terms and conditions on which various nations issue loans, pointing with satisfaction to the fact that the United States has floated its loans at a lower rate than any other country in the world. The article is accompanied by two interesting tables showing the national indebtedness of the world at various dates from 1688 to 1900, and the total indebtedness, interest and other annual charges of the principal national in 1900. Mr. Austin says:

"There are certain features of present conditions with regard to national indebtedness which are more encouraging and more hopeful. One of the marked characteristics of the century has been a reduction in interest rates, though this is, perhaps, somewhat exaggerated by the habit above referred to of issuing bonds at less than their par or face value, with the purpose of obtaining apparently lower interest rates. It may be said however, in general terms that the nominal rates of interest have fallen probably one-half, perhaps more, during the century. It will be remembered that the United States in 1865 was paying 7.3 per cent. interest on $830,000,000 of its securities, and that in 1900 it issued $300,000,000 at 2 per cent. thus enjoying the distinction of having not only reduced its interest rate enormously, but of having floated its loans at a lower interest rate than any other nation in the world. In doing so, it issued them actually at par; while, in many cases, those of other Governments bearing even a higher rate of interest are issued below par, as is illustrated by the recent British loan sold at 91½ with rates of interest at 2¾ per cent. for a short term, followed by a permanent rate of 2½ per cent. Considering the debts of the world to-day, it may be said that the bulk of them stand at an interest rate of from 2 to 3½ per cent., or probably about one-half that which the great nations were required to pay, under normal conditions, at the beginning of the century; though in case of exigencies, such as those of the United States referred to, the rate was much higher."

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XVIII. [redacted] THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1901. NUMBER 31.

DESTROYED BY FIRE

Thief River Falls Lumber Company's Barn Burned to the Ground and Other Property Damaged.

The Thief River Falls Lumber Company's barn in this city was discovered to be on fire Tuesday morning at about 8 o'clock, and in a short time the large structure was burned to the ground. There was a strong south wind, and for a time the cigar store and residence of C. Weiner and the store building of L. Ulstad were threatened, but by work done by the mill crew these buildings were saved although they were greatly damaged by the heat and smoke. The approach to the bridge on the East Side was destroyed, but it is now being repaired and in a few days teams can travel over it.

The loss to the Lumber Company is estimated to be about $3,000, and they had insurance to the amount of $1,000 on the barn and $500 upon the contents. About one third of their horses—or 25—were in the barn when the fire was discovered but they were all rescued. The damage to the bridge amounts to about $300, and L. Ulstad's building was damaged to the amount of $200, which is covered by insurance. Mr. Weiner's stock of candies, cigars, tobaccos, groceries and household goods were damaged by smoke, heat, etc., to a great extent, the exact amount it would be hard to estimate, but they were insured to an amount that will cover the loss.

The origin of the fire is unknown, and although there were a number of people in the vicinity of the barn, the fire was not discovered until it had gained such headway that it was beyond control. Opinions differ as to whether it was caused by a spark from the burner or originated inside.

The members of the local fire department did good work, but they were so handicaped by the failure of City Engineer Dalson to operate the fire engine that their efforts were of but little account. Something was wrong with the mechanism of the fire engine, and it had to be repaired. Mr. Dalson was condemned by a number of the firemen for not having his engine in good order, while others swore vengence upon the city counil for hiring a second rate engineer. It is very evident that a change will have to be made and a competent man placed in charge. Personally the News would be pleased to see Mr. Dalson continue to hold the job—providing he was competent—but under the circumstances we do not think the city council is justified in longer retaining him.

FOUND IRON

In the Red Lake River at This Point.

Two gentlemen who have been prospecting for iron in the country around the Red lake, were in the city last week enroute up river. While here they investigated the local situation and with a magnet discovered a large amount of fine iron in sand below Carl Kretzschmar's dam. This would indicate that there was a bed of iron ore somewhere up the river, but whether it will be found in paying quantities or not it is hard to say. The gentlemen have options on a large amount of land up around the lake and a thorough investigation will be made.

Novel Settlement.

Down at Red Lake Falls last week Conrod Lajambe brought suit against his brother Charles, Conrod alleging that the latter had made derogatory statements regarding his wife. Charles made a like counter-charge and the jury disagreed, so the brothers got together and published notices in the Gazette, stating that they believed in the chastity of each others wife and promising to not repeat their assertions. It was an unusual way of settling such trouble but if the newspaper can thus become instrumental in settling family troubles, it will have materially increased its otherwise large sphere of usefulness.

Water Works.

An Improvement That Is Badly Needed in Thief River Falls.

The fire Tuesday had at least one beneficial result—the agitating of the city putting in a system of water works, and selling the fire engine. With so many wooden buildings in the business center, the best of fire protection is needed, and a few thousand dollars spent now for this much needed improvement will result in saving many times the cost in the future. Let the city council put in water works in connection with the sewer system. It will pay.

Wiley Tindolph yesterday circulated a petition addressed to the city council demanding that a system of water works be established here. All of the leading business men in town have signed it.

COUNTY ROAD

That's What the One West of This City Will Be.

Through the efforts of Louis Hanson, the county commissioners last week took action in the matter of the county road to run due from this city to the county line, and it has been made a county road. While there is a small amount of county money at present available to spend upon this road, Mr. Hanson does not think it advisable to do any work this fall, but to wait until next spring, at which time more county money can be secured, and this, together with the work to be done by the townships, will make it possible to build a good road—one that will be substantial.

$5,000 for locating Indians on homesteads.

ABOUT SHEEP

The Most Successful Way to Start a Flock.

In making a beginning with sheep in Northeast Minnesota much will depend upon the amount of previous experience possessed by the farmer. If he is used to careing for sheep and understands their general requirements he can with more safety import grades or even full bloods of the improved mutton breeds. If he has never handled sheep it would be very unwise for him to start with valuable animals, as with no other class of stock will correct management give better results and mistakes be sooner followed by loss, than with sheep. Common sheep are nearly all grade merinos, small of body and with rather light fleeces of fine wool. Breeding ewes may be obtained from such stock at stock yards, suitable for use as a foundation for a flock, at much lower figures than grades of the mutton or larger died and longer wooled sheep. By selecting them according to the size and condition of the teeth, none but young animals need be secured. Where it is necessary to confine them entirely to brush, such sheep will usually thrive somewhat better than would better bred sheep, and they will clear the brush out a little more thoroughly. These facts and their lesser value make them somewhat more suitable for beginners. on new farms, than the better grades until the farmer has gained the necessary experience and the farm is more developed

But it should be the aim of every farmer to improve the flock to grading them up to the mutton type. Merino grades usually produce and raise but one lamb, while the mutton breeds commonly have twins. As the profit of the flock lies in its increase, the mutton sheep by this one item are more profitable. Larger carcasses and heavier fleeces increase this margin of profit. This result can be brought about by the use of a pure bred ram of a mutton breed, upon the grade merino ewes, saving the ewe lambs and continuing to breed to a pure bred ram. Two crosses will usually produce a type of lamb closely resembling the full blood.

A full grown ram will serve one hundred ewes, and it will pay neighbors to combine in the purchase of such an animal, for if a grade ram is used the results will be very much delayed.

The air in the English channel was so clear one day recently that the dome of Boulogne cathedral, twenty-eight miles away, could be clearly seen from Dover with the naked eye.

In conversation with a newspaper correspondent, Arabi Pasha has stated that he is in a difficult financial position. He got an allowance of £50 a month from the Egyptian government, which was scarcely sufficient to supply the wants of his large family, which includes sixteen children, aged from three to thirty-eight years.

The Newberry library at Chicago has secured the Prince Lucien Bonaparte collection of 15,000 volumes, said to be among the best philological libraries in existence. The prince spent a fortune in getting it together and his heirs offered it for sale at $200,000, but the Chicago institution is said to have bought it for a much lower figure.

E. A. Martel, the French explorer of caverns, whose discoveries underground have attracted much attention, reports that he has found in the department of Hautes Alpes a cavity in the form of a "natural well," whose depth exceeds that of any other known. He has sounded it to the depth of about 1,027 feet, but the actual bottom has not been reached.

Doctor Voges, the director of the Buenos Ayres National Board of Health, reports that during a recent trip to Paraguay he accidentally discovered that napthalene is an excellent remedy for mosquito bites. It neutralizes the poison, he says, even when the bite has caused considerable inflammation, and if a fresh bite be rubbed with napthalene no swelling follows.

Speaking of the summer and winter journeys wealthy people make to various "resorts" here and abroad, a shrewd observer of city life remarks that "the finer the house on the avenue, the less it is occupied." In so far as that is true, it is to be regretted. At every season, in some favored region, nature spreads a fairer roof than ever architect devised; but we may leave paradise behind us when we set out to find a better place than home.

In the presence of a large number of officers from the garrison and neighborhood, the famous "Tower of Remembrance" erected at Gravelotte by the Germans in 1895, at a cost of more than £40,000, was blown up recently by the military engineers. Originally intended as a post of observation over the neighboring country, it was afterwards found that the existence of such a watch-tower was incompatible with the safety of the new fort outside Metz, which is completely dominated.. All access to the monument has been prohibited for some time past by the military authorities.

No fair-minded landlord can any longer advance the old argument that wretched tenements are inevitable because the poor prefer filth to cleanliness and that good tenements will not pay. The City and Suburban Homes Company of New York has disposed of that insufficient excuse of the parsimonious landlord. This corporation approached the problem with the idea of combining business and philanthropy. It has built excellent tenements in the poorest parts of the city, and rents at prices as low as those of the miserable hovels about them. Its buildings represent an investment of two million dollars, on which it has just declared a dividend of 4 per cent. The landlord who pretends that good tenements will not pay is usually a man who wants fifteen per cent.

In East Oakland, Cal., is to be tried a plan for helping homeless girls which seems almost ideal in method as well as in purpose. A rich and generous-hearted woman has declared her intention of building ten cottages, each of which will accommodate ten girls and be in charge of a "house-mother." The cottages will stand in a beautiful park, with trees, lawns and flower gardens about them. The inmates of each cottage will constitute a separate family, the older girls helping to care for the younger ones. All will attend the public schools as other girls do, and will have their own outside diversions and friendships. Meantime they will also have in the home a thorough training in housework. As they reach a suitable age, each will receive special education in whatever trade or field of work she may select—teaching, dressmaking, millinery, typewriting, art or music—so that when she leaves the home each girl will be equipped to earn her own living. One of the most atractive characteristics of the undertaking is its lack of institutional restraint and the large individual freedom which it permits.

Seven of the largest sugar refineries in St. Mary Parish, Louisiana, have decided to discontinue the use of coal in the manufacture of sugar, and will hereafter use oil as fuel. These refineries use $150,000 worth of coal annually, and they get it largely from western Pennsylvania. It will cost $35,000 to adapt their furnaces to the use of oil, but it is estimated that less than $50,000 worth of fuel oil will do the work of $150,000 worth of coal. It is probable that next season all the sugar plantations in Louisiana will be using Texas oil instead of coal.

JUDGE IN TROUBLE

SENSATIONAL CHARGES REGARDING THE "MINNIE HEALY" CASE.

WOMAN INFUENCES DECISION

Mining Property in Montana Valued at $10,000,000 Was Awarded to F. A. Heinze on Payment of $100,000—Attorneys Charge That the Judge Was Influenced by a Woman in Heinze's Employ.

Butte, Mont., Aug. 4.—Sensational charges were made yesterday in the district court by the attorneys representing the Amalgamated Copper company against Judge E. W. Harney, who recently decided the noted Minnie Healy mine case in favor of F. A. Heinze by which the latter was given the ownership of the property, valued at $10,000,000, upon the payment by him of about $100,000.

It is charged that Harney was influenced in his decision by a woman, Mrs. Ada Brackett, past the middle of life and not attractive, who was in the employ of Heinze, it is alleged, for that purpose. The charge against Harney is contained in an application for an extension of time in which in suport of a motion for a new trial, it being alleged that the judge was unluckily influenced in his decision. An application to the judge personally for more time was refused yesterday, hence the formal application and affidavits were put on record. Judge Harney has a family. He admits, according to affidavits made by a number of persons, that his relations with Mrs. Brackett were friendly and that he knew she was employed by Heinze for the purpose of endeavoring to influence him in the decision, but that he would not be and was not influenced by her. Several letters that passed between the judge and Mrs. Brackett while the Minnie Healey case was on trial have been intercepted and copies of them are attached to the application.

The attorney and other witnesses make affidavits that during the trial Judge Harney was almost constantly intoxicated, that he frequently visited the room of Mrs. Brackett and that she took him out driving.

POTATO PATCH A GOLD MINE.

Minnesota Crop Expected to Yield $16,000,000.

St. Paul, Aug. 4.—It is estimated that with the average yield of 200 bushels to the acre, 20,000 car loads of potatoes will be shipped out of the State of Minnesota. Estimating 800 bushels to the car and figuring at the prevailing price of $1 a bushel, the total amount realized from potatoes in Minnesota will be $16,000,000. This will be in addition to the amount consumed at home. Minnesota vegetable farmers are this year the willing victims of circumstances. Favored by rains that have come at critical times, they have watched and tended a bountiful crop, for which the whole country waits with unclasped purses. This state has a corner on the market, not of its own making.

CORN KING DOWN

PHILLIPS, THE DARING CHICAGO BULL OPERATOR, FORCED TO SUSPEND.

GLARING MISTAKES IN THE BOOKS.

Causes a Profound Sensation on the Board of Trade—Expert Accountant Finds No Evidence of Defalcation — The Company Handled Too Much Business With Inadequate Facilities.

Chicago, Aug. 3.—George H. Phillips, the "corn king," about whom has clustered many of the commercial surprises of Chicago recently, furnished another sensation yesterday when he announced that he was forced for the time being to suspend the business of the George H. Phillips company. When the suspension became known, the sensation was profound and rippled out like waves over the board of trade at the opening hour.

"This does not mean we are quitting business," said Mr. Phillips.

If the unexpected does not happen the company will appear on the floor in the morning ready to Receive New Business

through its substitute, Adolph Kempner, a recognized trade trader. An arrangement was completed by George H. Phillips with Mr. Kempner to take charge of all new business coming in.

Rumors of defalcations through the speculations of employes or members of the company were dispelled by Robert Nelson, one of the expert accountants, who have been at work on the books for ten days. The recognized fact still in existence is that winners in the celebrated May corn deal are still 2 cents ahead of the firm, which means that the company out $250,000 to its customers, which really should be in the strong boxes of the company. It will be a week yet before the true condition of affairs of the company are known. Mr. Phillips' attorney, Mr. Goodwin, said in response to the question of the likelihood of an assignment or the possibility that a receiver would be asked for:

"The George H. Phillips company will open in the morning ready for business through Adolph Kempner. There will be no assignment, nor will a receiver be asked for by the members of the firm or customers."

The accountant, so far, has found no evidence whatever of criminal irregularities, but simply mistakes due to the immense amount of business handled with inadequate facilities for caring therefor.

GRAND LOTTERY ENDED.

Homestead Seekers All Now Know Their Luck.

El Reno, Okla., Aug. 3.—The drawing of winning numbers in the United States land lottery was concluded yesterday, 13,000 envelopes having been taken from the wheels, 6,500 for each land district. The crowd out on the platform on which the drawing took place was much smaller than on previous day. Beginning Aug. 6, 125 names in each district will be called daily for sixty days for the filing of homestead entries. The estimate is made by a government official that in each land district 1,000 of the 6,500 numbers will not be taken in the sixty days because of homesteaders who will be disqualified, or who will leave the country, believing their claims are worthless. This will leave only 5,500 persons who will make entry in their respective districts. Two thousand claims will be left for the wagon emigrants and others who have been in the country for months and failed to draw a number.

WHOLESALE JAIL DELIVERY.

Judge's Decision Releases Criminals Upon a Legal Technicality.

San Francisco, Aug. 3.—Advices from Honolulu say: The Constitution of the United States preceded the flag in Hawaii, according to a decision just rendered by Judge George D. Gear of the First circuit. He has already released on habeas corpus proceedings three prisoners sentenced for infamous crimes after the resolution of annexation passed congress and was signed by president McKinley, on the ground that they were not convicted by a unanimous verdict of twelve jurors. A wholesale jail delivery of murderers, burglars, thieves and other criminals is threatened under the decision, and Honolulu is greatly disturbed over the prospect.

VENEZUELA SPOILING FOR A FIGHT

May Declare War Because Insurgents Organise in Colombia.

Port of Spain, Trinidad, Aug. 2.—In consequence of the resignation of Senor Pulido it is feared that President Castro of Venezuela, as proposed by the cabinet, will declare war against Colombia notwithstanding public opinion is against such a move. It is feared that serious complications will follow the present situation. The cause of the trouble is that the Venezuelan revolutionary leaders organized their bands in Colombia and crossed over to Venezuela.

SNAP SHOTS FROM THE SKY.

Pictures Taken Fro ma Balloon at an Elevation of 700 Feet.

Chicago, Aug. 3. — George R. Lawrence, who several days ago made an attempt to photograph the big plant of Armour & Co. from a balloon, from which he fell, made a second attempt at the stock yards yesterday in which he was successful. He secured two negatives at a height of 700 feet.

King George Will Spend Five Million Dollars for Rifles.

Vienna, Aug. 3.—It is learned here that Greece is preparing to buy $5,000,000 worth of rifles.

Gridley Postoffice Burned.

Gridley, Iowa, Aug. 3.—The general store owned by F. C. Tuttle burned to the ground. Loss about $1,000. The building also contained the postoffice, and nothing was saved but stamps. The property was insured.

BROTHER-HOOD

That plenty but reproaches me
Which leaves my brother bare,
Not wholly glad my heart can be
While his is bowed with care.
If I go free, and sound and stout,
While his poor fetters clank,
Unsated still, I'll still cry out,
And plead with Whom I thank.

Almighty: Thou who Father be
Of him, of me, of all,
Draw us together, him and me,
That whichsoever fall,
The other's hand may fail him not—
The other's strength decline
No task of succor that his lot
May claim from son of Thine.

I would be fed, I would be clad,
I would be housed and dry,
But if so be my heart be sad—
What benefit have I?
Best he whose shoulders best endure
The load that brings relief,
And best shall be his joy secure
Who shares that joy with grief.

A Boomerang.

BY MARY MARSHALL PARKS.

(Copyright, 1901, Daily Story Pub. Co.)

When Jared Peters went west to help the country grow up, Rose Hawthorne thought her heart was broken. This was a logical sequence of the firm conviction that she could not live without Jared, which had led her to engage herself to him. In accordance with this fixed idea, she, for a day or two, refused food, and mournfully contemplated the prospect of an early demise.

But an immature mind cannot long dominate a young and healthy physique. On the third day she made several surreptitious visits to the pantry; on the fourth day she dined openly and heartily; and the day after she was startled by the discovery that she had not thought of Jared for several hours.

The Sunday following Jared's departure, she permitted Harold Winterset, the son of a wealthy manufacturer from a neighboring city, to accompany her home from church and linger for an hour at the gate; and she was again startled by the discovery that she enjoyed his society quite as much as Jared's.

Then she went upstairs and sat down in the moonlit window to consider. She had all the rules of love at her fingers' ends. She knew that "Absence makes the heart grow fonder," that true love never forgets or wavers for the fraction of a second. She was therefore forced to the conclusion that she did not love Jared; that she never had loved him; and the manufacturer's son was allowed to call regularly.

Jared's letters were intensely interesting. The little western town which he had taken under his wing was on a "boom." He had already doubled his small capital and was proceeding to double it again. Rose had all the rules of arithmetic also at her fingers' ends. She knew something of geometrical progression; and having become, in view of her large experience, skeptical in regard to the tender passion, she planned her future operations on a strictly commercial basis. After careful consideration, she decided that a budding Western capitalist in the hand was worth more than a wealthy manufacturer's son in the bush; so she did not break her engagement; and she did not mention Harold in her numerous and entirely satisfactory letters to Jared.

Although his love was false, Jared had one devoted admirer. From the day it was declared that the red-faced mite of humanity called Jared was the image of his grandfather, the old man had found his chief occupation in tracing his own characteristics in the growing boy.

"He's a Peters, every inch of him," gran'ther would shout when Jared's boyish achievements creditable or otherwise, came to his notice.

On the Third Day.

Gran'ther Peters had always liked Rose; and of all the girls in the country round, he would have chosen her for Jared. When, therefore, at the age of sixteen, Jared first walked home from church with her, gran'ther retired to the grape arbor and chuckled till he was black in the face. He did all he could to foster the budding romance; and when the engagement was formally announced, his rapture nearly caused a fit of apoplexy.

When a tattling neighbor brought the news of Rose's double-dealing, the old man flatly refused to believe it; but when with his own eyes, he saw Rose and Harold strolling by, arm in arm, in the dusk, he took to his bed. After two or three days of misery, mental and physical, he arose and spent an entire afternoon in inditing a letter which struck consternation to Jared's soul. It was vague in manner and matter, but he gathered from it some inkling of the truth; and immediately wrote—not to Rose, but to one of her girl friends. By return mail he received a spicy and perhaps not unexaggerated account of Rose's "carryings on."

"I Shall Stand by Jared."

Now Jared, absorbed in speculation as he was, had kept a little corner of his heart for Rose; and thought himself a miracle of constancy because he had not allowed another to share it. There are pretty girls in Kansas; and there was one in particular, with wondrous dimples, that he had noticed, just barely noticed, you know—so he made the customary remarks about female perfidy. He wrote Rose a biting letter—and tore it up; for a subtler revenge had occurred to him. He divined that Rose preferred him to Harold—if he succeeded in making money; and he plotted accordingly.

From this date his correspondence took on a dismal hue. The boom was declining; and there were vague hints of pitfalls that ensare the unwary and the inexperienced. Close on the heels of these dire forebodings, followed a rumor that Jared had come home unexpectedly, looking very seedy; and it was surmised, "dead broke."

Friends and neighbors, Rose and Harold among them, promptly gathered on the broad piazza to greet the home comer, and learn the truth of the matter. One glance at the young man's doleful face was enough. Disaster was written on it.

At first he seemed disinclined to talk; but numerous well put queries finally loosened his unwilling tongue.

Among the friends Jared made in the west was one who had been born under an unlucky star. He was intelligent and shrewd; but everything he touched turned to ashes. Where others reaped golden harvests, he reaped misfortune, and his affairs became seriously involved. He was too young to know that while there is life there is hope; and one night, Jared, who roomed with him, came home to find his friend stretched on the floor with a bullet through his head, and the empty revolver in his own stiffening right hand.

With the callousness of youth, Jared adapted this young fellow's story to his own uses. Up to the culminating tragedy, he told it as his own, and told it well. He was a clever actor, and fully realized the dramatic possibilities of the situation.

The stage setting was perfect. A rising thunder storm had dyed the summer twilight an inky black; and continual flashes of lightning illuminated Jared's handsome, melancholy face and sombre eyes. He sat opposite his false sweetheart and Harold; and behind him, the old man, white-faced but firm-lipped, glared over his boy's head like a wounded lion.

As Jared's sad, mellow voice died away with a little break—he felt a pang of genuine emotion as he remembered poor Wiley's face with the bullet hole in the forehead—Rose's heart melted. All that was sweet and womanly and good in her untutored soul rose to the surface. She crossed the piazza, and laying her hand on Jared's shoulder, resolutely faced her frowning parents and the chagrined Harold.

"I shall stand by Jared," she said, in ringing tones.

Jared started to his feet in dismay. This climax was precisely the opposite of the one he had courted and expected. The face of the dimpled Kansas girl flitted across his memory, and then disappeared forever. The boomerang he had launched buried itself in his own heart. The two young things who had been playing with the eternal verities of love and death looked into each other's eyes, and, by the white light of the approaching storm, saw there that which made them afraid and ashamed of what they had been doing—saw the dawn of an everlasting affection—the affection that mocks dishster, and calmly ignores doubters and detractors, as the placid moon ignores the yellow dog that bays it.

Gran'ther's face was convulsed with delight. Tears of joy meandered unheeded down his wrinkled cheeks, as, glaring at the discomfited Harold, he raised his staff and brought it down with a force that split it in twain.

"She's a Peters, every inch of her," he roared. "Leastways, she soon will be."

Rose was somewhat shocked when she learned that Jared's woes were all assumed; and that he had prudently escaped from the collapsing boom with the neat little nest egg of one hundred thousand dollars; but she became reconciled to the situation in time.

"STRICTLY FRESH EGGS."

You Cannot Make Hens Lay When They Don't Want To.

With all that men of science have done to procure for our tables luxuries without regard to season, so that almost we say "there is no season," no one of them has yet succeeded in wheedling a hen into laying her best and biggest eggs at any other season of the year than that at which the primal hen so distinguished herself. There have been many experiments of all kinds tried with regard to hatching chickens and they have all been more or less successful, till the term "spring chicken" has become a misnomer. Or rather there are others beside spring chickens. We have winter chickens, thanks to incubators and brooders and all sorts of appliances, and fall chickens and summer chickens, and chickens in between seasons, which is one of the compensations scattered all through life if we look for them. But the hen plods on in that tiresome unchanging way and looks untouched by all the means that man has invented for hatching her eggs for her, though no one knows just what she thinks. Probably her line of thought takes the stand that you may lead a hen to any kind of artificially warmed and lighter nest, but you cannot make her lay; and cold storage has done much to make us indifferent to the stubborn attitude of the hen. The farmer who doesn't know that he may by the care he takes of his hens influence the manner and kind of eggs they lay for him does not deserve to succeed. Hens like clean, sunny houses, and they like good wholesome food, and in variety. They want a certain amount of corn and meal and they dearly love a flavor of meat in their food. Also they like something in the nature of oyster shells that the shells of the eggs may be up to standard quality. Housekeepers who receive day after day from their grocer eggs of not only a uniform size and of even tinting—either all white or with a tinge of brown—take it as a matter of course, and think perhaps that it is just so in every case. But there are sorters whose business it is to put into cases eggs that "match" in color and size. And they do say that in Boston the brownish eggs have the first call, while in New York the demand is for purest white. It is this demand for uniformity in size and color that induces a poultry farmer to have his hens all of one breed.—Epicure.

Cottage Heirlooms in England.

It is still quite a common experience to find fine and even valuable specimens of old English furniture, chiefly made of oak, in the cottages of the village folk. These pieces of furniture have been handed down from generation to generation of rural folk such as carters, keepers, woodmen and shepherds. How did the family originally come by them? The explanation is this in many cases: Generations ago, when the furniture, which is once again prized greatly, began to go out of fashion and to be superseded by stuff which we view with contempt nowadays, it was sold and farmers bought much of it. But by and by, the farmer being prosperous, and desiring to be in the fashion, too, like his landlord, bought in its place more modern chairs and tables, etc. Then the village folk bought for a song the despised oak chairs, coffers, etc., and now, once again, the old furniture has come into favor and is finding its way back from the cottage to the hall.—London Express.

Queen of Holland's Crown.

The crown which adorns the brow of Queen Wilhelmina is said to have cost £1,500. In 1829 it was stolen by burglars, and for nearly two years remained in their possession, says Home Notes. Some of the stones were eventually discovered in America, and the remainder were recovered from Belgium.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm — A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Evolution of the Silo.

Assistant Agrostologist Williams of the Agricultural Department writes: At first silos were either square or rectangular, but more or less difficulty was experienced from the spoiling of the silage at the corners, and it was also difficult to make the high wooden silo strong enough to resist the lateral pressure of the mass of silage. This led to the building of the circular silo, which form is generally preferred at the present time. There are no corners in such a silo, and a much stronger structure can be made with less building material than in the square or rectangular type. Moreover, the capacity of the round silo is greater in proportion to the wall space. It is the present practice, when building a square or rectangular silo, to board up or otherwise cut off the corners, thus lessening the danger of loss of silage. Metal linings for the inside of wooden silos have been tried, but with poor success, usually proving less durable than wood. Recently steel siding has been used in place of wood for the outer part of the wall of the silo, and it is said to compare favorably with lumber as to cost.

The first silos built in the United States were "pit solos," and these are still sometimes made, but, aside from their cheapness, they have no advantage of consequence over those built on top of the ground. A serious objection to them lies in the difficulty in feeding the silage from them. On sidehill situations they can sometimes be used advantageously. It is often possible to build the silo partly below and partly above ground, materially lessening the cost, but retaining the advantages of the above-ground silo.

The desirability of silage as a food for farm animals during the winter, and also in times of drouth, has led to many attempts to construct cheap silos, especially in sections where building materials are high. One of the most satisfactory of these cheap structures is known as the "stave silo." It is built much as a round tank, but is without top or bottom other than the soil, and is composed of two-inch lumber of varying width held together by hoops of half-inch iron, with suitable blocks for tightening. When filled, a temporary roof may be placed on the silo, or straw or grass may be spread over the silage.

Shipping Poultry.

There are a few general points in regard to shipping live poultry that are applicable to all markets: Shippers should see that the coops are in good condition before using, so that they are not liable to come apart in transit, as they are roughly handled sometimes. The coops should also be high enough to stand up in. Low coops should not be used, as it is not only cruel, but a great deal of poultry is lost every year by suffocation. Coops should not be overcrowded. In shipping hens and roosters they should be kept separate. Nothing depreciates the value of a fine crop of hens as much as to have a number of old cocks among them. Shippers often wonder why they do not get the highest market price for their stock; in most cases this is the reason. Good stock always commands a quick sale at best prices. Poultry should be shipped so as to arrive on the market from Tuesday to Friday. Receipts generally increase toward the end of the week, and there is enough carried-over stock on hand Saturday to supply the demand. Merchants, rather than carry stock over Sunday, will sell at a sacrifice, as the stock, when in coops, loses considerable in weight and shrinkage, and does not appear fresh and bright. Besides, Monday is usually a poor day to sell poultry.—Farm Journal.

Poultry Briefs.

At the Rhode Island Experiment Station fowls were fed daily with a food containing the germs of diphtheria. After six weeks of this kind of feeding the hens were killed and found to be free from diphtheria. Later four hens were inoculated subcutaneously with virulent cultures of diphtheria bacillus, but no case of diphtheria was developed in the hens. This of course is only one series of tests, but it seems to bear out the other investigations along this same line to the effect that diphtheria as we know it in humans is not a disease that can be developed in fowls. A good many people have held to the opinion that roup in fowls is only a form of diphtheria such as is common to the human family. Proof of this seems to be entirely wanting.

The man that wants to make money selling fowls for breeders will find that uniformity counts for much. Especially is this so if a man wants to purchase a number of breeders. Somehow or other the human mind gravitates very decidedly toward order and regularity. This is why a man will sometimes pay a fancy price to get a "match" for a driving horse. Matched teams sell better than teams that are not matched. The same underlying principle manifests itself in the poultry world, and it pays to take advantage of it. The man that has a flock consisting of all kinds of types will find it very hard to attract customers and to make sales.

There is no place where fowls can be more profitably raised than on the farm. The man that makes a business of fowl raising may indeed succeed better than the farmer, but he does so often against great odds. The poultry business fits in admirably with the farm crops. The fowls can be used for gleaners, and the amount of food thus saved is a very large item and the utilization of it means much money.. The farm too gives range for insect hunting of which the profesional poultryman cannot avail himself.

The stopping of flying hens is the subject of an editorial paragraph in an exchange. The advice is given to clip one wing, and if that does not prevent flying over to run a single wire six inches above the top of the fence. That is recommended as a sure preventive. About that many things might be said. The success or non-success of any scheme depends a good deal on circumstances. We have seen hens fly over a fence clearing it by a yard. In that case what would be the use of a wire six inches above the top. Generally if yards are large and the fence is made of wire with no top rail, the birds will stay in, especially if their wings are clipped. But we have seen hens that would never think of flying over a four-foot wire fence when the run was large do so when the run was restricted to a few feet in each direction. Of course this applies to the light bodied hens like the Leghorns.

Meat Inspection in Germany.

Henry W. Diederich, United States consul at Bremen, makes the following report:

The new meat inspection law, which was passed about a year ago by the German government, which absolutely prohibits the importation of American corned beef, sausages, etc., has had a year's trial, but has made no friends. In a recent convention of physicians Dr. Karl Frankel, professor of hygiene in the University of Halle, an authority on all questions bearing on public health, gave utterance to very severe criticisms of the new law. He even went so far as to say that the law was nothing more than a cloak faded and worn, hung over the agrarian idol. He asserted that he spoke in the interests of national hygiene, and showed that while the government had declared that the passage of the law was required in the interest of public health, nothing suffered more from the passage of said law than did the public health of the nation, for the prevailing high prices of meat necessarily lessoned its consumption, while the health of the nation demanded an increase.

That the price of meat has risen materially in Germany since the passage of the law is known to everybody who uses meat. I have before me a report of one of the largest factories of textiles in Silesia. This actory employs from 1,500 to 1,600 men. Like many other industrial establishments it has a store of its own, where the workingmen may get all their groceries and other food supplies at almost cost price. Formerly the leading kind of meat supplied to the people was American corned beef, and every family figured on using about a pound of it a day, the cost being 14 cents per pound. Now there is no more American corned beef to be had, and fresh meat of home production has taken its place. The manager of the factory has investigated the increase of expense to the people for meat since the passage of the new law, and he has come to the conclusion that every consumer at his factory must pay 20 per cent more than he formerly did, as every buyer of fresh meat must take a certain proportion of meat and fat and bone, thereby much lessening the amount of solid meat. According to his estimate, 3 cents has been added to each pound of meat sold at the factory. To men with scant earnings, an increase of over 21 cents in their weekly household expenses for meat alone is no small item.

To utilize all kinds of plant food at one's disposal is an important item in farm economy.

Peafowls.

Peafowls are not only ornamental but excellent for the table. They are slow in reaching maturity, and the hen seldom lays before she is two years old. The chicks, however, grow very rapidly at first, but as they begin to feather almost at the start of life they require frequent feeding or they will perish. They soon begin to fly, and roost on the highest positions they can find. The hen lays from ten to sixteen eggs, according to age and treatment. The young chicks should be fed the same as young turkeys, but meat, finely chopped, should be given three times a week after the first week. The male is a quarrelsome bird in the barnyard, and often makes short work of young chicks. They are more ornamental than profitable, though the tail feathers may be pulled for sale as soon as the moulting season begins.—Mirror and Farmer.

Cows vary from year to year in physical tone. At some time in their time they will consume more food and do more work than they have done at any other time. The usefulness of a cow cannot be measured by any one year's performance. Every living thing reaches its meridian of life but once, and if at that time all conditions are favorable and every opportunity is offered, extraordinary results may be obtained.

The chief factors that determine the adaptability of a cow for dairy work appear to be her feeding capacity, the proportion of her food needed for body maintenance and the disposition made of the surplus of nutrients available for production of milk or flesh.

When it is so well known that the unexpected always happens, there seems to be no reason why people should not be prepared for it.—Indianapolis News.

Foundation of Colt Training.

It is important to know that the pivotal point of action of the colt is the center of his body, in opposite directions, writes Dr. J. C. Curryer in The Farmer. In other words, whatever happens at the front end of the colt impels him backwards, and that at the rear induces forward movements. For when the rope at his flank is suddenly brought into action (when he thought he would pull his head out of the halter) the movement is so promptly reversed that he seems to wonder what in the world had happened at the other end. As an illustration of this law, it is a well-known fact, that if a horse gets his front foot over a bar or other object (if not more than six inches above the ground) and feels the pressure on the back part of his leg, he will go backwards and pull his foot off or get loose; when he could by a forward movement easily step over the object. It is also well known that if a horse attempts to go through a narrow door, or other passage, which presses him on both sides, after getting beyond the center of his body, he cannot be induced to back out, but goes on through if it breaks his hips down. To further and easily demonstrate this law of the actions of the horse, we have only to take up one of his front feet and carry it forward to the straining point and he is seen to go backwards for relief, then carry the same foot backwards beyond the center of his body and he as naturally goes forwards for his liberty. Operations with the hind feet produce the same actions in relation to the center of his body.

Now what does this all mean to the educator and trainer of colts for useful mature horses? Does it not indicate to the handler during colthood that he, as well as the colt, should understand all the duties to be performed and just how to execute the movement? Does it not mean that the educator of the colt for his (the colt's) future usefulness, should not only always make the lessons in accordance with good common sense, but "horse sense" as well? These two fundamental senses should always be in harmony. But where they work in opposition difficulties and mischief without end are almost sure to follow, and usually the good character of the colt is injured. On account of being a mute he cannot plead his own cause. When we stop and consider that the horse never performs even the most trivial duty for us that he has not been taught to do, and the great variety of services he willingly and cheerfully executes for us when he has been instructed how to do them; then is it not a plain and important proposition (as his life, like that of man, is one of duties to be performed) that he should have a finished education, a training commensurate with the successful execution of each requirement?

Inaccurate Test Bottles.

The test and its alleged inaccuracy or unfairness is the basis of nine-tenths of the friction that arises between the operator and the patrons, and yet, so far as known, there has been no widespread attempt on the part of creamery operators to make the patrons understand that they were getting a fair deal in the testing of their milk. Instead of using the certified test bottles and pipettes sent out from the dairy commissioner's office in the manner specified by the law, the most of the operators have kept them laid away with care, as a sort of mysterious something too little understood to be used or to see the light of day, except to overawe some unsatisfied patron. It is believed that but a small number of the creameries of the state could go into any court and establish "The use of reliable tests and the results therefrom" as they may be required to do in any action arising between patrons and the creamery management. It does not follow that a great number are using inaccurate tests, but it is true that few have complied with the law to such an extent that they could prove the accuracy of the apparatus and the results from the use of it.

The greatest humbug in the testing matter is the "guaranteed" bottles sold on the market. Numerous creameries have refused to comply with the plain provisions of the law for the reason that they buy only "guaranteed" bottles. Well, everybody buys guaranteed bottles, for none other are on the market; but the guarante is of mighty little comfort to the farmer whose milk is tested in a bottle that is inaccurate. The makers of test bottles only guarantee approximate accuracy at the best, and they will replace all bottles not accurately calibrated; but if the creamery operator does not investigate for himself he will never know the good bottles from the bad ones, and his patrons are the losers. This office has never yet succeeded in getting a lot of bottles that were all perfectly calibrated. From 3 to 15 per cent of the bottles bought by this office are found to be more or less inaccurate, some of them extremely so.—Iowa State Dairy Commissioner's Report.

Lotion for Oily and Shiny Skin.

Mix one quart of camphor water (not spirits of camphor), one ounce of pure glycerine and one-half ounce of powdered borax. Bathe the face with this lotion several times a day and persist in the treatment until the skin is in a satisfactory condition. This is excellent for red and shiny noses.

Florists are showing a black-leaved heliotrope, with perfectly black stems and foliage of a beautiful dark bronzy green and flowers of bluish purple.

TO STAND OR FALL

FATE OF UNIONISM TO BE DECIDED BY THE GREAT BATTLE NOW ON.

IT WILL BE A FIGHT TO A FINISH

All Union Men in the Employ of the United States Steel Corporation Will Be Asked to Join the Strike—Every Peaceable Means Will Be Employed to Win a Victory—No More Conferences.

Pittsburg, Aug. 6.—"Within a week every union man and every union man at heart in the employ of the United States Steel corporation will be asked to join in the strike now being waged by the Amalgamated association. We must settle whether unionism is to stand or fall. There will be no more conferences with the United Steel corporation unless the meeting is asked for by the officials of that corporation. The Amalgamated association will not request a peace meeting."

This and several other significant statements were made last night by President Shaffer, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tinworkers, upon his return from the fruitless conference with J. Pierpont Morgan and others in New York.

It is now a fight to a finish between the great billion-dollar steel trust and organized labor. Mr. Shaffer says that he is ready to employ every peaceable means within the power of man to win a victory. No quarter is to be given and none will be requested. The entire management of the battle has been placed in the hands of President Shaffer. He has absolute power to call out every man who is connected with the organization and he intends to do it. He is satisfied with the progress of the fight to date. He finds that none of his battle lines have been broken. Promise is made by Mr. Shaffer that the trust will find the Amalgamated association is strong in many of its mills.

Mr. Shaffer, Secretary Williams, B. I. Davis, M. F. Tighe and John Chappelle of Wellsville, came from New York last evening. The president and advisers did not appear to be the least cast down.

IT COST HIM HIS LIFE.

Two Men Try to Reach the Surface by Unusual Means.

Scranton, Pa., Aug. 6. — Men were lowering steam pipes into the Oxford mine of the Lackawanna company by means of the air shaft. At the bottom was a force of men to care for the pipes. These included James McLaughlin and Anthony McNulty. At noon, instead of going out by means of the cage at the main shaft, McLaughlin and McNulty proceeded to execute a deed of daring by ascending by means of the chain by which the steam pipes were lowered. They attached a plank to the chain and astride of it began their ascent, unheeding the warnings of their companions.

The brother of McLaughlin and a companion remained at the bottom, positive that one or both of the reckless fellows would be killed. In a few minutes a body came crashing down the shaft and dropped almost at their feet. Bending over, McLaughlin looked into the face of his brother. The man was already dead. Half way up the air shaft McLaughlin's head struck a platform and he fell. McNulty saved himself by holding on to the chain. When he reached the top he was so dazed and terrified that it was fifteen minutes before he could be induced to release his grip on the chain.

TENNESSEEANS WALK.

No Effort Is Made to Run Street Cars in Knoxville.

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 6.—The Knoxville Traction company made no effort to run cars to-day, believing that trouble might result with thousands of men idle for the day. Traffic, however, will be resumed to-morrow. There is a faint hope that the strike may be settled tomorrow. A proposition has been secured from General Manager Howell of the traction company, upon which the men will vote at 10 o'clock. The proposition is that, while the union will not be recognized, the men will be taken back as vacancies occur, married men to be given the preference.

GOLD MAGNET.

An Invention of a Resident of San Benito County, Cal.

Salinas, Cal., Aug. 6.—F. M. Mecartea of San Juan, San Benito county, claims to have invented a method of making a magnet which will attract gold and silver. During the week he gave an exhibition. ITALY ACTS UGLY

CHINESE UNEASY REGARDING THE MOVEMENTS OF ITALIAN WARSHIPS.

READY TO RESIST INVASION

If Italy Presses Her Claim in Chekiang Province to the Extent of a Hostile Demonstration the Consequences Would Be Disastrous to the General Peace—British Watching the French.

Shanghai, Aug. 6.—The movements of the Italian warships in San Mun bay, Province of Chekiang, continue to afford grounds for speculation regarding their intentions. The provincial Chinese authorities have made extensive preparations to oppose any aggressive move by Italy, and they have raised 800,000 taels for this purpose.

If Italy presses her claim to the extent of a hostile demonstration the consequences would be disastrous to the general peace, and would give rise to another movement like that of the boxers. Peace is especially important at the present time, when the Province of Chekiang is suffering from floods such as have not occurred in a hundred years. It is contended here that a small country like Italy should not be allowed by her selfish action to endanger all foreign interests.

Watching the French.

Hongkong, Aug. 6.—The British warship Glory, which sailed hence a few days ago for Amoy, has returned. She reports that everything is quiet at Amoy. One of her officers stated in an interview that the presence of the French flagship at Amoy and the fact that the French cable lands there induced the British admiral to order three vessels to proceed to that port. As the cruiser Eclipse, one of the three, neared Amoy, she passed the French vessel leaving. The Eclipse, together with the cruiser Daphne, is still at Amoy.

Adjt. Gen. Corbin, who has returned to Manila after an eleven days' tour of the islands, including a visit to the sultan of Jolo, with whom he exchanged presents, says:

Three hundred and forty-five cabin and 268 steerage passengers came over on the Celtic. It was not intended that the big liner should make any marvelous time on this trip. Her average speed was 14.95 knots, although she is able to log 16 1-2 knots an hour.

OIL KILLS MOSQUITOES.

Successful Test Is Made at Camp Jackson, New Orleans.

New Orleans, Aug. 6.—The only place in New Orleans free from mosquitoes is the United States barracks, Camp Jackson. This is in the lower end of the city, in one of the worst mosquito districts of Louisiana, where the mosquitoes are so large, so fierce and so numerous that very few soldiers were kept there during the summer. Capt. John T. Martin, who is in command, began the oil treatment long before the war department issued the order giving officers authority to use crude petroleum in the effort to rid the various posts of mosquitoes, and there is not a mosquito at the barracks. Capt. Martin declares that the oil will not only prevent the hatching of mosquito eggs, but kill the grown mosquitoes.

"I have corralled several thousand mosquitoes," he said, "and tried the oil on them, and it invariably killed them. Just as soon as they get the fumes they go off some place and die, and they die very quickly."

ANOTHER NEGRO LYNCHED.

Mob Still Pursuing Suspects of the Taliferro Murder.

New Orleans, Aug. 6. — The Picayune's Carrollton, Miss., special says: Your correspondent has just learned that the armed mob which has been in the Taliferro neighborhood for two days looking for Sallie Layton and others, some time during Saturday night killed Will Price, the negro who worked for Mr. Taliferro and lived within 200 yards of his residence. He was found dead in the road on Mr. Duke's place yesterday morning some distance from any trees or anything to which to hang any one, with a rope around his neck and mutilated by gunshots. It is understood that the mob has quit work now and gone to their homes. No arrests have been made of the parties who engaged in the lynching.

Jones, with a warrant charging Lowery with selling whisky without a license, went to serve it. Lowery ran, firing at Jones, the bullet taking effect in the lung. Jones followed and caught him as he struck a lamp post. In the scuffle Lowery fired again, the bullet going through Jones' heart. Four bloodhounds and over a thousand people are on the negro's trail. One of the bloodhounds was shot by the fleeing negro. It is quite likely that if the negro is caught he will never reach jail.

Deutsch of the Aero club for a dirigible balloon. He started from the grounds of the Aero club, the Parc d'Aero station at St. Cloud, and headed for the Eifel tower. When over Longchamp the guide rope caught in a tree. M. HAD FATALLY WOUNDED A MAN

Was Engaged to Marry His Victim's Daughter, but the Old Man Objected to Him—When the Sheriff Attempted to Arrest the Would-be Murderer He Fled and Was Pursued by a Posse and Killed.

Aitkin, Minn., Aug. 2. — Yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock Sheriff Newstrom was notified that Tony Jordon had shot and probably fatally wounded a man named Clasen at McGregor, twenty miles east of here. The sheriff proceeded immediately by a passing freight to the scene of the shooting to arrest Jordon. Jordon was at McGregor when the sheriff arrived, but when it was attempted to place him under arrest he fled eastward and the sheriff and a posse went after him. Jordon refused to halt when commanded by the sheriff and five shots were fired to scare him. Deputy Hudson then shot at the fleeing man and killed him instantly.

Jordon was in Aitkin yesterday afternoon with the wife of Clasen, who is seeking a divorce from her husband, and this was the cause of the trouble. Jordon was engaged to marry a daughter of the Clasen's but the old gentleman objected to him.

HESSIAN FLY ATTACKS CROPS.

Prof. Forbes Fears Considerable Damage.

St. Paul, Aug. 2.—The Hessian fly is the next wheat pest that Minnesota farmers will have to unite in combatting, according to a bulletin which will be issued in a few days by Prof. E. B. Forbes, acting state entomologist. The fly caused considerable injury to crops in the state in 1895 and in 1899, but the operations then were small compared with the present possibilities if the pest is not combatted with vigor. In Clitheral, Otter Tail county, one of the millers estimates the loss in some fields at about 50 per cent of the crop. The report of damages over the state from this pest is very meager, however, owing to the ignorance of farmers concerning the fly.

Milwaukee, Aug. 2.—Mrs. M. H. Holden of this city, president of the Y. C. T. U., yesterday received a letter from J. C. Murphy, Gov. La Follette's secretary, saying that the governor has no intention of sanctioning the establishment of a canteen at Camp Douglass while regiments of the state militia are encamped there. There was some talk a few weeks ago that led the women to think that the militiamen were to be allowed to buy beer in camp instead of at grog shops nearby, and they held several meetings and passed resolutions requesting the governor to refuse his indorsement of any such plan.

FEUD ENDS IN SHOOTING.

Methodist Fires at a Fellow Church Member Over Daughter.

Rice Lake, Wis., Aug. 2.—H. O. Sapp shot and mortally wounded W. H. Coffin yesterday afternoon. It was the result of a feud of long existence. The trouble originated over Coffin's daughter, who had until lately been employed as a clerk in Sapp's store. Sapp was walking up Main street, which was crowded with people at the time, and met Coffin. A few words ensued, when Sapp pulled a revolver and shot at Coffin four times, hitting him twice in the groin. Both are prominent members in the Methodist church. Excitement runs high. The sympathy is all with Coffin.

The farmer responded by knocking the man down and out of the wagon. As soon as the robber could regain his feet he drew a revolver and emptied it at Moritz, three of the shots taking effect.

MINNESOTA WHEAT CROP.

Northern Pacific Statement Refutes Damage Reports.

St. Paul, Aug. 4.—The predictions of railroad officials that all grains will give a fair average yield this year is confirmed by a Northern Pacific crop report just issued by Vice President Hannaford. Harvesting is in progress everywhere, and there is no indication that the hot weather has affected the average crop. Wheat is being threshed at Anoka, and along the Minnesota division the crop promises to meet expectations. Considerable grain on the St. Paul-Duluth division has been cut, and threshing will begin early next week. Rains have benefited the potato crop and the yield will be very large.

REDS HAVE SMALLPOX.

Fifty Flathead Indians in Montana Are Quarantined.

Washington, Aug. 4. — The interior department was notified yesterday that there is fifty cases of smallpox among Indians who are under quarantine at the Flathead agency in Montana. Steps have been taken to prevent its spread and stamp out the present epidemic. Officials are somewhat surprised at the extent of the disease at this season, as smallpox heretofore has been regarded as largely a winter disease. It exists also among the Turtle Mountain Indians and at some of the Sioux agencies, particularly in the Dakotas, but outside of Flathead the attack is diminishing.

Little More Than Half a Crop.

Fargo, N. D., Aug. 4.—There is no bumper wheat crop in North Dakota this year. This is especially true of the Red river valley, and more particularly of the southern half of the valley. Up to two weeks ago the conditions were so nearly perfect that they were regarded as ideal. Then came the three terribly hot days. The heat caught the wheat in the doughy stage, and the grains were shriveled up instead of forming plump and full. Harvest is well under way now, and there is general disappointment along the river.

Fisherman in Hard Luck.

Winona, Minn., Aug. 4.—In the municipal court here yesterday morning John Ludwick of Minnieska, who was arrested on Thursday by Deputy Game Warden Blagie for fishing with a seine, entered a plea of guilty. CHINESE GIVE IN DEMANDS OF THE MINISTERS OF THE POWERS HAVE BEEN FULLY ACCEDED TO.

ROCKHILL'S PLAN GOES THROUGH

Emperor Issues an Edict Which Meets All of the Demands of the Powers—Foreign Office Given Precedence Over Other Boards—Honors to Minister Which Have Not Been Previously Accorded.

Pekin, Aug. 1.—The edict of the emperor providing for the reorganization of the Chinese foreign office has been received here. Its tone and substance satisfy the ministers of the powers. The edict coincides with their demands on the subject, formulated by the United States special commissioner, Mr. Rockhill, as a condition of peace.

The edict declares that foreign affairs will hereafter be the most important business of the government, gives the foreign office precedence over the six old boards that previously outranked it and provides for the reception of the ministers in the hall in which heretofore only near relatives of the emperor have entered. It also provides for the entertainment of the ministers by the emperor at occasional banquets.

There are only twenty-five men of a legation guard left of all the German troops who were formerly here. The last of the Germans left yesterday. The British have not yet left.

One of the ministers inquired of Sir Robert Hart, imperial commissioner of maritime customs, if there was any possibility of China paying a semi-annual installment on the indemnity of 450,000,000 taels next January. Sir Robert thinks it will be impossible to make the necessary changes and secure revenue sufficient to cover the first payment in less than a period of three years. The powers will oppose any such delay.

ATTEMPTED TRAIN WRECKING.

Train Is Stopped in Time to Prevent a Terrible Disaster.

Walkerton, Ind., Aug. 1.—An unsuccessful attempt was made to wreck the Baltimore & Ohio express train from Chicago to Baltimore. Two masked men were discovered obstructing the track near Teegarden, three and one-half miles east of here, by Thomas Kronk, a track watchman. Before he had time to realize what was being done one of the men knocked him down the embankment. Kronk soon recovered and after a hard struggle with the desperadoes, he got away from them, hurried back toward Walkerton and signalled the rapidly approaching train in time to save it. The men wound a large wire cable around the rail and through a knot they put large iron fishplates. It is reported that a man suspected of being one of the desperadoes has been captured.

Carter, late captain of the corps of engineers, now serving a sentence at Leavenworth, Kan., while he was supervising government work in the harbor at Savannah, Ga., was taken yesterday when Marion Erwin of Georgia, special assistant attorney general of the United States, filed bills in the United States court of the southern district of New York and the district of New Jersey, against O. M. Carter and Lorenzo D. Carter, his uncle. Under these bills a temporary receiver was appointed for properties in New York and New Jersey. I. Stanton Carter, brother of O. M. Carter, is also made a party to the bill.

OFF FOR FROZEN NORTH.

Baldwin-Ziegler Expedition Starts for the North.

London, Aug. 1.—A dispatch to the Chronicle from Vardoe says that the Arctic exploring ship America, with Evelyn Baldwin, leader of the Baldwin-Zeigler expedition, on board, sailed thence last evening. Everything was looking first-class. There are 426 dogs and sixteen ponies aboard. The vessel's course was shaped for Cape Flora, where Mr. Baldwin hopes to join the Frithjof and Belgica, the other two vessels of the expedition which left a week ago. Mr. Baldwin intends to push as far north as possible and establish winter quarters. He will then act according to circumstances. Almost his last words to the correspondent were that he was sure his plan was the right one, and that if he does not succeed it will not be for want of pushing.

CHICAGO MAY GO HUNGRY.

Conditions Which May Develop Into a Real Panic.

Chicago, Aug. 1. — Boarding house proprietors are raising the price of meal tickets and restauranters are lessening the quantity of food given to patrons. These facts became prominent yesterday and emphasized the grave conditions which are prevailing in Chicago and causing householders to wonder if the food situation, regarded at first as almost a joke and now as a scare, may finally take on the characteristics of a full-fledged panic. Vegetables, fruits and almost all food products are higher than ever before in the city. Not only are prices high, but even the quality of produce has been decidedly below par.

HOMESEEKERS IN A WRECK.

One Man Killed and Twenty-Four Seriously Injured.

Kremlin, Okla., Aug. 1.—The northbound Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific passenger train which left El Reno at 7 o'clock yesterday morning, three hours late, crowded with departing homeseekers, was wrecked yesterday afternoon while going at full speed two miles south of here. C. L. McClain of Enid, Okla., was killed and twenty-four other passengers were cut and bruised. It is believed none were fatally hurt. A broken rail in a culvert washed out by heavy rains threw the baggage car from the track. This car, the smoker and one passenger car was overturned, resting on their sides. Three passenger cars and the Pullman also left the track but did not overturn. The engine and mail car remained on the track. Engineer Kelley shut off the air on the train as he saw the culvert's condition, and thus saved a greater disaster. The track was torn up for 300 feet. Passengers in the overturned cars were lifted out of the upper windows. C. L. McClain, who was killed, was sitting on the car step of the smoker at the time of the accident. He was buried under a car truck and the body was not taken out for two hours. A stock train had passed the point just ahead of the passenger and a farmer boy saw the broken rail and washout. He tried to warn the passenger engineer but was too late.

ALL-DAY FIGHT WITH BOERS.

Quite an Engagement Occurs Near Nqueta.

London, Aug. 1. — Lord Kitchener telegraphs the war office that between July 22 and 29 24 Boers were killed, 25 wounded, 223 taken prisoners and 80 surrendered. The British also captured 184 rifles, 10,850 rounds of small ammunition, 205 wagons and 2,700 horses. Details received here of what at first seemed an ordinary skirmish between a British column and a Boer commando near Nqueta July 23, shows that a hard all-day fight occurred in which the British narrowly escaped the loss of a gun. Four hundred Boers repeatedly rushed the British position, killing Maj. Edwards and Gunner Carpenter. Five British were killed. The war office has received the following dispatch from Lord Kitchener:

"Gen. F. W. Kitchener, after a long chase of Ben Viljeon's commando, caught up with it. A sharp fight ensued. We captured a pompom and 22 wagons and took 32 prisoners. The British had five wounded."

MURDERED AND ROBBED.

Dead Bodies of Two Men Found on a Country Road.

Roanoke, Va., Aug. 1. — The dead bodies of John Tolley and Charles Berry, from Tennessee, were found Monday in the county road between Pocahontas, Va., and Coopers, W. Va. When Tolley and Berry had gotten a short distance across the state line into West Virginia they were fired upon from behind. Mary Graham and Bob Niddiffer were arrested and lodged in jail at Bluefield. The coroner's inquest developed facts which implicated Pete Spangler, Geo. Nelson, George Graham and Jack Martin, all four of whom were arrested and placed in jail.

There were 1,750 numbers drawn out of the great containers yesterday from each district, making a total drawn of 4,500.

CREDITS WITHDRAWN.

Low Rate of Discount in Germany Is the Cause.

Cologne, Aug. 1.—The Gazette states that heavy withdrawals from Germany of foreign credits have been effected recently, chiefly by French and German banking firms. It is believed that this is the cause of the present rate of private discount which, even for first-class paper, is so low that it does not pay parties concerned to allow credits to remain standing in Germany.

ROBBERS FOOLED

UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPT AT TRAIN ROBBING BY FIVE MASKED MEN.

THEY BLOW UP THE WRONG CAR

Mistake a Mail Car for an Express Car and Wreck It With Dynamite—Robbers Then Disappear in the Darkness Without Attempting to Rectify Their Mistake—Trainmen Shot at by Robbers.

Chicago, Aug. 2. — The Baltimore & Ohio passenger train from the east which was due to arrive in the Grand Central depot, Chicago, at 9 o'clock last night, was held up by five masked men at 8 o'clock last night between Edgemore and Grand Calumet Heights, Ind., thirty-one miles out from Chicago. One of the mail cars which contained no money was dynamited and wrecked. The attempt at robbery was made after the two mail cars had been detached from the train and run a quarter of a mile ahead. The failure of the robbers to make a rich haul was due to the fact that the express car, which contained the train's treasure, was in an unusual place. It was the third car in the train. After wrecking the mail car and obtaining no booty the robbers disappeared in the darkness without attempting to rectify their mistake. The only loot that they carried away with them as a result of their adventure was the gold watch of the engineer.

The train was the New York and Washington vestibule limited. Most of the trainmen were shot at and had narrow escapes from the bullets. No person was injured either by the dynamite or firearms. The place where the robbery occurred is a lonely district in which few people live and houses are far between. No better place for a train robbery could be desired by the robbers.

After the escape of the robbers the train was hastily made up and came on to Chicago, arriving here somewhat late, a stop having been made at Whiting to report the robbery. Officers were at once sent after the robbers and within an hour after the robbery a large posse was on their trail.

Washington, Aug. 2.—With the arrest of a man named Miller at Havre, Mont., the postoffice inspectors have put a temporary stop in the career of a gang of letter box thieves that has caused them constant trouble for the past three or four years. During the past twelve or fifteen years there have been several similar gangs, but of all this was by far the most vexatious. The other members of the gang are Prentice Teller and G. H. Grant, who are now serving in prison for their crime. They operated in New York for three months. The three disguised themselves in the uniforms of letter carriers and boldly opened the street letter boxes, took out the mail and deposited it in the regulation sack. It was easy enough for them to learn the hours when the regular carriers made their collections and thus avoid meeting them.

MARVELOUS BASKETS

Indian Art Surrounded by curious Superstitions.

The 323 native Indian baskets, comprising the famous Hudson collection in the National Museum at Washington, afford some interesting glimpses into the superstitions and aspirations of the primitive Americans. They show, too, the very highest development of the art of basket making, today, as well as in the past. The collection is scientifically valuable from the fact that it represents the Pomo Indians before their deteriorating influence of the white man had made itself felt while the art was yet at the zenith of its development. While the collection embraces examples of every form in domestic work of gathering and storing, grinding and cooking the acorn, which is the staff of life of these Indians, it is particularly rich in sacramental or sacrificial baskets, extremely rare because of their sacred character. These sacred baskets of the Indian women and children, and the wonderfully beautiful baskets of the "Sun" ceremonials are almost beyond description, so difficult is it to present any adequate idea of the combined color effect of the rich sheen of the humming bird feathers, the tufts of scarlet from the top-knot of the woodpecker, the dainty plumes of the quail, the sober wampum, the iridescent mother of pearl or haliotes, the shining black stems of the maiden hair fern, and in the later baskets the bright beads, all of which, coupled with the exquisite refinement of the workmanship, the artistic combination of color and the marvelous fineness of the weave render the collection notable and incomparable from every point of view.

To the average observer these are only interesting as objects of beauty and utility, a collection of Indian baskets, nothing more, but to the trained eye and intelligence of the ethnologist they represent a very large part of the Indian history and philosophy. They are not only rarely beautiful in form, color and workmanship, thus appealing to the collector, the artist and craftsman, but are valuable by reason of the fact that interwoven with the fibre of reed and willow, grass and fern, bead and feather are the aspiration and superstition and all the complicated, highly emotional, religious life of these primitive peoples. They are clothed about with a symbolism rich and complex beyond the comprehension of civilized man. The history of the "Sun" basket is not known at present, as these Indians are unstudied and unwritten, except as Dr. Hudson has observed during his years of contact with them; but the history of the women's and children's baskets, whose function is sacramental or sacrificial, has been worked out. When a child, male or female is born into the tribe the mother after a few months, or when the little life seems assured, makes for him a tiny basket, his birthright, as it were, which shall stand for him as a prayer incarnate, as a bond between him and the mysteries. With loving, anxious devotion, the mother weaves the tiny basket of the finest, most perfect grasses, tracing upon it some delicate, symbolical design, dainty feathers or bands interwoven with a patience that passes understanding in a mesh, so fine and close as to be almost invisible to the naked eye, for this basket is as his life, and an untoward circumstance affecting its weaving is believed to affect the life of the child. So with prayers, incantations and sacrifices the basket is made and is laid away carefully rolled in a piece of bark or skin, a sacred, and to be used only on ceremonial occasions, for even the little children take part in certain of the dances and ceremonies. Should the child die the basket is burned upon its grave, that its shade may accompany him in the next world. Should the child live to reach the age of seven or eight years, a new and larger basket is made with equal care and ceremony.—New York Sun.

A Tunnel to Monte Cristo's Prison.

Marseilles talks of having a tube of a new description. This will be a submarine line connecting the town with the celebrated Chateau d'If, made famous by Dumas pere's "Monte Cristo." The railway will be of the electric tubular type. The distance between Marseilles' old port and the island on which the castle stands is a little under one mile, and the steamers take half an hour to do the trip. As visitors would effect an immense saving of time by the tube, the propounder of the scheme fully believes that he may count upon carrying 500 passengers to and fro per diem, and if this sanguine estimate is realized, he will thus be enabled to cover the enormous expense of the tunneling works and make a profit.—Paris Letter.

Wheat of Kansas.

The biennial report of the Kansas board of agriculture shows that in twenty years the state has produced 712,487,558 bushels of wheat—a yearly average of 35,624,378 bushels. The crop last year reached 77,339,091 bushels, and this year's crop will not fall below 70,000,000 bushels. The total value of the twenty years' production of wheat was $428,088,193. The 70,000,000 bushel crop of the current year has been grown upon one-tenth of the arable land of Kansas; or, to be exact, upon 5,006,000 of its 51,200,000 acres of surface, leaving the remainder to be devoted to the cultivation of other crops. The corn crop of the state, taken one year with another, is doubtless quite as valuable as its wheat crop.

Japanese Empress Fine Looking.

The empress of Japan is just about a year older than the emperor, although she seems younger. She is rather fine looking from a Japanese standpoint, being short and petite. She now dresses in European style, although when first married she wore Japanese clothes and blacked her teeth, as did all good Japanese wives thirty years ago. Today her teeth are as white as those of any American beauty and her clothes are of the latest Paris fashion.

Randi's Collection of Coins.

Six thousand coins collected by Cardinal Randi have been bought by Pope Leo and added to the fine collection in the Vatican. Many fell into the cardinal's hands in 1862 for their weight in silver, when Pope Pius introduced the French monetary system, and the old coins were retired by the papal government.

Sailors Love Baseball

"More ardent lovers of baseball than the members of our navy would be hard to find," remarked a well-known sporting writer at New York. And it is true. At every game, either at the Polo grounds in New York or at the Brooklyn baseball park, is found a liberal sprinkling of the blue uniforms of Uncle Sam's Jackies. There are no more enthusiastic rooters than are the sailors, and none who seem to better appreciate the fine points of the game.

Every man-of-war has its ball team, and regulations and traditions are winked at in so far that the officers often doff their dignity and take a hand in the game with the men before the mast. Some of them, with Annapolis experience behind them, are clever at the sport. It is to the playing of the naval nines at ports of call that the introduction of the game in foreign countries is due, for as fierce rivalry exists between the ball teams of the various vessels when they come together as between the boat crews. To the landsman that statement may not seem to count as much, but to him who knows the navy, he knows that there is nothing that arouses more rivalry or causes more profligacy in betting than a meeting of the crack crews of a couple of vessels. When these meet "Jackies" will bet the last dollar in his clothes and half the contents of his kit on the crew of his vessel. Nothing else arouses him quite so much as this, the nearest thing to it being a meeting of the nines of two vessels of a fleet in a game of baseball.

How Knights Are Created.

The ceremony of the investiture of a knight by the British sovereign is an exceedingly quaint one. In most cases the order followed was identical, therefore that of a knight commander of the Order of the Bath may be taken as typical. On being admitted into the royal presence the knight commander to be invested made reverence to the king by bowing three times—once on entering the throne-room, another in the middle, and again on approaching his majesty. He then knelt on his right knee. In conferring the honor of knighthood the king placed a sword on both the candidate's shoulders. The knight, for by that time he had become such, raised his right arm horizontally and his majesty placed his hand on the knight's wrist, who then raised it to his lips. While the knight still remained kneeling the king proceeded to his investiture by placing the riband and badge of the order round his neck and afterward presented his hand to the knight, who kissed it. The ceremony being concluded, the knight would rise and, retiring, make similar reverence as that with which he was admitted.

Indian Territory Coal.

Some idea of the value of the coal deposits in Indian Territory can be gained when it is known that the average thickness of the vein is four feet, which will produce 4,000 tons an acre. These lands are leased in lots of 960 acres each, which means that 3,500,000 to 4,000,000 tons can be produced by those leasing the land. On this output the lessees pay a royalty of 8 cents a ton. The output during the last year was 1,900,127, as against 1,400,442 tons the previous year. The interests of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians are protected.

Telephones Replace Speaking Tubes.

Telephones are replacing speaking tubes in most of the new mansions, and also connect with stables and other outbuildings. If power from a waterfall or windmill is available the owner of a house can install an electric plant of his own at small cost. In many large country houses the dynamo is run by a gasoline engine.—New York Sun.

SCIENCE

READS LIKE ROMANCE.

"Yes," said a Chicago business man to a reporter; "yes, we think we have hit upon one of the greatest inventions of this age of invention, and when the busy world is introduced to our phono-typograph it will stop a moment in amazement and admiration. That may sound to you like a clause out of a circus bill, or a chapter from a Chicago novelist's novel, but it is a true bill, nevertheless. You are aware that for a long time there have been efforts to combine in some way the present style of typewriter and the phonograph, but until now these efforts have invariably failed. A year ago we discovered in Chicago a young mechanic who had solved the problem, as we believed, and we put money back of our belief, and told him to go ahead with his machine until he had it where he thought it ought to be ready to be offered to the world. It is hardly that yet, for the best machine is susceptible of improvement, but we think we have a good thing.

"Of course, I can't give you all of the details, but I think I can make clear to you the general working principle of the phono-typograh. As its names indicates, it is a typewriting of sound. That has been the idea in all other attempts, but it was not found practicable, because the sounds were words, and there were too many words to reduce to machinery, as it were. The phonograph and the telephone principle got the sounds all right, but each sound was a word and that could not be put in type. Our man, however, hit upon a separation of the words into letters, and that brought his field of operation into the limit of twenty-six sounds. For punctuating marks we use spaces, but as yet we have no capitals. The machine, of course, is electric, and the operator talks into it as into a telephone, except that he spells out each word and as the sound of the letter strikes upon the disk it is reproduced upon the corresponding letter, which in turn is printed exactly as the ordinary typewriter would print it.

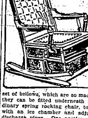
"At first blush the spelling out of each word would seem to entail more time and labor than the old style of typewriting, but a very few hours will show any person that our phono-typograph will do the work of two people in half the time they will consume by the existing methods. We are willing to admit that our machine is not perfect in all its details, but as far as it goes, and it goes a good long way, it is a world beater. A newspaper friend of mine has one on trial on which he has written a hundred words a minute, and averages seventy-five right along. He doesn't know anything about typewriting of the old kind, either, and doesn't have to, as glibness of tongue takes the place of nimbleness of fingers. We hope to have them on the market within sixty days, but are in no especial hurry, as there are some small details we want perfected before coming up for judgment. No," concluded the gentleman in response to a query, "there is no stock for sale. We know a good thing when we see it."—Ex.

HAYCOCKS OF SALT.

At Salton in southern California, exists a basin of land between 200 and 300 feet below sea level. About 1,000 acres of the depressed area are covered with a deposit of salt, which C. F. Holden describes in the Scientific American as one of the sights of California. The salt is first thrown into ridges by a peculiarly shaped plow, drawn by a dummy engine with cables, and then is piled into conical heaps before being carried to the drying-house and crushing mill. The expanse looks like a field of snow. About 2,000 tons of salt are removed each year, but the supply is perennially renewed by the deposits of salt springs which flow into the basin. In June the temperature of the air reaches 150 degrees, and only Indian workmen can withstand the heat and glare.

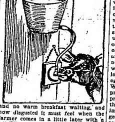
BELLOWS FOR ROCKING CHAIR.

In the accompanying drawing is shown a rocking chair with an air compressing and discharging apparatus which is intended to aid in keeping the person who sits in the chair cool. The arrangement consists of a set of bellows, which are so made that they can be fitted underneath an ordinary spring rocking chair, together with an ice chamber and adjustable discharge pipes. One portion of the bellows is secured to the under side of the chair seat and the opposite end engages the frame on which the rockers rest, in order that the motion of the chair when being rocked may open and close the bellows to receive and discharge the air. In the lower portion of the bellows is located a sliding drawer, which can be drawn out for the insertion of a cake of ice of any desired size, and the air circulates around this in entering the bellows, being then discharged through the nozzles attached to the ends of the arm rests. As these nozzles are adjustable the currents of air may be directed toward any portion of the face or upper portion of the body.



ARTIFICIAL CALF FEEDER.

What an awful disappointment it must be to a calf to wake up some morning and find its mother missing and no warm breakfast waiting, and how disgusted it must feel when the farmer comes in a little later with a pail of skimmed milk, straddles the calf's neck, inserts his finger in its mouth and tries to convince it that drinking is the proper method of feeding from that time on. Happy would be that calf if the farmer would provide it with the feeding arrangement here shown, and happy would the farmer be if he did not have to waste his time in teaching the calf to drink. The calf seems to get along fairly well until the farmer undertakes to withdraw his finger and make the calf go it alone, but then rebellion rises and an upset pail is the result in some cases. Once introduce the calf to this device and he may bunt to his heart's content without upsetting the milk. The arrangement consists of a reservoir, suspended from the wall, with a tube leading to a block underneath, on which is mounted a rubber nipple. As the nipple is screwed on the block it may be removed as soon as the feeding is finished, or the entire feeder can be taken down if desired.



GROWTH OF COKE INDUSTRY.

A report on the growth and present condition of coke manufacture has been issued by the census office, says the Black Diamond. The report says the manufacture of coke is a comparatively new industry in this country. In 1850 the value of coke produced was $15,250, while in 1899 it was $35,585,445, including by-products amounting to $952,027 in value, or an increase of over 100 per cent in ten years, from 1889 to 1899. This extraordinary growth of the coke industry has only kept pace with the growth of the iron manufacture.

According to the report the modern tendency of industry to concentrate in a comparatively small number of establishments is strikingly exemplified in the coke industry, where there is an increase of only 10.6 per cent in the number of establishments reported, as compared with 1889, while the increase in tons of coke produced is 96.2 per cent and in the value of all products 115.7 per cent.

A capital of $36,502,679, has been invested in the manufacture of the product. The value of the output was $35,585,445, to produce which involved an outlay of $7,085,736 for wages, $19,666,532 for raw materials and $2,184,968 for miscellaneous expenses.

Pennsylvania leads the six chief producing states, with 26,920 ovens in operation and an output of 13,245,594 tons of coke out of a total of 19,640,798 tons, or 67.4 per cent of the total output.

HOW TREES BREATHE.

F. Schuyler Mathews, in a recently issued work on "Familiar Trees and Their Leaves," says: "The greatest sphere of usefulness which a tree occupies is connected with its life. It is a great air purifier; it absorbs from the atmosphere the carbonic acid gas which is poisonous to us; it holds and slowly dispenses moisture which the parched air needs; it gives out the ozone (or oxygen in an active electro-negative condition) which is particularly conducive to our health; and it modifies heat which would otherwise be overpowering. Step into the thick woods from an open space on a very hot day, and immediate relief is experienced from the intense heat. This is not wholly the result of shade furnished by the trees; much of it proceeds from the modification of the air through the breathing of the tree leaves.

"I have estimated that a certain sugar maple of large proportions which grows near my cottage puts forth in one season about 432,000 leaves; these leaves combined present a surface to sunlight of about 21,600 square feet, or an area equal to pretty nearly half an acre. Every inch of this expanse breathes in life for the tree and out health for the man, while it absorbs in the aggregate an enormous amount of heat and sunlight."

For very minute writing, pens made from crow quills have been found to do excellent work.

"I suppose," he ventured, "that you would never speak to me again if I were to kiss you?" "Oh, John!" she exclaimed, "why don't you get over the habit of always looking at the dark side of things?"

A man's idea of a phenomenon is another man who never loses his collar button.

WILL WE MAKE LIFE?

THE NEW CENTURY MAY REVEAL THIS MARVEL.

Prying Into the Arch-Secret of Dame Nature's Laboratory—A Physiologist Who Believes that the Problem Will Some Day Be Solved.

The famous Professor Haeckel says that man will some day learn how to make life—that he will know how "to produce a living substance by artificial processes." Perhaps the new century may hold in reserve this greatest marvel, which will enable the physiological chemist to assume the role of a creator. It may be only in a small way, but it will be wonderful none the less. After all, the problem is simply to create a bit of protoplasm, which is the basis of all life, the clay of the potter—the substance, in short, out of which all animals and plants are built up. And surely that ought not to be so very difficult, considering what very ordinary stuff protoplasm is. Take a spoonful of the white of an egg, and you have it, practically. White of egg, in fact, is nearly pure protoplasm. The composition of protoplasm being absolutely known, the chemist has no great trouble in imitating it. So many parts of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen and carbon are put together, and there you are. Artificial protoplasm has been made of albuminous substances and oils, and the product has actually had a movement of its own simulating life; but the movement was due merely to chemical causes. Viewed under the microscope, the stuff had exactly the same apparent structure as protoplasm, but there was no life in it, and no reproductive principle. The difference between a thing living and a thing dead is not a matter of structure or chemical composition—the two may be exactly the same in both respects—but in the ability which the living thing has to renew its own cells and propagate fresh ones. Blood taken out of the veins of a living animal is the same as the blood that remains in the veins, but the latter is continually developing new corpuscles—is alive, in other words—while the former does nothing of the kind. Why is it so? In the answer to that question lies the arch-secret of Dame Nature's laboratory. It has never been plausibly guessed at as yet, but there is no good reason for taking it for granted that it will never be found out. Prof. Haeckel calls attention to the fact that in trying to create life man is only making an effort to accomplish what the plants in anybody's garden are doing all the time. They take so many parts of carbon, hydrogen, nitrogen and oxygen and convert them into protoplasms, the living substance. Science can combine these elements just as nature does, the proportions being exactly known, but not yet so as to produce life. "But I believe firmly," says the great physiologist, "that the problem will some day be solved, and the artificial production of life become an accomplished fact." If a drop of blood be drawn by pricking one's finger and viewed under a high microscopic power there will be seen, among numerous little disc-shaped bodies which float in it and give it its red color, a comparatively smaller number of somewhat larger colorless bodies of irregular shape. If the drop be kept at the temperature of living blood these colorless corpuscles will be seen to exhibit a marvelous activity, changing their forms with great rapidity, drawing in and thrusting out prolongations of their substance, and creeping about as if they were independent organisms. Each is a tiny mass of protoplasm, and has a nucleus of its own. It is a structural unit of the human being taking shape as an aggregation of such corpuscles. It is the same way with all other animals, though they are built up on different structural forms, and some, like the amoeba, are so low down in the scale of creation as to consist of but one such cell. A plant is able to take carbolic acid, water, and nitrogenous salts, and convert them into protoplasm. That is the way in which vegetable organisms grow. An animal cannot do this, and do would starve in the presence of any quantity of such raw materials.—Philadelphia Times.

His Honey Was Missing.

The Kansas City Journal tells this story: "Frank Anderson was for years a well-known commercial traveler who made Galena. He was passionately fond of honey, and the proprietor of the hotel at Galena, at which he always stopped, always had some on hand for him. On one trip Anderson took his wife along, and as they approached Galena he mentioned to her that he was getting to a place where they could have some honey. When the pair were sitting at the supper table that night no honey appeared, and Anderson said sharply to the head waiter: 'Where is my honey? The waiter smiled and said: 'You mean the little black-haired one? Oh, she don't work here now.'"

Portable Churches.

There are portable churches, as well as schoolhouses, and the Reformed church in Pennsylvania is thinking seriously of adopting them for congregations not yet financially able to erect permanent buildings. These movable churches are made of corrugated galvanized-iron, fastended to a wooden framework, which framework is covered on the inside with a wainscoting, lining the hole side and ceiling. The churches can be made any size and on any plan, One seating 300 persons can be put up ready for use at a cost of $1,5000.

SELF-HELP FOR WOMEN.

Those Who Are Nervous Are Given Simple Rules.

When you are asleep, it is to be hoped that you are still. Few people are when they are awake. If one observes the crowd in the streets, it is curious and most disagreeable to see how small the number is who are not constantly making grimaces and working their faces or jaws in some manner. I have heard it said it was bashfulness that caused this, but it has not been my observation that bashfulness was so widedly distributed an American trait; besides, how does twisting the face help to keep one in countenance? No, it is not bashfulness; it is misdirected nervous energy, which ought to be aiding the movements of their legs or getting stored up somewhere in the central nervous reservoirs for future use. Learn to keep still when you rest; when you move, move with the part of the body needed; do not waste your force by walking with your arms and face as well as with your legs. If circumstances force an unusual and fatiguing amount of exertion upon you, break it now and then by periods of absolute rest. No matter how brief they are, they will be useful if you make them complete and perfect in the way described. This is true of mental as well as bodily exertion. A minute or two minutes of quiet, with closed eyes if possible, with your tension relaxed and the gearing of the machinery thrown off for the moment, will help and refresh you greatly. Here, again, more may be gained if the ability to relax mentally can be secured, in a fashion similar to the withdrawing of muscular tension. Learn to empty your mind when not using it.—Dr. John Mitchell in Harper's Bazar.

DE MORES WIRE FENCE.

Marquis Tells Westener He'll Shoot Him on Second Offense.

When the Marquis de Mores took possession of his 20,000 acres in the Bad Lands he proceeded to put up barbed wire fences says G. W. Ogden in Everybody's Magazine. One of the first to meet this innovation in the Bad Lands was a hunter named Frank O'Donnell. He was heading in for the river one day and almost fell from his horse in astonishment when he saw the new fence. So great was his surprise he could not call to his mind appropriate oaths. He cut the wire and rode on toward Medora in silence. They told him there who was responsible for the breach of Bad Lands etiquette and he called on the marquis. "Say, pardner, what in the —— do you mean by putting up that fence?" he demanded, with an injured air. De Mores replied that he was merely fencing his own property, as was customary in civilized lands. "Well, I just cut a gap in the blankety-blank thing up yonder on the hill," said the hunter defiantly; "that's the way I'll treat your fence whenever it comes in my way." "The next time you cut my fence," De Mores said, without changing color or showing the least sign of anger, "I'll shoot you on sight." O'Donnell's jaw fell, and he looked in amazement from one to another of the men who stood around. Then he mounted his horse and rode away.

Study What You Must Affect.

Scientists now acknowledge that education has most effect upon mediocre minds. It can do a great deal with them, less for those who are defective, and still less for those highly endowed; for talented persons, even though they may receive all the usual courses of intellectual training, usually educate themselves, says the Woman's Home Companion. They gain their most valuable education through the exercise of their strongest faculties. Work is their tutor and self-direction their college.

Parents and tutors need to have a care that their efforts to be helpful to children do not interfere with the natural development of their faculties. This is sometimes done through not recognizing their special abilities, quite frequently from a wish to fix their destinies in accordance with some conventional standard. We should study the individuality of our child from his birth, so that we may avoid a wasteful employment of his energies in pursuits that are alien to his disposition and foreign to his needs.

Where Our English Is Faulty.

A sound that is heard only to a limited extent in American speech is the sound of e in person, of i in girl, of o in word, of u in murder and of y in myrtle. Previously to about fifteen years ago the sound was seldom heard from the lips of American actors. Now there are few of them that do not make it properly. Five vowels, e, i, o, u and y in certain words have precisely the same sound. This sound is easily learned, but it must be learned orally; it cannot be described to any practical purpose. The making of it is a very important matter if one would have one's utterance conform to refined usage. The sound commonly heard trenches closely to the borderland of the vulgar.—Harper's Magazine.

Marquis Is a Dairyman.

The marquis of Ripon, who recently celebrated his golden wedding, has been a dairyman for years. In and about the picturesque town of Ripon, Yorkshire, may be seen milk wagons bearing his formal title, "The most noble the marquis of Ripon." He also has a milk store in London, where country dairy products are sold

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Harvesting Sweet Potatoes.

D. M. Nesbit, in Farmers' Bulletin, 129, says: A small crop of sweet potatoes may be thrown out by a common turning plow provided with a revolving coulter or other device for cutting the vines, but such a plow leaves many of the tubers covered, and the labor of gathering them is much greater than when a special sweet potato plow is used. In large operations one of the most efficient implements for harvesting is the "scoop digger," which passes under the tubers and severs all roots, but leaves the plant, with vines and roots cut, in the same position it occupied before. The tubers remain attached to the stem and are easily and rapidly lifted out of the ground. They are then left to dry several hours before gathering. In hot weather they should not be long exposed to the sun. This method leaves the vines uncovered, and it is easy to gather them for stock feeding. The tubers are sorted in two sizes and laid carefully (not thrown) into baskets which hold one-fifth of a barrel. They are hauled in these baskets to the potato house, or to the buyer at the railroad station or steamboat landing. The small roots are left on the field or gathered for feeding stock. It is of prime importance to avoid cutting the tubers in digging or bruising them afterwards by rough handling.

The yield of sweet potatoes varies widely according to variety, quality of land, season, fertilizers, culture, etc. Under favorable conditions, in check planting a barrel of primes from 100 hills is a good yield, or a barrel from 125 plants 18 inches apart in a row. In a good crop there may be a barrel of seconds to every 5 barrels of primes, more or less, according to the method of sorting. Extremes of yield go far above and drop as far below the figures here given.

It will be understood that only sweet potatoes of good quality for table use are referred to in this estimate. Some of the coarser varieties used for stock feeding, or even the finer varieties grown in rich land, where they are apt to be deficient in quality, may be expected to yield 400 or 500 bushels per acre.

The Scraping of Trees.

Prof. L. H. Bailey of Cornell University writes to Vicks Magazine as follows:

Now and then I hear that a man who calls himself "The Cornell Tree Pruner" or something of the kind is scraping all the outer bark from fruit and shade trees. No person is authorized to use the name of Cornell University to advertise his abilities as a tree pruner or tree doctor.

The question is constantly arising as to whether trees should be scraped of their outer bark. This outer bark is dead tissue, but it may serve as a protection to the tree. The features of this outer bark are also characteristic of the different kinds of trees and contribute no small part to their beauty and interest. I certainly should never scrape the bark from trees which are grown for ornament, unless there were some particular reason for it. This paticular reason might arise when there were a serious incursion of some insect which finds a harbor underneath the bark, or when some species of body blight attacks a tree and it is necessary to remove the bark in order to get at the difficulty. These are special and comparatively rare cases, however. Certainly the general rule is to leave the bark on all ornamental and shade trees. To take it off does no good, and it robs them of very much of their characteristic beauty.

In case of orchard trees, it is often advisable to take off the hanging bark in order to destroy the harboring places of codlin-moth and other insects. Even in that case, I should not scrape down to the light colored or inner bark, but take off merely the rough, loose exterior. Orchard trees, not being grown for ornament, often present a more kempt and tidy appearance if the old bark is removed. It is to be remembered that the ideals which underlie the care of fruit trees may not obtain with ornamental trees.

I have understood that this itinerant tree pruner asserts that he is able to destroy the pear blight by dusting some material on the trees which he has scraped. It is only necessary to say that little need be expected from such treatment.

It is often asked what one shall do for "moss" on trees. On old and rough bark, moss does no harm, and it often adds a distinct charm to shade and ornamental trees. On young trees or young bark, the moss generally indicates lack of vigor and vitality in the tree. The remedy is to make the tree more vigorous by tillage, enriching the soil, pruning, spraying and other means. Taking off the moss is little more than the treatment of a symptom; yet the moss should be removed, for in removing it the bark will be made more flexible to allow of the expansion of the trunk, and the tree—if it is a fruit tree—will have a more tidy appearance. The moss may be scraped off lightly. It is also readily killed by a spraying with Bordeaux mixture. I believe that part of the good spraying lies in the softening of the bark; this was undoubtedly one value of the old practice of scrubbing trees with soap or lye. Stunted trees become hide-bound and cannot swell with new growth. Any treatment which softens the bark will tend to alleviate this condition, but other good treatment must be given at the same time.

Notes on Alfalfa.

In different countries its duration as a plant varies. In Peru and Chili it is said that fields planted by the Spaniards hundreds of years ago are still in existence and still bearing alfalfa. It is a perennial plant there, not only botanically, but in the ability it has to exist without dying out. At the New Jersey station, however, its duration seems to be less, as that station, in one of its reports, says of it: "Alfalfa is a perennial plant, and once well established will last a number of years, from four to ten or more, depending upon the character of the soil and the treatment of the plant in reference to manuring and methods of cutting. The annual upright and branching stems, when cut, do not sprout, but die back to the crown, when new shoots start and grow rapidly." Doubtless in climates such as that of New Jersey, the plant succumbs more quickly to adverse conditions than in a climate of unclouded sun and abundant heat.

There is, however, a problem con*nected with its growth that has not yet* been entirely settled. No matter how well it may grow in the semi-arid area it sometimes shows a decided tendency not to do well in the more moist states. Recently the writer saw at Southern Pines, North Carolina, a large field of alfalfa. The ground seemed to be suitable for it, and it was learned that the seed bed for the alfalfa had been well prepared and enriched, but the growth was meager. At the time of the visit the owner had ordered a barrel of soil from Kansas from a field in which the cultures that work on the roots of alfalfa were supposed to be abundant. He hoped by the introduction of these germs to cause a larger growth. The soil on which it was growing was sandy, but rich. Doubtless the same problem of root bacteria that applies to the growth of the clovers applied here.

Acidity of Upland Soils.

H. J. Wheeler and B. L. Hartwell, in the report of the Rhode Island Experiment station, summarize the result of pot and plat experiments on the subject of acidity of upland soils. The tests were begun in 1894. The authors say: "The general conclusion drawn from the various experiments herein outlined is that the recognition of a high degree of acidity, even in the case of upland and naturally well-drained soils, is one of the most important guides to the first step that should be taken toward their amelioration. This seems to hold true largely, if not wholly, regardless of whether the benefit accruing from the use of carbonate of lime is attributable to its correcting physical, biological, or chemical conditions. The practical importance of this matter, even though it has been heretofore almost ignored or unrecognized by most American and many European agricultural chemists, would seem to have been abundantly demonstrated."

More Evidence on Kieffer.

From the Farmers' Review: I have been interested in your articles on Kieffer pear pollinations. It may be of interest to you to know that in 1901 I have very carefully gone over the ground again and the results this year are practically identical with those published in our last annual report. Of 366 crosses on Kieffer with Bartlett, Duchess, Garber, Le Conte and Seckel pollen, 171—or 47 per cent, started to grow. Of 687 Kieffer on Kieffer, 5 weak fruits have started, but will probably not develop.—G. Harold Powell, Horticulturist Delaware Experiment Station.

It is hard to believe that a mistake has not been made in the report of the large amount of fruit in Hamburg found infested with San Jose scale. This fruit is from the United States. One is tempted to ask if the scientist there knows San Jose scale when he sees it. The number of packages of all kinds of fruit received from the United States is put at 82,802, of which 3.12 per cent was found to have San Jose scale. Of the apples received from the eastern part of the United States 1.84 per cent are reported infested. This is the most astonishing claim of all, for we have believed the apple orchards, at least of the region east of the Rocky Mountains, little affected. It is further claimed that of all the apples shipped from California to Hamburg 42.44 per cent were affected, and of the apples from Oregon 51.44 per cent. The moral is that our own orchardists had better educate themselves up to the point of knowing the San Jose and other scales, and then carefully inspect all fruit to be shipped to Europe. We wish to foster the European trade and to do so must send them fruit above suspicion. Through slack methods we may arouse a sentiment in foreign countries against the admission of our fruit, and the presence of such things as the San Jose scale gives them a good excuse for keeping out our products. Doubtless the European raisers of apples would be glad to see an embargo against American fruit, which is certainly competing severely with them in their home markets.

Population and Cattle Supply.

While twenty states made gains on the number of cattle for 1900, yet only two states had a greater number of cattle than in 1892. There were 10,165,176 more cattle in 1892 than in 1900, and while we are losing these 10,165,176 cattle we are increasing our population 10,500,000 for these eight years, as our population was 65,451,000 in 1892 and 75,000,000 in 1900. We thus had 826 cattle for each 1,000 inhabitants in 1892 and 585 cattle per 1,000 population in 1900, being a loss of 241 cattle per 1,000 population, or about 26 per cent of a reduction on our ratio.

To maintain our present ratio of cattle in 1903, when our population will reach 80,000,000, we should have 46,800,000 cattle, or a net gain of 1,000,000 annually. Our average annual decrease for these eight years on cattle was 1,270,000.

In 1892 the number of cattle was 54,067,000; population, 65,450,000; ratio, 826; in 1900 number of cattle, 43,902,000; population, 75,000,000; ratio, 585. The above includes all cattle.

In 1920 at our present increase, our population will reach 100,000,000 and even to have 500 cattle per 1,000 population our cattle must increase 6,000,000 and to maintain our present ratio we must have in 1920 53,500,000 head of cattle.

When we begin to gain about 1,000,000 annually we are getting in a position to simply maintain our ratio on cattle, and when our increase is only 500,000 annually we are preparing to have only 500 cattle per 1,000 in 1920.

The lowest price of meat cattle occurred in 1891, being $14.76 per head, against $14.76 per head in 1900. The loss in number has been more than made up in price, being $16 in value per inhabitant, against $14 in 1892.

A view by states is perplexing. For while Ohio gained 80,000 and Iowa 28,000 for 1900, Illinois lost 59,000; Indiana 10,000, Kentucky 50,000, Tennessee 50,000, Missouri 80,000, Texas 188,000 for 1900. Every southern state is losing at about the same rate for 1909 for the past eight years on cattle.

So when the agricultural department issued its stock bulletins for 1901, announcing less than 44,600,000 cattle of all kinds, 45,300,000 for 1892, the farmers can depend on the ratio to be still on the decline on cattle.—William Adams in Indiana Farmer.

Tests with Bordeaux Mixture.

In Germany tests were made to ascertain the effect of a number of factors upon the composition of Bordeaux mixture, as shown by the separation of the different mixtures upon standing. Among the experiments were those to determine the effect of iron sulphate, which is commonly present in commercial copper sulphate, different quantities and qualities of lime; different concentrations of mixtures; order of combining the solutions, and temperatures of solutions. The presence of iron sulphate was found to cause a more rapid separation of the liquid. Within the limit of the experiments, separation was inversely proportional to the amount of copper sulphate used. The quality of lime affected the mixture very appreciably, the mixture containing the best lime precipitating the slowest. The proportion of lime exerted the same effect as the amount of copper. Fresh, well-slaked lime gave a better mixture than poorly slaked, but fresh, air-slaked lime was about its equal. Old or air-slaked lime produced a mixture that separated very rapidly. Allowing the milk of lime to stand for two days was practically without effect upon the different mixtures, the results with milk of lime that had been exposed to the air being almost identical with freshly made. Bordeaux mixture made by pouring the lime into the copper solution was much inferior to the others. Where the copper mixture was poured into the lime, and where both mixtures were poured into a third vessel, the mixture was about the same. Heat was found to cause a separation in the mixture in proportion to the increase of temperature.

One Way to Keep Apples.

The following way of keeping apples can hardly be considered according to the rules, but we publish it as a small scrap of evidence on a big matter. At a meeting of Minnesota horticulturists George Andrus read a paper on "A Good Way to Keep Apples in a Common Cellar." Pack the apples carefully in a barrel or box, keep them moist by pouring water on the cellar floor and upon the apples themselves. The fruit should be protected from light and air. The air draws the moisture from the apples, and so will paper, if the apples are wrapped in it. Mr. Andrus says in this way he has kept Tollman Sweets ten months, Willow Twigs twelve months, Golden Russets thirteen months, and they were just as fresh as when taken from the trees. The best success he ever had in keeping apples was one spring when the water flooded his cellar. The water was two and one-half inches deep. This method is certainly worth trying in a small way, but is such an innovation that it will be best not to risk too much in the first trials.

Baldwin's Balloons.

Mr. Baldwin recently shipped forty balloons to Tromsoe for use in the north pole expedition. These balloons are not intended to carry passengers, but each will have ten message buoys attached, which will be liberated automatically, thus recording the route northward.

Lived in Cranberry Crate.

The police have taken under their care a colored boy nine years old, whose home for the last two months has been a cranberry crate. The lad is Eddie Ray, whose father and mother died two years ago. He had no relatives. Up to two months ago, until he was turned out, he lived with a family in No. 4 Newark street.

The boy slept in various places until he discovered a cranberry crate in the areaway of a building formerly known as the Plaza hotel in Washington street. Nobody discovered him there until a few days ago, when members of the salvage corps, which is just across the street saw his woolly head sticking out of the crate at dawn.

They informed the police, who found the lad in the crate early this morning, and took him to the police headquarters. He seemed overjoyed at the change in his fortunes and ate ravenously. How he was able to exist during his career in the streets is a mystery.—Newark Special to New York Press.

Why He Wanted It Kept Quiet.

One of the officers in a certain English volunteer regiment is much disliked by his men. One evening, as he was returning home, he slipped into some deep water. A private in his regiment, however, happened to see him, and, after some trouble, succeeded in pulling him out. The officer was profuse in his thanks and asked his rescuer the best way he could reward him.

"The best way you can reward me," said the soldier, "is to say nothing about it."

"Why, my dear fellow," said the astonished officer, "why do you wish me to say nothing about it?"

"Because if the other fellows knew I'd pulled you out, they'd chuck me in."—Exchange.

Need of Hats.

"Yes," said the woman who likes to befriend the milliner, "if you wish to be really comfortable, always keep two hats on hand and wear them alternately. If you wear a hat much of the time you will find it is a great relief. Different hats rest upon different parts of the head, and so, even though the hats may both be light, it will be found that a change will be very agreeable."—New York Times.

A Fortune to be Given Away.

A noted philanthropist has decided to give away his fortune to charities and no doubt much good will be accomplished. There is another agency that has also accomplished much good, namely, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the medicine with fifty years of cures back of it. It promotes appetite, insures digestion, cures dyspepsia, regulates the liver and keeps the bowels regular, also prevents belching, heartburn or flatulency. Don't fail to try it, but be sure you get the genuine.

Pavements of Glass in Paris.

A new material for pavements is announced in Paris. It is called ceramo-crystal. In front of the Lycee Condorcet, in the Rue du Havre, on a section of the Alexander III. bridge, and in the stations of Vincennes and Porte-Maillot of the Metropolitain, this new kind of glass pavement is being tried. The company at the back of the enterprise is to have a five-years' trial, and if, at the end of that period, the experiment is voted a success, the city of Paris will adopt the new material for almost general use. The glass pavement is the invention of M. Garcher, who has his factory at Carne (Tarn.) It is an amalgam of broken glass subjected to high temperature and compression. It has been successfully tried in Geneva and Lyons.

When Willie Got Home—

"Mrs. Knox," said the hostess, at dinner, "your little boy doesn't seem to have much appetite."

"No, he doesn't; that's a fact."

"Don't be bashful, Willie," the hostess urged. "Won't you have some more of anything?"

"No, ma'am,' 'Willie replied; "I filled up on cookies before we come, 'cause I heard ma tell pa that we wouldn't get much here."—Philadelphia Press.

Cox, Wis., Aug. 5th.—Frank M. Russell of this place had Kidney Disease so badly that he could not walk. He tried Doctor's treatment and many different remedies, but was getting worse. He was very low.

He read in a newspaper how Dodd's Kidney Pills were curing cases of Kidney Trouble, Bright's Disease and Rheumatism, and thought he would try them. He took two boxes, and now he is quite well. He says:

"I can now work all day and not feel tired. Before using Dodd's Kidney Pills I couldn't walk across the floor."

Mr. Russell's is is the most wonderful case ever known in Chippewa county. This new remedy—Dodd's Kidney Pills—is making some miraculous cures in Wisconsin.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM SANDWICH ISLANDS

Cured of Catarrh of the Stomach by Pe-ru-na.

CONGRESSMAN R. W. WILCOX,
Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

Hon. Robert W. Wilcox, Delegate to Congress from Hawaii and the Sandwich Islands, in a recent letter from Washington, D. C., writes:

"I have used Peruna for dyspepsia and I cheerfully give you this testimonial. Am satisfied if it is used properly it will be of great benefit to our people. I can conscientiously recommend it to anyone who is suffering with stomach or catarrhal troubles."—R. W. Wilcox.

All over this country are hundreds of people who are suffering from catarrh of the stomach who are wasting precious time, and enduring needless suffering. The remedies they try only temporarily palliate the distress, but never effect a cure. Remedies for dyspepsia have multiplied so rapidly that they are becoming as numerous as the leaves of the forest, and yet dyspepsia continues to flourish in spite of them all. This is due to the fact that the cause of dyspepsia is not recognized as catarrh.

If there is a remedy in the whole range of medicinal preparations that is in every particular adapted to dyspepsia, that remedy is Peruna. This remedy is well nigh invincible in these cases.

Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O., says: "In my large practice and correspondence I have yet to learn of a single case of atonic dyspepsia which has not either been greatly benefited or cured by Peruna."

No one suffering with catarrh of the stomach or dyspepsia, however slight, can be well or happy. It is the cause of so many distressing symptoms that it is a most dreaded disease. Peruna acts immediately on the seat of the trouble, the inflamed mucous membranes lining the stomach and a lasting cure is effected.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

Diplomacy a Fine Art.

Diplomacy is a fine art, and in its successful practice much depends upon the observation of social conventions. Some of the most successful diplomats seem to spend the most of their time at dinners and parties, apparently doing nothing but enjoying themselves, but in reality serving well their countries. In truth, the reputation of a country at a foreign court, and ofttimes its welfare in important issues, depends largely upon the social abilities of its minister, for the man who is popular socially is very likely to drive a better bargain than his unsociable brother. This is well understood at Washington, and the selection of a chief for one of our foreign embassies depends in no small part upon his social culture.—Woman's Home Companion.

The quality of the wheat around here is better than it has been for years, and much of it will grade No. 1 Hard and No. 1 Northern.

There is a general demand throughout the state for the re-election of R. C. Dunn as state auditor. No man enjoys the confidence of the people more than Mr. Dunn, and he cannot refuse to serve another term.

There seems to be a general feeling in the new Ninth district that the Republican nomination will not be given to a Polk county man. Although Polk county has a number of men that could fill office with credit, no one could get the unanimous support of the Republicans of the county.

The appointment of John Gleason, of Crookston, by Gov. Van Sant, as a member of the state board of appeals of the grain inspection department, was good politics and has made the governor many friends in the Red River Valley. Mr. Gleason is a Populist and for several years was auditor of Polk county.

The most discussed topic in this section for a number of years has been the subject of good roads, and yet the roads around here are almost impassable. That much money and energy has been wasted, it must be admitted, and all because the work has not been done intelligently. The subject of road building is one that the people around here know but little about, and the News belives that it would be a good move to form a Good Roads Association in Thief River Falls, to study and agitate the subject. The building of good roads around here would be worth thousands of dollars to Thief River Falls, and an organized body could accomplish much good.

Crookston College will open its fall term Sept. 9. there will be beginning and advance classes in bookkeeping, shorthand and all the subjects required for a first grade certificate. Write for catalogue. Address J. C. Sathre Crookston, Minn.

Live Stock at the Fair.

In 1900 the Minnesota State Fair secured the national exhibit of the American Hereford Breeders' Assocaition, and with the other animals shown set forth the largest livestock display ever made. In Chicago, last fall, the Minnesota exhibit was eclipsed but the Minnesota men have now secured a joint exhibition by the American Short-Horn Breeders' Association and the Hereford people, with large accessions from many other classes of breeders. The result will be such a gathring together of four footed beasts as was never seen on the face of the earth. It will be a great occasion for farms who wish to study breeds and for every one who likes to see a fine animal or who may be interested in bettering the condition of the farming districts.

WEBSTER KNEW BRYAN'S TYPE OF DEMAGOGUERY.

The Statesman Denounced It In the Senate Sixty-four Years Ago.

Democrats and Republicans of the present generation alike revere and respect Daniel Webster. He was one of the greatest statesmen produced by this or any other country. Mr. Bryan is fond of quoting from Abraham Lincoln, another of America's greatest statesmen, and, in his eagerness, he has sometimes garbled his quotations, too. For a change, he might try a quotation or two from Webster, for example, from his great speech in the United States senate on Jan. 31, 1834, "The Natural Hatred of the Poor to the Rich." Sixty-four years ago, Daniel Webster stood up in the senate and denounced the demagogism of his day in words which fit the present crisis precisely.

Daniel Webster addressed the senate as follows:

"Sir: I see, in those vehicles which carry to the people sentiments from high places, plain declarations that the present controversy is but a strife between one part of the community and another. I hear it boasted as the unfailing security, the solid ground, never to be shaken, that the poor naturally hate the rich. I know that, within the last twenty-four hours, among men sent here to devise means for the public safety and the public good, it has been vaunted forth, as matter of boast and triumph, that one cause existed powerful enough to support everything and to defend everything: and that was, the natural hatred of the poor to the rich.

"Sir, I pronounce the author of such sentiments to be guilty of attempting a detestable fraud on the community; a double fraud; a fraud which is to cheat men out of their property, and out of the earnings of their labor, by first cheating them out of their liberty.

"The natural hatred of the poor to the rich!" Sir, it shall not be till the last moment of my existence—it shall be only when I am drawn to the verge of oblivion, when I shall cease to have respect or affection for anything on earth—that I will believe the people of the United States capable of being effectually deluded, cajoled and driven about in herds, by such abominable frauds as this. If they shall sink to that point, if they shall so far cease to be men, thinking men, intelligent men, as to yield to such pretenses and such clamor, they will be slaves already; slaves to their own passions, slaves to the fraud and knavery of pretended friends. "'The natural hatred of the poor against the rich!' 'The danger of a moneyed aristocracy!' 'A power as great and dangerous as that resisted by the Revolution!' 'A call to a new Declaration of Independence!' Sir, I admonish the people against the object of outcries like these. I admonish every industrious laborer in the country to be on his guard against such delusion. I tell him the attempt is to play off his passions against his interests, and to prevail on him, in the name of liberty, in the name of patriotism, to injure and afflict his country; and, in the name of his own independence, to make him a beggar and a slave. Has he a dollar? He is advised to do that which will destroy half its value. Has he hands to labor? Let him rather fold them, and sit still, than be pushed on, by fraud and artifice, to support measures which will render his labor useless and hopeless."

WILL GO NORTH

Great Northern Will Probably Build Next Spring.

In a private letter to the News a gentleman who is connected with the Great Northern in an official capacity, states that it is possible that the road will be extended north from here next year, the objective point being the Lake of the Woods. While the policy of the Great Northern at present is to improve its present system rather than build more branch lines, several surveys have recently been made, and the proposition is looked upon with favor. The route that will probably be selected will be almost a straight line to the lake, crossing the Thief river a short distance north of here. Another survey will be made this winter, after which it is expected some definite action will be taken, The News hopes to be in a position to give its readers a full account of the matter when it is settled.

RAIN AND WIND.

A Bad Storm Monday Afternoon Damaged This Section to the Extent of Many Thousand Dollars.

THE FARMERS LOSE THE MOST.

It Was a Small Sized Cyclone.—Much Damage Done to Property in Thief River Falls.

This section was visited by a most disastreous wind and rain storm Monday afternoon, and crops and buildings were damaged to the amount of thousands of dollars. It was one of the worst storms that ever visited Thief River Falls, according to old settlers, and while it did not last more than a half hour, it made it interesting for all. The storm covered a strip of country extending from west to east, and about seven miles in width. This city was about in the center of the storm.

The damage done to the crops is hard to estimate. All the grain that had not been cut was laid flat on the ground, and as wheat is about ripe it will not raise. It is thought by some, however, that it can be cut by a harvester, but a great deal of care will have to be taken. Wheat and hay that were in the stack were blown down, and scattered all over the country.

The rain fell in torrents, and being accompanied by such a heavy wind did a great deal of damage to the residences in this city. In a number of instances the plastering on houses was ruined, and household furnituie greatly damaged by water.

The Thief River Falls Lumber company sustained the heaviest loss in this city. The lumber in their yards was scattered in every direction, much of it being broken, while the smoke stacks and burner were damaged to a large extent, and several small buildings were removed from their foundation. Supt. Crowe estimates the damage at $1,500.

NOTES.

Cyclone insurance is in demand.

About every awning in town was blown down.

Considerable hail fell in the country west of here.

Several windows in George William's building were broken.

Numerous shade trees and small out-building all over town were blown down.

All the telegraph and telephone wires between here and Crookston were blown down.

The brick engine house at Red Lake Falls Milling Company's elevator was blown down.

The roof on a portion of John Meehan's barn was blown off and his wind mill was destroyed.

The chimney on Mrs. Wm. Porter's house was blown down and the inside of the house was damaged.

The chimney on F. H. Kratka's house blew down, and his house was flooded with water, doing a great deal of damage.

Part of the roof on the O. K. Mill blew off and the stock of flour, wheat, feed, etc., was damaged to the amount of about $500.

The building in which H. M. Hicks hearse was stored blew down and the hearse was damaged to the extent of about $25.

The window in Dr. Tupper and Strand's office over the First State Bank blew in and considerable damage was done by water.

The awning in front of John Morgan's blew down breaking three windows in his building and one in Bert Walkers building.

Joe Ryson was caught in the storm between here and St. Hilaire His buggy was turned over several times but he was not injured.

H. Fant's telephone exchange was damaged considerable. Many of the wires were blown down and telephone poles were broken. His damaged is estimated at about $200.

The storm struck Nick Tarrant's collection of buildings with full force, and jarred them considerable. At this writing Nick has not taken an inventory, and it is impossible to say whether or not any is gone.

LOTS OF IRON

It Is Thought, in the Red Lake Country.

D. W. Faulkner and James O. Rebels, the two gentlemen who have been prospecting in the Red lake country for iron ore, were in the city a few hours yesterday enroute to Hibbing to consult with other parties interested with them. Everything indicates that there are rich deposits of iron in the country south of the lake, and they feel confident that they will discover a rich bed. They will return in a short time with a drill, and commence work in earnest. They have options on most of the land in that section.

A BIG DEAL

A Local Land Company Is Re-Organized.

An important business deal was consumated in this city last week, whereby S. F. Staples and H. G. Dobner disposed of their interest in the Northern Real Estate and Mortgage company to David N. Winton and Daniel Shaw, and the stock of the company is now owned by the two last named gentlemen and C. L. Dobner. Mr. Shaw will be the manager of the company, and his good judgment and bustling abilities will insure that this land company will do a large and prosperous business. The most gratifying thing about the whole transaction, however, is the fact that Mr. Winton has become interested in this section in another way.

Mr. Staples will devote his time in the future to the loaning of money and insurance, and is also contemplating building a number of houses to rent.

THE CROPS

Looked Over by Millers and Elevator Men.

A party of representative grain and milling men of Minneapolis and Duluth were in the city last week, being on a trip over the producing territory to gain some knowledge as to size of the wheat crop.

The party included John Washburn, president of the Chamber of Commerce; W. H. Dunwoody, president of the St. Anthony Elevator company; P. B. Smith, general manager of the same; Albert C. Loring, president of the Northwestern Consolidated Milling company; J. S. Bell, C. M. Amsden, H. C. Cooke, C. M. McGean, G. G. Barnum, G. F. Piper and P. L. Lowe. The itinerary was over the main lines and branches of the Great Northern railroad, including stops at the principal points in the great grain belt, where they conferred with agents of various grain and elevator companies, heard stories of general prospects from the growers themselves, at the same time making personal investigations of the conditions.

The party returns with stories of the brightest prospects, each admitting that they were surprised to find such favorable conditions after reading reports of damage from various points.

A farm of 200 acres located in the thickly settled town of Newfolden, Marshall county, Minn., will be sold for $1,500 if sale can be made before August 15, 1901. For further information write to D. B. Bakke, Newfolden, Minn.

An Excellant Plan.

State Superintendent Olsen announces that he will put in operation the law enacted last winter which provides for the union of weak school districts, says the St. Cloud Journal-Press. This plan has been in force some years in eastern states and works well, giving better and longer terms. The idea is to close the schools in sparcely settled districts, and furnish free rides for the children of these districts to another district adjoining. The expense saved in the employment of teacher, fuel, etc., is more than enough to pay for the free tranportation of the scholars to and from school, the surplus going to pay additional schooling in the district selected. By uniting three or four weak districts and making one strong one, better teachers can be employed, the classes properly graded, and the result is beneficial in every way.

The superintendent reports that it is almost impossible to get the people to make the change, but after it is once put in operation the benefit will become apparent, and will soon be popular.

There are 40 counties in Texas which have to seek legal advice outside their limits, as they have not a single attorney of their own.

India has hundreds of dialects, which may all be classed under three great heads, the Sanscrit, Pracrit and Magadhi. The Sanscrit is the fundamental language and that of the Vedas; the Pracrit the vernacular language in many dialects, and the Magadhi or Misra is that of Ceylon and the islands.

King Edward VII has accepted from Scott Montagu, member of parliament, a present of a number of American bronze turkeys, which were imported into England in a wild state, but have adapted themselves very comfortably to their new surroundings, and have thrived remarkably at Mr. Montagu's place in Hampshire. The king's birds will be lodged at Sandringham.

The birthplace of our presidents are divided among the states as follows: Six have come from Virginia, five from Ohio, three from New York, two each from Massachusetts and North Carolina and one each from New Jersey, Kentucky, New Hampshire, Vermont, Pennsylvania and Tennessee. President McKinley is of Scotch-Irish ancestry; Vice President Roosevelt is of Holland-Dutch descent.

It may be news to some readers that English is the language of the Japanese foreign office, both in its intercourse with foreign diplomatists and its telegraphic correspondence with its own representatives abroad. All telegrams from Tokyo to the foreign agents of Japan are written and ciphered in English, and the replies are in the same language. The "Yankees of the East" evidently want their western civilization in the original package.

The following allegation in a bill for divorce against a wife was held by the Supreme court of Washington not to state any legal ground for divorce: "She was quarrelsome, vicious in disposition, murderous in threats against the plaintiff and his parents, hysterical and ungovernable in temper, crazy in her actions, and by her causeless and unprovoked boisterousness, screaming, hallooing and other wild conduct, by day and night, an intolerable nuisance to all her neighbors."

Graduates of the Naval Academy in Annapolis who have attained the highest rank have heretofore been sent abroad for a post-graduate course in naval architecture at Greenwich or Glasgow or the Ecole Polytechnique in France. It ought to be a matter of pride to Americans that hereafter they will study at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The Annapolis graduates have always taken the highest honors abroad. The authorities in Washington do not say that the foreign schools no longer have anything to teach our young men, but they do say that they have nothing which is not now taught as well or better here.

At the recent matriculation examinations of the University of Breslau, a young German peasant with his mother and sisters passed with honors. The mother came first on the entire list. In order to encourage the young man in his work, his mother and sister had since his childhood studied his lessons with him. A less spectacular version of family cooperation goes on daily in one of the most beautiful homes at a fashionable resort. Directly after breakfast the father and mother, two college daughters, one grown and one young son, join in a half-hour's "spelling down." Thanks to this little ruse, the boy, who several teachers had declared could never be taught to spell, is overcoming an ignorance which would have seriously crippled his collegiate course, and been a source of mortification all his life.

The "play" of intellect, to use a vacation pun, constitutes the delight of learning, and is often its truest inspiration. A young girl at a hotel table, some years ago, undertook to quiet a restless child by making for him little figures which she modeled from bread crumbs rubbed between her fingers. The rapidly growing procession of Noah's-ark animals attracted the attention of a gentleman opposite. It was the sculptor Thomas Ball, who afterward told the girl she had unusual talent, took her to his own studio, and taught her to model in clay and afterward to work in marble. An interesting side-light on the pretty incident is that the young girl had molded her figures undisturbed by a tableful of witnesses, and, on the other hand, Mr. Ball seated her in the studio with her back toward his own chair, because he "could not possibly work while anybody looked on."

Prof. N. C. Bruce, colored, of the Shaw University, in Raleigh, N. C., who was given the degree of A. M. by Bates College recently, graduated from that college in 1893. He was born in Virginia, and gained his early education with difficulty, working with a hoe in the summer and with his books in the winter. While in college, he sold books, worked on Maine farms in the summer, and acted as janitor of a Lewiston church. He was on the commencement programme at his graduation, and was the class-day orator.

Fair Yield But Not a Bumper

Spring Wheat Crop of Three States Estimated at 183,000,000 Bushels.

H. V. Jones, the crop expert, contributes the following to the Minneapolis Journal:

The three states of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota have raised 183,000,000 bushels of wheat in 1901. The estimated result is as follows:

	Acres.	Av. Bu.	Total Bu.
Minnesota..	6,250,000	12 1-2	78,000,000
N. Dakota..	5,200,000	14 1-2	75,000,000
S. Dakota..	3,000,000	10	30,000,000
Totals..	14,450,000	12 2-4	183,000,000

The acreage basis is about the same as last year, but South Dakota has been reduced in this estimate a little, and Minnesota and North Dakota have each been raised, so as to about offset the reduction made in South Dakota.

Estimates Too Low Last Year.

The wheat crop of 1901 has its interesting points, as did the crop of 1900. Last year there was a great unanimity of opinion in the Northwest and in Chicago that the yield of wheat in the three Northwest states was not above 100,000,000 bushels. The government placed the total on a basis of 90,000,000, and it was supported in this view by all the public estimators. My own judgment was 136,000,000, and the statistics of the distribution of the crop now available show 140,000,000 as the approximate total of the production in the three states last year. That was a season when a considerable crop was produced, notwithstanding the popular opinion that it was a small production.

Estimates Too High This Year.

The features of the crop this year is that the majority of estimators have erred in the opposite direction by putting the total yield much too high. The gossip has been all the year that the Northwest had a "bumper" yield. The fact is, a "bumper" crop, in the true sense, would not have been realized had there been no intense heat to blight the crop, but a total of perhaps 210,000,000 would have been raised, a total no longer "bumper" in the three states, because of the average increase since 1891. This is a safe conclusion, as proved by the average size of the wheat head this year; it could not, when filled, have produced a "bumper" yield for the whole area. There is wheat of splendid yield this year in the Northwest, but the area of heavy yield is quite limited in proportion to the acreage; the crop is distributed quite evenly.

North Dakota Saves the Day.

North Dakota has raised a fine crop of wheat—75,000,000 bushels. And yet there are marked defects in the Red River valley. But for the help of the counties west of the Cheyenne river and along the north boundary, the yield of North Dakota would not justify great enthusiasm. But those outside counties came to the rescue, and a fine yield has resulted.

In Minnesota and South Dakota the result is only fair. Minnesota produces practically the same amount as last year, and South Dakota produces less—not a less average, but a less yield, due to changes made in acreage.

With these general observations made let us look somewhat at the details of the crop.

There is, apparently, no important difference of opinion as to the yeild in North Dakota. The figures given here are one bushel lower per acre than the highest estimate of 80,000,000. My judgment, after four days' inspection of the crop in this state, confined to the damaged portion of the Red River valley, was that 70,000,000 was high enough. After ten days' inspection, I added one bushel per acre to the average yield, and placed the acreage at a high point.

Minnesota's Yield.

There may be an impression that Minnesota has produced a crop considerably in excess of last year, and to one who has not followed closely the changes of production area in the state, such an opinion is natural. The fault with it is this:

Last year the south 140 miles of the state produced heavy wheat averages, in the main, and it is here that there is a heavy wheat acreage, despite all opinions to the contrary. It was in these counties that the wheat was found last year on which to base the much-scoffed-at estimate of 80,000,000 for Minnesota. This year the production has changed from the southern counties to scattered sections all over the state. For instance, it is likely that the two counties showing the highest averages this year will be Carver or Sibley, in the south-central part, and Kittson, the most northern county. Between these two counties are Polk and Pope counties, which will be counties of low yield. It is easy to see at once that here is a very different condition than obtained last year, and we must figure accordingly.

The counties in the southeast part of the state did not produce heavily last year on account of drought effect, and they are moderate producers this year, on account of blight and of chinch bugs. These insects worked their way well up into Central Minnesota and, with the blight, reduced yields heavily. In the south-central counties the blight was the chief cause of injury. In the southwest and some of the western counties there are gains in yield this year over last; but the gain is small when compared with the loss in the other counties.

We now pass to the Red River counties of Minnesota, and find that in Norfions for the whole area are but little, if any, better than a year ago. Polk county has been a great sufferer from water and a large acreage, several miles square, located north of Crookston and well up to Warren, will not yield a bushel, a considerable area will not produce both bread and seed, and a still larger area will produce an average of about eight bushels. Eastern Polk and scattered localities in the county have a nice yield of wheat. The extreme west of the county, along the Red river, has some good yields, but the center has a very light yield, and the eastern averages are reduced sharply, when the county

Average Is Struck.

Marshall county will do a little better than Polk, but it has suffered from water, also, and a light average will result.

In Kittson county there is a good average of wheat, but the acreage is not large enough to help make up much of the deficiency in the valley. This brings us down to the Northern Pacific railroad, without yields to offset the loss from last year in the southern counties.

Becker and Wadena counties have good averages but small acreage. Otter Tail does very much better than last year, but Pope falls off again, and parts of Douglas will show the effects of blight, as will Stearns, though the latter county will have a fair average. Over on the west, Big Stone is light, but Traverse does better, and Wilkin is very good. The gain in all this area does not crowd the state total ahead of last year. We strike Renville, which may gain a bushel or two over last year's average, but several counties south have lost two to five bushels on their averages. Redwood falls behind, and we narrow down to Sibley and Carver for a gain. The timber districts west and northwest of Minneapolis will all show some fine wheat, but they will also show some surprisingly small yields.

It is fair, therefore, as the county yields show, to place Minnesota about on the basis of last year.

Conditions in South Dakota.

In South Dakota the conditions have been overestimated. Blight did serious work. The centers of production are changed from last year. The southern counties had good averages a year ago. This year they will run light, except around Parkston and along the Sioux Falls-Mitchell road, where there is a gain for a considerable area and a holding even with the production of last year. The James River valley and the Missouri slope were hurt by the heat, and yields will be very light. The Aberdeen district suffered a good deal. The northeastern counties have gained and held even. When the balance is struck, the yield of the state is reduced from last year, when it was 35,000,000, according to my figure.

The North Dakota Counties.

In North Dakota, the highest county average of wheat will center in Pembina, probably, although Walsh will make a fine showing. In Grand Forks, the average will begin to show some decline, but it will be good; in Traill, more decline; in Cass, only fair; in Richland, good. There are several sections in the Red River valley where they will not cut, and a large area in Cass and Traill will show a light average. Along the northern boundary good production continues to the Soo road, and in the west-central counties it is fair to good, which is true of the southern counties. The result is an estimated average for the state of nearly fifteen bushels.

An Auto Stage Line.

Wyoming is to have the first automobile stage line in the country.

It will be operated between Buffalo and Sheridan, and the vehicle will make the round trip of 100 miles every day. It will be a regular covered stage, with accommodations for nine passengers and their baggage, and when a stretch of level road is reached, or the passengers want to hurry up, it will be sent spinning along at the rate of eighteen or twenty miles per hour.

A ten-horse-power gasoline motor will be the propelling power, and with it the stage will weigh 1,500 pounds. Its cost will be $1 per pound. For nine months in the year the roads between Buffalo and Sheridan are hard and dry, and during the other three months of the year they are generally in fair condition.

To See De Cotton Growin'.

Aunt Sylvia Reed, ninety years old, an ex-slave, has been saved from going to the town poor house, and has been sent by friends back to Dixie, as she wished to spend the remainder of her life where she lived as a child.

The letter she wrote to Miss Emily Stuart Webb, the poetess, tells of her joy at getting back to Waynesboro, Va. She wrote:

"I got home at lass an' foun' de ole hous', but mos' all de old folks gone. I wants to see de cotton a-growin' agin' befo' I go; den I shall be ready to jine all dem dat's sleepin' in de ole berrying groun' under de hill."

Miss Weed, aided by James G. Wilson, one of the selectmen of the town, sent "Aunty" Reed to her old home.—Greenwich (Conn.) Special to New York World.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME

ITEMS OF INTEREST FOR MAIDS AND MATRONS.

Happiest of Girls—The Unrestricted Life of Victoria of Wales—Is a Daughter of King Edward—Travels Under Incognito of Miss Johnson.

A KING'S DAUGHTER.

The happiest royal girl in England is 33 years old, lives where she pleases, goes where she pleases, under what name she pleases (usually choosing that of "Miss Johnson") and stays unmarried as she pleases, says the Philadelphia Press.

All her life Princess Victoria Alexander Olga Mary, second daughter of King Edward, has plucked the roses of royalty without touching its thorns. Her girlhood was singularly free from the restrictions of court etiquette, while she was, of course, spared the ofttimes tearful struggle to be first, which falls to the lot of ordinary children with plenty of self-assertive playmates. Probably no one ever snatched her doll. Think of it!

A Wise Mother.

That wise woman, the Princess of Wales, is said to have allowed her daughters to grow up nearly into womanhood without wearing corsets. At all events, she allowed them free out-of-door rough-and-tumble life among the dogs and horses, and in the field and gardens of Sandringham. Princess Victoria is now noted for her repose of demeanor and "statuesque" expression—a word which with non-royal girls would probably be replaced by another one, also beginning with an S. But as a long-legged little tomboy of 10 she could "skin" up trees or dart under fences with the best of them.

When she grew up she threw herself with enthusiasm into athletics of all sorts—fencing, bicycling and so forth—and not long ago had the surprising experience of being stopped by a sergeant in the grounds of Windsor Castle for wheeling on a forbidden path. Cooking, wood carving, repousse work—there is nothing which the white fingers of this most energetic and independent of princesses cannot do.

The Tramway Girl.

At a certain Swiss summer resort she was known as "The Tramway Girl," owing to the intense childlike delight which she exhibited in riding around on the trolley cars. Her fellow guests at the hotel did not, however, know they were thus designating the daughter of a king, as "Mrs. and Miss Johnson of England" was the name by which she and her ex-governess companion, whose name really is Johnson, were put down on the hotel register.

That name of Miss Johnson is evidently dear to the princess, for up to date she has not changed it for any other. The fact may be the hidden thorn in her rosy pathway, after all. On the other hand, she may reflect that her sister, Maud, or as she is usually called, "Harry" of Denmark, is being made miserable by a mother-in-law over in Denmark. But rumor never lets her name quite alone. There is always some European prince suing at her door, or coming to sue, or retreating, rejected and dejected, according to foreign correspondents. The latest of these reports links her name to that of Lord Revelstoke, her childhood's playmate. Her aunt, Princess Louise of Argyle, married out of royalty and into considerable domestic happiness, and who knows whether England's bachelor princess may not be meditating the same step!

WESTCOTT AND THE CORSETS.

(From the Literary Era.)

That the author of "David Harum" was conspicuous for his mellow baritone voice is little thought of by those who only know him as an author. It was a voice so sweet, so rich and so flexible, that it could play any prank with the emotions of those who heard it, and had Mr. Westcott chosen to devote his life to music he would have become a noted singer. But he contented himself with the modest position of basso in a quartet choir in Syracuse, and in delighting his own special friends by singing in a drawing room. He was fond of telling of an occasion on which he was invited to sing at a concert in one of the smaller towns of western New York. On this perfunctory jaunt—which was quite without interest to the fastidious Mr. Westcott—he was saved from such a hotel as that which insulted John Lenox by the hospitality of the man who organized the concert, a person of much local importance. The musical affair passed off satisfactorily with the help of the neighborhood talent, assisted by Mr. Westcott's rare voice. As Mr. Westcott was about to retire his host came timidly to his room, carrying two long paper boxes. "I leave the house so early in the morning to go to my factory," the man explained, "that I'm afraid I may not see you, but I want to give you something for your singing tonight. Now, here's two pair of the very best real whalebone corsets that our factory turns out, and I want you to take them home with you." When Mr. Westcott found he could not even protest effectually, his sense of humor came to his relief, and the fastidious man of cultivated extravagance stalked home laughing, the next day, with two pair of useless corsets in exchange for his matchless songs.

STRANGE CUSTOMS THAT STILL EXIST IN MANCHURIA.

That Little Known Corner of the World, Which Is as Large as Sixteen of Our States—Abounds in Wild Animals—Primitive Means of Transportation.

It is customary to think of Manchuria, that oriental province upon which the paws of the Russian bear now rest, as a little corner of the world. It is nothing of the kind. If it could be lifted and set down within the borders of the United States it would cover all the far eastern states, together with New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. Its area is 400,000 square miles. It is situated in the northeastern part of China, directly south of the Amur or Great river. Well does that stream deserve its name, for, emptying into the Pacific at the Sea of Okhotsk, it extends backward through nearly one-third of the vast extent of Asia. On the east Manchuria is bounded by a strip of Siberia and by the highland and solitudes which separate it from Corea, the hermit kingdom. On the south is the Yellow sea and westward it stretches away toward Mongolia, without natural frontiers. In Manchuria everything is still primitive. The mule carts, which form the only means of transportation, have clumsy, nail-studded wheels, with axles as big as kegs, and which bump along over unseen stones in the same ruts which have been followed for a century. Wives are still bought in the market place, like calves and dogs, and are taken home, clad in gorgeous colored silks and wearing headdresses of tinsel and artificial flowers. There are 12,000,000 people in Manchuria living in three provinces, Shinking, Kirin and Tsi-tsi-har. The first is the largest and best known. The chief city, Mukden, is known as "the affluent capital," and has a population as large as Washington. It is surrounded by a low mud wall, ten miles in circuit, within which is another wall, three miles around, thirty-five or forty feet high and fifteen feet in width. The city is like Pekin on a smaller scale. The streets are wide and clean and the large, well-built shops, with their counters and other arrangements, indicate great trade. There are indications of prosperity everywhere and the city is regarded as one of the best in China. Over toward the Corean border there is less civilization. It has been the custom for many centuries to hold a fair in one of the towns near the Yalu river, which commands the Corean trade. This fair is under the supervision of officers and soldiers. The Manchurians sell dogs, cats, pipes, leather, stag's horns, copper and horses. They take from the Coreans baskets, rice, cooking utensils, corn, swine, paper mats and oxen. All the trading must be done in five hours, which gives the fair the appearance of a Donnybrook gathering. Just before the sun sets all the Coreans are driven back across the frontier. Manchuria is said to resemble the province of Quebec, except that within its borders are enormous ranges of mountains which rise as high as 10,000 feet in the air. The larger part of the territory is covered with forests, which abound in wild animals, the capture of which affords employment, clothing and food to thousands of hunters. There are bears, deer, wolves and even tigers in the forest fastnesses, while in the more open portions are myriads of lark, pheasants and even the familiar crow. The condor is the largest bird of prey and rivals its brother of the Andes in fierceness and strength. So abundant is the game that 2,400 stags are annually furnished to the Chinese emperor that he may eat simply the delicate bit of meat found in the fleshy part of the tail. The rivers abound in carp, sturgeon, salmon and pike. Down on the coast there is a tribe which clothes itself in garments made of fish skins. The natives eat enormously, beef and pork being their favorite meats. They are also said not to be averse to eating dogs and horses, and among those who raise silk worms the contents of the cocoons that have been boiled is an epicurean delicacy highly prized.—Globe.

A First-Class Hair Cut.

The farmer from the country was angry. He had gone into a barber shop near the depot, and the barber was trying to rob him. The barber asked him 25 cents for a hair cut. The farmer roared. He led the barber outside and pointed to the sign. "Ye can't bunkor me," he yelled. "That's yer old sign. Fifteen cents for a first-class hair cut. Ye can't get around that." "Look here, my friend," said the barber, diplomatically, "that sign says 15 cents for a first-class hair cut all right. But you haven't got first-class hair." The farmer meditated a minute. "Well, I guess that's right," he said. And he paid the bill without another word.—Utica Globe.

A Miniature Kangaroo.

A miniature kangaroo has been discovered in the far west. It strides around like a kangaroo, making great jumps on its hind legs, which are long and powerful. It also has a surprisingly long tail, which adds to its resemblance to the marsupial after which it is named.

The Newfoundland seal fishery this year will be one of the most successful in years.

DEVELOPMENT OF STEAMERS.

Atlantic Voyage One-Third as Long as in 1840.

In 1840 the Cunard steamship Britannia, built of wood, propelled by paddle wheels, maintained a sea speed of about 8½ knots. Her steam pressure was 12 pounds per square inch. She was 207 feet long, about 2,000 tons displacement; her engines developed about 750 horse power, and her coal consumption was about 40 tons per day, or about five pounds of coal per indicated horse power per hour. She carried a full spread of sail. In 1871 the White Star steamer Oceanic (the first of the name), occupied a leading position. She was iron-built, propelled by a single screw and maintained a sea speed of about 14½ knots. The steam press[illegible] 65 pounds per square inch, [illegible] her engines were compound. [illegible] 520 feet long, of about 7,200 tons displacement, and her engines developed 3,000 horse power. She burned about 65 tons of coal daily, or about two pounds per indicated horse power per hour. She also carried a considerable spread of sail. In 1899 the White Star steamship Teutonic appeared propelled by twin screws and without rail power. She is steel built and maintains a sea speed of about 20 knots, with a steam pressure of 180 pounds per square inch and with triple expansion engines. She is about 565 feet long, 16,000 tons displacement, 17,000 horse power. Her coal consumption is about 300 tons daily, or less than 1¾ pounds per indicated horse power per hour. In 1894 the Cunard steamship Campania began her service. She is 600 feet long, 20,000 tons displacement, 28,000 horse power when going at her full speed of 22 knots, and burns about 500 tons of coal daily. The new Oceanic of the White Star line is 704 feet long and displaces over 25,000 tons. Her speed is about 22 knots. The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse is 25 feet longer than the Campania and has a sea speed of 23½ knots. The Deutschland is 660 feet long, 23,000 tons displacement, 33,000 horse power, with a speed of 23 knots. It is to be noticed that to gain about three knots an hour in speed the displacement of the Teutonic has been increased 50 per cent and the engine power and coal consumption doubled. In sixty years, therefore, speed has been increased from 8½ to 23 knots; the time of the voyage has been reduced to about one-third of what it was in 1840.

FULFILLING A PREDICTION.

Sultan of Morocco Frightened by Foreign Ministers Death.

While Sir William Kirby Green was the British minister to Morocco he was suffering both from a stroke of paralysis and from an affection of the heart. Hall Caine dramatically describes the closing incident of his diplomatic career. Day after day Sir William met Mulai Hassan to discuss with him the Cape Juby claims, and every time the business was put off. Sir William was a man of temper, and the delay irritated him. At length in the midst of one of his ceremonious interviews with the sultan, while Mulai Hassan smiled and waved his hand, and insisted that the business could wait till to-morrow, Sir William lost all command of himself, and broke in on his majesty's dismissal with these words: "My lord, listen. You do not know what you are doing, but I will tell you. You are killing me. Yes, and any of these days I may fall dead at your feet. I might fall dead at your feet now. And if that should happen, remember one thing, my lord, my country will call you to account." Mulai Hassan listened, and spoke not a word. No man had ever addressed him thus before, and his vizier and ministers and troops of servants, who bowed and crouched before him, had heard it all. His fine black face twitched slightly, and he said: "Let me finish the business immediately." It was settled then and there. In the middle of that night Sir William died. When the news of his death was brought to the sultan fear seemed to take possession of him. It was evident that he remembered the words the minister had addressed to him the day before. Possibly he was glad that he had at least finished the business that had brought Sir William so often into his presence.

Proposal Forty Years Old.

A wealthy Glasgow merchant died recently. He was a most methodical man in business matters and his domestic life was a singularly happy one. In going through his papers his eldest son came across a copy of the letter in which his father had proposed to his mother some forty years ago. The letter inclosed balance sheets of his business for the preceding five years, and a clear statement of his financial position and prospects. It set forth his affection in terms of studied moderation, and asked the lady to enter with him upon a life partnership. The postscript, however, was remarkable for its caution. It ran: "P. S.—This offer will be binding on me for one week from this date."

This Plan Should Be Emulated.

One of the big New York department stores has leased a house at Long Branch which was occupied during the entire summer by the female employes of the establishment. Each week a batch of them was sent to the resort for a vacation. They receive full salary while there and have all their expenses paid. There are all kinds of amusements, and for a week the girls have one round of pleasure. It is the most enjoyable week of the year to many of them.

Curvature of the Spine, Its Causes and Symptoms — An Instrument Which Simplifies Instruction in Telegraphy—Photographing a Dragon-fly.

CURVATURE OF THE SPINE.

In infancy and childhood lateral curvature of the spine develops very readily. In some cases, as will be presently shown, the causes are very slight; so that, to use the words of one of our most eminent medical authors, "It is really wonderful that most of us are tolerably straight."

A slight asymmetry of one of the vertebrae of which the back-bone is built up, or an abnormal development or lack of development, of one of the muscles which hold it upright, is sufficient to produce a deviation from its proper position.

This of itself would be of comparatively small moment if the organs contained within the trunk were not affected by any considerable change from its proper upright position. A lateral curvature cannot exist without a shortening of the trunk, just as a bow when bent measures less from tip to tip than when it is unstrung. This shortening in turn necessarily implies a crowding together of the organs contained within the trunk.

Constitutional weakness naturally tends to make lateral curvature of the spine more readily acquired. Of specific disorders which produce the same effect, rickets is perhaps the chief.

With the knowledge that lateral deviation is thus easily caused, it is not to be wondered at that causes apparently very slight are frequently the only ones discoverable to account for certain of the many cases coming under the physician's notice. A baby can scarcely support its back before it is three or four months old. Yet the proud nurse or mother not infrequently sets it erect, or carries it on her arm without a proper support, at a much earlier age.

Children who go to school at six or seven years of age are often compelled to sit on a badly shaped bench; sometimes with no support for the back, during school hours. The muscles become tired, and the child leans to one side, usually to the right.

A narrow space between the seat and the desk obliges the child to push between them, so that, in girls particularly, a drag is exerted on one shoulder; or the skirts form an uneven cushion, tilting the spinal column out of the perpendicular. Even in grown men and women occupations requiring a one-sided muscular action affect the vertebrae, and therefore the shape of the spine. In children the much softer bones are still more readily affected.

Parents may therefore be pardoned if they insist on abundance of room and considerable lack of restraint for young children in the schoolroom.

Teachers have frequently to take the initiative in matters of school hygiene, especially when their pupils are from homes in crowded, unsanitary city tenements.

Lateral curvature is rarely congenital. It is in most cases preventable, and cases taken in hand early are usually checked by strict observance of hygienic measures.

THE OMNIGRAPH.

An instrument which is designed to simplify instruction in telegraphy, and to impart in a comparatively short time a complete knowledge of the Morse alphabet, has recently been introduced by an inventor of New York. Patents have been applied for. The Omnigraph, as the instrument is called, consists of a baseboard on which are secured an ordinary key and sounder, between which a disk is mounted, formed on its periphery with teeth. A spring contact adjacent to the wheel engages the peripheral teeth of the disk. Although irregular, the arrangement of the teeth is arbitrary. For if the disk be rotated by means of a small crank shaft geared with the disk shaft, the spring contact is forced outwardly by the teeth, but drops back by its own elasticity, and thus makes and breaks the circuit. The experienced telegraph operator detecting these makes and breaks at the sounder, recognizes them as the dots and dashes of the Morse alphabet. A close inspection of the disk would reveal to him that the teeth are so arranged as to spell the sentence, "John quickly extemporised five tow bags." If the disk be rotated forwardly, this sentence, thus oddly worded to include every letter in the alphabet, is ticked off at the sounder; if rotated in the opposite direction the sentence will be telegraphed backward.

The disk is completely under the control of the students. It can be rotated as slowly as desired; or it can be so rapidly turned that its curious sentence will be received at the sounder with a speed that would open the eyes of a good operator. Moreover, the message on the disk is transmitted with a distinctness and faultlessness which the most perfect operator can never hope to attain. At first blush it might seem that the student simply learns one sentence forward and backward, and that the instrument is a good teacher only within very narrow limits. But this disk can be partially rotated forward and backward any number of times, in any place, so that the letter to be transmitted can not possibly be anticipated. Thus the student learns how to receive a cipher message, the meaning of which he can not know.

When sufficient proficiency has been obtained in receiving messages from the sounder, the student can learn to transmit messages in the regular method by means of the key which forms part of the apparatus.

PHOTOGRAPHING A DRAGON-FLY.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Microscopical Society Mr. Enoch exhibited a series of photographs which showed every stage of the process of metamorphosis by which the dragon fly emerges from the form of the nymph and which in this particular case occupied six hours. But at one period the emergence was so rapid that three photographs had to be made within six seconds. In the larval form, called the nymph, the dragon fly lives at the bottom of ponds and streams, but as the metamorphosis approaches, it climbs up the stem of a plant, hooks its feet fast, and awaits the inevitable change.

ONE OF VESUVIUS' BOMBS.

During an explosion in the crater of Mount Vesuvius on May 9, 1900, one of the volcanic bombs hurled skyward, and the largest one observed, attained an elevation of a third of a mile, and then fell back upon the mountain. As it now lies, its height exceeds that of a man standing beside it, and its estimated weight is thirty tons. Mr. Manteucci, the geologist, says that the energy of the explosion of steam that threw this huge projectile must have equaled about 600,000 horse power. When the masses of partially fluid lava from which such bombs are formed rise in the air they rotate, and are thus caused to assume a more or less globular shape.

ELECTRICITY IN MAIL TUBES.

Experts appointed to investigate the workings of the pneumatic tube system of carrying mails in cities report that on the present basis of cast the system is too expensive. It adds that a system to be operated by electricity is in process of development and bids fair to be successful. This is simply a three-rail trolley road, operated in a tube. The tracks would be laid, insulated and bonded before the top is fastened down. The carriers would be built with slightly rounded corners, so as to conform to the turns made at street corners. The carriers and their motors would be operated between guides. By cutting the tracks and the introduction of a system of looping well understood by electrical engineers, the speed of the carriers could be lessened at corners and also when approaching stations. Electrical engineers say it is feasible and could be operated for any distance.

FIRE FROM WASTE PAPER.

The deterioration in the quality of paper increases the liability of fire wherever waste paper is accumulated in any quantity. Most modern paper is made from wood and other vegetable fibres which chemically are not very different from the component material of a hayrick. If the waste paper is stacked in large quantities and especially if it happens to be a little damp, heating takes place just as with a prematurely stacked hayrick, and spontaneous combustion may at any time break out in flame, as it has often been known to do in the farmyard, and of late years the greatest care and vigilance has been necessary to guard against it.

SWEDEN'S SCHOOL GARDENS.

Scientific gardening is taught in the national schools of Sweden and in the seminaries for the education of national school teachers. There is a school garden in nearly every rural school district in the kingdom. The garden is placed near the schoolhouse, and the children receive practical instruction in the cultivation of plants, berries, flowers, herbs and fruits; the management of hotbeds, greenhouses, and so forth. The parishes are required to furnish the necessary ground for the gardens, and trees and shrubs are annually given to the children to be planted at their homes.

NOTES ON SCIENCE.

An attachment is provided in Sweden by which the secrecy of the telephone line is assured. The apparatus, which is rented at a moderate rent, indicates whether the telephone operator is listening to the conversation or not.

Mr. Marconi has a motor carriage which is equipped with a folding cylinder on top of the car and devices for the transmission of wireless telegraphic signaling. Motor cars fitted with this device are to be used in the forthcoming military maneuvers of the British army.

All British battle ships and cruisers in commission for home stations, and all vessels being prepared for the Reserve, Training and Channel squadrons, are to be fitted with wireless telegraphy apparatus. All future battle ships and cruisers sent to the Mediterranean are also to be so equipped.

CLAIM A VICTORY

IRONMASTERS ARE HIGHLY ELATED OVER THE STRIKE SITUATION.

THREE UNIONS REFUSE TO STRIKE

Operations in Several Plants Are Maintained Without Trouble—Strike Leaders Assert That Their Cause Is Making Satisfactory Progress and They Have Great Hopes of Success.

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 13. — The ironmasters are claiming victory in the great steel strike. They base their claim upon the refusal of the Amalgamated men at South Chicago, Joliet and Bay View to obey the general strike order of President Shaffer and their success in maintaining operations in other plants where it was anticipated that there would be serious trouble. The strike leaders meet the claims of victory with the assertion that their cause is making satisfactory progress and that they will show themselves masters of the situation before the contest has progressed much further. They do not conceal their disappointment at the refusal of their Western brethren to join with them in the strike, but none of the leaders would discuss the defections. President Shaffer refused to meet the newspaper men who sought him, and kept within the seclusion of his home. The other leaders who were seen intimated that there would be developments to-day and throughout the week that would materially change the situation. They would not say, however, what they had in mind or what their cause was

To Gain in Strength.

It was said they were continuing upon strong aid from the American Federation of Labor and other organizations of union labor, but those bodies have not yet given any public intimation of what they will do. The Amalgamated association has developed great strength throughout the Wheeling district and has made gains in some Pennsylvania districts. The strike headquarters were closed yesterday and it was claimed that no reports were being received from the outlying districts as to the progress of the strike except in a general way. The steel managers were in communication with their superintendents and district managers and at 11 o'clock made public the result of their reports. The latter showed that South Chicago, Joliet and Bay View, Milwaukee, had voted to stay in; that the Ohio works of the National Steel company at Youngstown and the King, Gilbert & Warner plant of the National Steel company at Columbus had that the Homestead, Edgar Thompson, Duquesne, Upper and Lower Union, Howard and Werkle works of the Carnegie group, employing more than 15,000 men, had resumed without trouble; that the converging and blooming mills of the National Tube company at McKeesport had started without difficulty and that Bellaire had been only partially crippled. They were also advised that the men of the Boston rolling plant at McKeesport had notified the company they would go out to-day, and while the National Tube plant at McKeesport would be started in the morning, it was certain many men would go out. They were also notified that their Wheeling plant was crippled and it was uncertain what would be done there. Their advices also say that the Clark mill here, which has been running non-union for several days, would be started up as usual this morning and there was no doubt of its successful operation. The steel officials were elated over their showing at the Carnegie plants and in Illinois, Ohio and Wisconsin, and expressed confidence in speedy victory over the strikers.

Resumed Without Trouble;

NEGRO BURNED TO DEATH.

Mob Takes Summary Vengeance on the Ravisher of a White Woman.

Savannah, Ga., Aug. 13. — Eighteen miles south of Savannah, near the Seaboard Air Line railway, the charred trunk of the body of Joe Washington, the negro ravisher of Mrs. J. J. Clark, is all that remains to tell the story of the tragedy of Saturday night. Washington was captured at Liberty City and was brought to Way Station, near which place his crime was committed. He was carried before Mrs. Clark who identified him positively as the negro who had assaulted her. The proof of guilt was absolute. The negro's positive identification by his victim sealed his fate. He walked to his death without a tremor and met it without prayer or appeal for mercy. He admitted his guilt of crimes incident to the principal one, but to the end he stubbornly refused to acknowledge that he had assaulted Mrs. Clark. Washington's victim had been asked by the leaders of the mob to apply the torch to the pyre, but she refused. Her husband was selected in her stead. Washington looked straight into the eyes of Clark as the latter stooped to apply the match. The man showed no signs on his face of the agony he must have suffered, and met death without a groan.

Treasure Is Missing.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 13.—A telegram received by Capt. A. J. Carroll from the Apollo Mining Company of San Francisco states that a gold brick valued at $20,000 which was shipped from Unga, Alaska, via the steamer Newport about July 20, has not arrived in that city. The treasure should have reached San Francisco several days ago.

Deadly Duel About a Girl.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 13.—In the Bowman neighborhood Frederick Westbrook and Robert Groin, two young white men who had been paying attention to a young lady, met on the public road while Westbrook was taking the young lady to church. A duel followed in which Westbrook was killed. Groin afterward committed suicide.

At Huntington, W. Va., Owen Ross, a city patrol wagon driver, was shot four times by John Farr, a prominent citizen. Ross will die.

Naples, Aug. 12.—Sig. Crispi died at 7:45 last evening. He was surrounded by the members of his family and several intimate friends. The news was immediately telegraphed to King Victor Emanuel and Queen Helena. The

REQUIEM FOR DOWAGER EMPRESS

Impressive Services Held in the Presence of King Edward and Emperor William.

Cronberg, Aug. 13. — People flocked into Cronberg from an early hour yesterday to see the august personages who attended the requiem service over the remains of Dowager Empress Frederick. Throughout the night and again yesterday the officers of the regiments of which the deceased was honorary colonel had stood guard over the coffin. Every window, balcony and housetop was filled with people awaiting the arrival of the imperial personages. Sir Frank Lascelles, the British ambassador, was among the first to arrive. He took a seat facing the coffin, which was covered with wreaths. Gradually the church filled with officers in splendid uniform and ladies wearing deep mourning. The congregation included the duke of Connaught, the duke of Cambridge and several members of the British royal household, Count von Buelow, Count von Waldersee, Dr. Spielhagen and Count von Lindequist. At 4 o'clock the roll of muffled drums announced the arrival of Emperor William and King Edward, who had driven together from Homburg. The emperor, wearing the black uniform of the "Empress' Own Posen Hussars," led Queen Alexandra into the church, while King Edward in blue uniform of the King Edward Prussian Dragoons, conducted Empress Augusta Victoria. Princess Victoria, with Crown Prince Frederick William and a numerous suite followed. Dr. Dugander read the service and delivered a short oration in which he extolled the virtues of the deceased.

SHAMROCK II. IS HERE.

Lipton's Second Challenger Makes a Remarkable Trip.

Sandy Hook, N. J., Aug. 13. — Shamrock II., Sir Thomas Lipton's second chalenger for the America's cup, in tow of her consort, the big steam yacht Erin, arrived off Sandy Hook lightship shortly after 11 o'clock last night and anchored for the night just inside the lightship half an hour later. A newspaper tug and the tugboat Jas. R. Lawrence, with David Barrie, Sir Thomas' personal representative in this country aboard, had been cruising off Sandy Hook for two days awaiting the appearance of the foreign cup-hunter. When off the lightship the Erin burned her coston signals, green and red, with a green star, and the tugs ran alongside. Greetings on both sides were hearty, but beyond saying that the yacht had encountered fine weather neither Capt. Matthews of the Erin nor Capt. Sycamore of the challenger would give details of the trip.

SAVE TEN LIVES.

Heroic Work of Four Young Men in Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 13.—Ten persons were rescued from drowning in the lake at the Barry avenue and Diversey boulevard bathing beaches by four young men who risked their lives in the undertaking. Of those saved one was a woman and the others were boys and young men. The rescuers were Peter Baer, Charles Maxer, Peter Andrews and James Egan.

Rome, N. Y., Aug. 13.—While lying in bed suffering from injuries received by falling from a horse, Alvin Seaton, ten years old, of Glenmore, was murdered by his mother, who cut his throat from ear to ear with a razor. The woman was temporarily insane and alone in the house with her son.

Storms Cause Much Damage.

Tucson, Ariz., Aug. 13.—Rainstorms continue to rage in Southeastern Arizona and Northern Sonoma. The road from Benson to Guaymas was badly washed out, stopping trains. A hurricane and rainstorm visited Tucson, totally destroying the gas works and leaving the city without gas. Several large smokestacks and buildings were blown down and a large number of trees destroyed. The damage is considerable.

SMOOTH WORKERS

BOSTON POLICE CAPTURE TWO ALLEGED EXPERT "BADGER" WORKERS.

HAVE LONG CRIMINAL RECORDS

Evidence Secured Shows Them to Be More Than Ordinarily Adroit in Crime—Diamond Rings, Jewelry of All Descriptions and Pawn Tickets Galore Found in Their Possession—Many Aliases.

Boston, Aug. 13.—The police have under arrest for the Chicago officers two expert "badger workers," and the evidence accumulated since Saturday, together with the confession the woman is said to have made, makes it appear that the prisoners are more than ordinarily adroit in crime. The woman is Nellie Pentony, with aliases Nellie Watson, May Dunn and "Blonde" Nellie, and her partner is John Pentony, alias John Warner, alias John Barr. Upon being searched at police headquarters the woman's tiny pocketbook, concealed in her dress, yielded seven diamond rings and a diamond studded locket and pawn tickets for diamonds pawned in New York city, Buffalo, Chicago and Cleveland. On searching the room which the couple had occupied, jewelry and other articles were found. The arrest of the couple came about by accident, the woman being taken a few nights ago for night walking. She was fined in court and was sent to Deer Island in default of bail. Her husband secured cash bail and Saturday got her release, coming to the city from the island with her. After the woman's arrest Chief Inspector Watts was notified from Chicago that and diamond "snatchers" had come east and were thought to be in Boston. The description furnished seemed to fit the woman, but the officers were not certain about the man. When Pentony and the woman stepped off the Deer Island boat they were escorted to police headquarters and were given an opportunity to tell their history. The story both told was a smooth one, but when the woman was confronted with the Bertillion measurements and pictures taken of her in St. Louis May 29, 1897, when arrested for larceny, she admitted that her part of the story was wrong. The couple were accordingly locked up for a hearing. The police say that four pawn tickets obtained in Boston were for jewelry pledged for $150. Fifteen tickets for jewelry pledged in other places were for diamond rings and lockets. In the room of the couple were two satchels. In the man's satchel were articles and pawn tickets for jewelry stolen from houses in this vicinity and a gold watch picked from a man's pocket in Lynn. Pentony admitted having been arrested at different times in New York and Chicago and at the former place an indictment is held against him.

Two "Badger Workers"

WOULD SELL THEIR BODIES.

Chicago Doctor Finds Many People Who Want Money.

Chicago, Aug. 13.—Dr. Zieglar, who advertised for the bodies of 400 human beings on which he could operate, has found many persons who are willing to accept his grim offer. Men and women of all conditions of life—some for the money, some for the sake of science, and some who are tired of the trials of life—have written to the physician and asked that he meet them and seal the bargain. Dr. Zeigler was kept busy all day answering telephone calls, reading letters and meeting those who called in person to sell all but their souls for the price of a cart horse. Dr. Zeigler expressed the belief that within the six-month limit he has set he will obtain 400 bodies. Dr. Zeigler's search for bodies arises from his desire to prove his contention that surgery can be performed without anaesthesia.

MULES FOR GREAT BRITAIN.

$5,000,000 of John Bull's Money Goes to Missouri and Kansas.

Kansas City, Aug. 13.—Col. Skinner of the British army, one of the English officers who has been stationed in the United States since the outbreak of the Boer war buying horses and mules, returned to Kansas City from New Orleans yesterday. With the shipments just made from Kansas City to Cape Town the British government has spent $1,000,000 in Kansas City for horses and mules for service in South Africa. Col. Skinner says that approximately 100,000 animals have been shipped from this vicinity through the port of New Orleans during the past three years. The average price paid for these animals is $50 a head, making the total expenditure $5,000,000 in Missouri and Kansas alone.

Insurgents Make Trouble.

Kingston, Aug. 13. — According to mail advices received here from Colon there was a series of engagements last week in the neighborhood of Panama and the government was experiencing some difficulty in keeping out the insurgents. Gen. Alban, commanding the government forces, had arrived at Cartagena to gather troops for service on the isthmus. Col. Abel Muriel, Gen. Uribe's aide, was still in prison when the steamer which brought this news left Cartagena.

Fire in an Indiana Town.

AN OPERATOR'S BLUNDER.

It Caused All the Bond Trouble for Yankton County.

Yankton, S. Dak., Aug. 13. — Emory Morris of Elk Point, in a recent interview, claimed that a telegraph operator caused the Dakota Southern bond muddle which caused Yankton county so much trouble for so many years and gave it for a short time the reputation of having repudiated its debts. It happened this way:

An extraordinary session of the legislature was called in 1873 to act upon the question of aid and right of way from Sioux City to Yankton for the Dakota Southern railway. In order that the legislature might be on the safe side in the matter it telegraphed the attorney general of the United States asking him if the action of the Dakota legislature in voting aid and right of way to the Dakota Southern would be authorized by law. The answer to that query that left the office of the attorney general at Washington read: "In the opinion of the attorney general the action of the legislature is unauthorized." When the message reached the Missouri Valley office of the telegraph company it was all right, but when it left that office it read: "In the opinion of the attorney general the action of the legislature is authorized." Upon that authority the legislature proceeded to grant right-of-way and aid in the interest of the railroad from the east line of the territory to Yankton. Subsequently the mistake in the telegram was discovered, but it was so much subsequently that the legislature had passed the bill, and the harm had been done. For years afterward Yankton county injured her reputation by repudiating the bonds issued to build her first railroad.

SHUNNED BY TRAMPS.

North Dakota Town Provides Them With Work.

Wahpeton, N. D., Aug. 13.—This city has instituted a new way of dealing with the ordinary tramp or vagrant. Heretofore they have been arrested and placed in the jail to lay out their fines. This seemed to be just what they wanted, for they were fed and did not have to go to the trouble of asking for a hand-out, and had plenty of nice cool shade to rest in. The policy now is to make that class of men work on the streets for about ten days each, and it is wonderful how that undesirable class of men have disappeared since the penalty has changed.

CHARGED WITH LARCENY.

Two Youths From Minneapolis Arrested in Northfield.

Northfield, Minn., Aug. 13. — Two young men under eighteen years of age, claiming to be from Minneapolis, were arrested here on the charge of petty larceny. They have been in the city for several days, making their headquarters at the St. Paul house. Personal articles were missed from the rooms and suspicion fell upon the two. An investigation led to the finding of missing clothing and jewelry in their possession.

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 13.—C. M. Buffington of St. Paul was arrested here. He is charged with swindling the Singer Sewing Machine company at St. Paul. Deputy Sheriff Johnson of St. Paul arrived here and with the local police placed the man under arrest. Buffington is charged with selling machines in St. Paul and retaining the money collected.

FALLS UNDER TRAIN.

Stranger Instantly Killed in Attempting to Board Train.

Appleton, Minn., Aug. 13.—While attempting to board a moving train a stranger, whose name is supposed to be Fred Schults, fell under the wheels and was instantly killed. There was nothing to identify him except a letter dated in 1891, stating that he had been employed in the mills at Kerkhoven, Minn.

To Prevent an Epidemic.

Milwaukee, Aug. 13.—The state board of health of Wisconsin, co-operating with that of Minnesota, will make an effort at the joint meeting of the two boards next Tuesday at Duluth to induce lumbermen of the two states to make a condition of employment that all men who work in the camps shall be vaccinated before being received. The action is taken in view of a threatened epidemic of smallpox the coming winter.

Ore Train Wrecked.

McKinley, Minn., Aug. 13. — By a wreck on the Duluth & Iron Range railway one locomotive was damaged and seven cars were wrecked. An ore train was coming from the mines at Virginia, and at the junction here with the tracks to Eveleth, ran into the side of another ore train bound for the Royal mines, with the above result. No one was injured, but traffic was delayed several hours.

DISASTER FEARED

SERIOUS EARTHQUAKES THOUGHT TO HAVE OCCURRED IN ALASKA.

MUCH WORSE THAN THE LAST ONE

Seismograph in the Meteorological Office at Victoria, B. C., Records the Heaviest Disturbances Ever Recorded, Lasting Twelve Hours—At One Time It Assumed Immense Proportions.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 13.—Bayne Reed, the superintendent of the Victoria meterological office, reports that in all probability news will soon be received of a series of very serious earthquakes in the Alaska region on the morning of Friday, Aug. 9.

The seismograph, or earthquake recorder, which is part of the equipment of this office and which was installed here in July, 1898, gives very clear details of these shocks, and the photographic records show the disturbances to have been the heaviest registered in this office. From the size of the waves and their peculiar formation it is probable that the earthquake

Occurred in Alaska.

The movements are very similar to those which were recorded on Sept. 10, 1899, and Oct. 9, 1900, both of which earthquakes so seriously affected Skagway. Unlike these two, which began abruptly and with little or no warning, this record shows preliminary tremors and quakes nearly four hours before the maximum or extreme severity was felt. The preliminary tremors occurred at 1:20 a. m., Victoria time, and continued until 4:03. The pendulum in this interval recorded several oscillations and three millimeters in amplitude. The beam then remained quiet until 5:15, when another disturbance commenced, which rapidly until 6:15, then the swing of the pendulum had completely crossed the record paper and maintained this incessant movement for some twenty minutes, when its vibrations, though still exceedingly large, began to lessen. The tremors died out about 10 o'clock. Another rest then occurred, for forty-eight minutes, when a fresh vibration began, which came very pronounced for nearly an hour, and then continued its ever lessening movements until about 1:20 o'clock, when the pedulum finally came to rest. The extraordinary disturbance lasted for about twelve hours.

Assumed Immense Proportions

EVANS IS REPRIMANDED.

Navy Department Writes Him Letter of Censure for Offending William E. Chandler.

Washington, Aug. 13.—Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, better known as "Fighting Bob," was severely censured for his criticism of William E. Chandler, formerly secretary of the navy, in his book entitled "A Sailor's Log." The action of the department came as a great surprise, as Secretary Hackett had announced in the most positive terms that no action would be taken by the department in the absence of Secretary Long, who characterized the incident as a tempest in a teapot, and said he would ignore it.

Ex-Senator Chandler's second letter to the department seems to have forced these officials to change their minds, and the New Hampshire man now has the satisfaction of knowing that his view of the matter is indorsed by the department, and that Admiral Evans has been scathingly reprimanded for his deliberate criticism of his former superior. The public reprimand administered to Admiral Evans will in all probability end the unpleasant incident, and it is highly improbable that he will be court-martialed, as Senator Chandler will be satisfied with the action of the department.

TO PREVENT LYNCHING.

Gregorio Cortez Is Lodged in Jail at San Antonio, Tex.

San Antonio, Tex., Aug. 13.—Gregorio Cortez, who killed Sheriffs Glover and Morris, was brought here and lodged in jail for safe keeping last night. Sheriff Fly of Gonzales county brought the prisoner to San Antonio to prevent the possibility of another attempt at lynching which was tried at Gonzales early yesterday morning. At 1 o'clock 200 armed men rode up to the jail, rang the bell, called for Sheriff Fly and asked for the prisoner. Saturday evening Sheriff Fly heard that the mob was coming and after securing his cells and doors, sent his boys away, remaining in the jail with only one deputy and the jailers. When asked for Cortez, Sheriff Fly positively refused to give him up. The mob then tried to break down the jail door, using a telephone pole. Sheriff Fly went outside, fired a shot, attracted the attention of the leaders of the mob, and after a reasoning talk together the mob dispersed, only firing a few shots as they left.

SAMPSON MAY QUIT.

Likely to Ask to Be Relieved From Active Duty.

Washington, Aug. 13. — Having in view the possibility of the application of Admiral W. T. Sampson for relief from duty as commandant of the Boston navy yard, pending his retirement, the navy department officials have selected an officer for assignment to that duty. The admiral has been in delicate health for some time and it would not surprise the officials here should he seek an early relief from duty. Thus far the admiral has made no request for relief. The name of the officer selected to succeed him has not been announced.

Attempt to Crack Safe.

Dayton, Aug. 13. — An attempt was made early yesterday to crack the safe of the internal revenue office in the government buildings here. It is not thought an explosive was used, but the condition of the lock is such that the officials have been unable to unlock the safe and it is not yet known whether anything was stolen.

President McKinley has pardoned John Bulley, convicted of stealing from the Toledo postoffice. He had served nearly three years.

DROWNS IN LAKE.

Boy Seized With Cramps While Bathing.

Yankton, S. D., Aug. 11.—One of the saddest accidents which has occurred in the state in recent years is reported from Tripp, where Charley Hirsch was drowned in the artesian lake on the Leonard Kiehlbauch farm. A number of boys and young men had entered the water for a swim. Almost immediately young Hirsch was taken with cramps. None of the boys were good swimmers but one of them hurried to his aid. The drowning boy seized him around the arms and body and both went to the bottom, the would-be rescuer freeing himself with difficulty. This so frightened the rest of the party that no further effort was made to save the boy.

FIGHTS FOR HER CHILD.

Woman Rescues Her Kidnapped Boy From a Negro Den.

St. Joseph, Mich., Aug. 11.—Mrs. A. J. Countryman arrived home last evening from Chicago with her five-year-old son, who, with an eight-year-old brother, was kidnapped July 4. She found them in a negro den in Forty-third street. When she started away with her children yesterday she was chased by a negro mob who captured the oldest boy. Grabbing the youngest one, she escaped to a Graham & Morton steamer. Her husband jumped aboard the boat and threatened to throw her and the boy overboard. She was prostrated during the trip and given police escort on arrival here.

ENTERTAIN TEDDY.

Vice President Is Warmly Welcomed at Victor, Colo.

Victor, Colo., Aug. 11. — Victor gave an enthusiastic welcome to Vice President Roosevelt yesterday, fully 15,000 cheering people participating. After an inspection of the Portland mine 1,000 feet below the surface, the vice president was taken to the Gold Coin club for lunch, where he responded to a toast. A public reception was followed by a carriage drive about the district. The party then went to Cripple Creek, where they were entertained, returning to Colorado Springs in the evening.

TWO FISHERMEN DROWNED.

One Gets Beyond His Depth and the Other Goes to His Rescue.

Redfield, S. D., Aug. 11.—Roy Hare and Abner Ford, young men residing in the southwestern part of Spink county, were drowned at Cottonwood lake. They were engaged in seining and when Hare waded into the lake with the seine he got beyond his depth. Ford went to his assistance but became exhausted and both drowned before other aid could arrive.

FOUGHT IN INDIAN WAR.

William H. Grant, a Minnesota Pioneer, Dies at Sandstone.

St. Paul, Aug. 11.—William H. Grant, a pioneer settler of St. Paul, died at the home of his son at Sandstone on Thursday. He was seventy-three years old. His death was caused by a tumor. Mr. Grant came to St. Paul in 1855. He served in the Indian war in Minnesota in 1862 and took notable part in the battle of Birch Coulie.

Law Unconstitutional.

Madison, Wis., Aug. 11. — The law passed by the legislature last winter appropriating $30,000 to pay innocent purchasers of county orders issued under the Keeley cure law of 1895, declared invalid by the supreme court, is declared unconstitutional in an opinion given by Attorney General Hicks yesterday to the state land commissioners, who, under the law, are made an auditing committee to settle the claims.

Real Estate Partnership.

Appleton, Minn., Aug. 11.—H. F. Sorlien, cashier of the Appleton State bank, and P. E. O'Connor, a prominent attorney, have formed a partnership and will do business under the firm name of the Sorlien-O'Connor Land company. They own much valuable land in Swift and adjoining counties and will do an extensive real estate business throughout Western Minnesota.

Big Lumber Deal.

Marinette, Wis., Aug. 11.—An important lumber deal was consummated here yesterday by which the A. C. Brown Lumber company sold to the Weyerhauser syndicate 70,000 acres of pine land in Louisiana. The consideration was $650,000. The pine is located in the parishes of Vernon, Sabine, Calcasieu and Natchstoches. There are over 500,000,000 feet of pine on the tract.

Carried Loaded Bottles.

Fargo, N. D., Aug. 11.—W. L. Thompson is the name of a man who was arrested here with a telescope grip full of pint bottles of whisky. He had a ticket for Tower City, in the western part of the county, and it is supposed that he intended to dispose of his stock to the harvest hands. His supplies were confiscated and he was given an opportunity to get out of the country.

Bonus for College.

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 11.—The village of Trempealeau offers a bonus for the proposed Norwegian Lutheran college and yesterday notified Attorney O. R. Skaar of this city that it would offer $1,000 and ten acres of land if the college shall be erected there; also that several thousand more will be added to the bonus by residents of the village.

Pastures Renewed.

Huron, S. D., Aug. 11. — Almost an inch of water fell here last night. The entire Jim river valley and central portion of the state was covered by the heaviest rain in more than two months. Corn is greatly benefited and pastures renewed.

Barn Burned.

Pipestone, Minn., Aug. 11.—The large frame barn on the Minnesota Percheron horse farm near Cazenovia, this county, was struck by lightning and burned. All the contents were saved except 3,500 bushels of oats and 90 tons of hay.

Died From Sunstroke.

Zearing, Iowa, Aug. 11. — Hugh Wilson, who was sunstruck several days ago, is dead. During the last few days of his illness he was not rational and imagined that he had been ill for ten years, and talked constantly of it.

Our Wildest Tribe

Account of the Seri by Professor McGee

Physically, the Seri are cast in heroic mold. The mean adult stature is 6 feet for males and 5 feet 6¼ inches for females, i. e., with the possible exception of one or two Patagonian peoples, the Seri are the tallest aborigines of America. Both sexes are notable for robustitude of chest and slenderness of limb, though the extremities are large. The great chests and huge haunches of the Seri bear witness to their own naive descriptions of the chase, in which three or five striplings partly surround and partly run down jack rabbits, and five hunters habitually capture deer in similar fashion; and these recitals are corroborated in turn by dozens of vaqueros who have seen small bands spring on the withers of full-grown horses, break their necks by jaguar-like twists, rend them into quarters with teeth and nails, and then shoulder these and flee over the sand wastes so swiftly as to escape pursuing horsemen. The Seri inhabit a region of hunters, yet they are so far the fleetest of all and so distinguished by a peculiar "collected" or up-stepping gait (like that of a thoroughbred racer or prowling coyote) as to have gained their tribal sobriquet—they are "spry" par excellence, even among the light-footed Tarahumari and Otomi and Papago. In their own view, the glory of the Seri tribe is in their hair; it is black and luxuriant, and is worn long by both sexes, who brush and cultivate it with tireless assiduity; it is not merely admired, but revered nearly or quite unto worship and interwoven with a faith in a Samsonian cult which throws light on many obscure customs of various peoples in the several stages of culture. The tresses are treasured as symbols of vigor and of fecundity; the combings are kept scrupulously smoothed and twisted into slender strands, wound on skewers and eventually worked into necklaces and belts; indeed, the locks symbolize shield as well as strength, even to the engendering of ideas of appareling along those lines of associative and emblematic development by which the primitive mind is swayed. The chief occupations of the Seri are food getting and fighting. Their foremost food source is the green turtle, which is taken by means of a light-lip-head harpoon, broken up with cobblestones, and promptly gorged from entrails to flipper bones and sinew—and even to plastron if the family is large and the chelonian small. Pelicans and other water fowl yield quotas of food, as do all manner of fish and shellfish; and during the season of cactus fruits the younger folk and even the elders fatten inordinately on tunas and their seeds—the latter eaten twice in ancient Californian fashion. The much-mooted question of cannibalism must be left open; the affirmative is favored by the blood craze of battle and presumption that it ends like the chase it mimics in gluttonous gorging of raw flesh, and also by other analogies; but the negative may rest provisionally on the dearth of direct evidence and the consistent denials entered by the tribesmen themselves.

Throughout Seriland as implied, indeed, by the proper designation "our-great-mother-folk-here" the matron holds higher rank than even the doughtiest warrior. The tribal law is founded on faith and expressed in terms of kinship and relative age, the kinship is traced only in the maternal line—in fact, it is questionable whether paternity is recognized—the female has no word for father, and the term used by the male to denote his sire seems of doubtful meaning, and there are no old men in the tribe. So the matron is priestess, lawgiver and judge, while her brothers in order of age are the appellate executives, and her spouse merely a perpetual guest from another clan without voice in domestic matters, save perchance in social tumults attending war. The woman is the prepotent factor in tribal existence, she is the shaman who brews the magic arrow poison, the wise one who casts protecting charms over outgoing warriors and lays spells on enemies, she is the shaper of the life-preserving olla, the maker of the sacred haircorn, she is the lady of the feast, sharing the portions and keeping alive the distributive tabus by which the rights of the weak are protected; she is the blood carrier and the facemark bearer of the clan; and at death she is buried with ceremony and mourned long and loud as a link in the tribal lineage, while her warrior spouse rots where he falls.

Noah's Ark Not the First Ship.

Noah's ark is generally supposed to be the earliest ship of which we have records, but there exists paintings of Egyptian vessels immensely older than the date 2840 B. C., usually assigned to the ark, being, indeed, probably between 70 and 80 centuries old. Moreover, there are now in existence, in Egypt, boats which were built about the period the ark was constructed. These are, however, small craft, about 32 feet long, seven feet or eight feet wide and two and a half feet to three feet deep. They were discovered six years ago by the eminent French Egyptologist, M. J. De Morgan, in brick vaults near Cairo.

Arsenic Eaters

Austrian Peasants Use It So Freely It Preserves Their Dead Bodies

Immense quantities of arsenic are consumed by the peasants of Styria and the Tyrol. An Austrian doctor who examined into this matter found that arsenic was kept in most of the houses in upper Styria under the name of "hydrach," evidently a corruption of "huttenrauch," or furnace smoke. Arsenic is principally eaten by hunters and woodcutters, with the object of warding off fatigue and improving their staying powers. Owing to the fact that the sale of arsenic is illegal in Austria without a doctor's certificate it is difficult to obtain definite information of a habit which is kept as secret as possible. According to a Dr. Lorenzo, in that district the arsenic is taken fasting, usually in a cup of coffee, the first dose being minute, but increased day by day, until it sometimes amounts to the enormous dose of 12 or 15 grains. He found that the arsenic eaters were usually long-lived, though liable to sudden death. They have a very fresh, youthful appearance and are seldom attacked by infectious diseases.

After the first dose the usual symptoms of slight arsenic poisoning are evident; but these soon disappear on continuing the treatment.

In the arsenic factories in Salzberg it is stated that workingmen who are not arsenic eaters soon succumb to the fumes. The manager of one of these works says that he had been medically advised to eat arsenic before taking up his position. He considered that no one should begin the practice before 12 years old nor after 30, and that in any case after 50 years of age the daily dose should be gradually reduced, since otherwise sudden death would ensue. If a confirmed arsenic eater suddenly attempts to do altogether without the drug he immediately succumbs to the effects of arsenic poisoning. The only way to obviate this is gradually to acclimatize the system by reducing the dose from day to day. As another evidence of the cumulative properties of arsenic it is interesting to note that when the graveyards in upper Styria are opened the bodies of the arsenic-eaters can be distinguished by their almost perfect state of preservation, due to the gradually accumulated arsenic.

...AN INCREASING PENSION LIST...

The pension list is larger by 2,000 names than it was a year ago in spite of the death losses, and the appropriation of $145,000,000 for pension payments during the year will fall short of the amount needed to meet all demands by at least $150,000, says Leslie's Weekly. But the most significant thing is that 43,874 claims have been filed at the department on account of the war with Spain. These figures seem almost incredible when it is remembered that the war actually lasted only thirty days, and that the number of men engaged in hostile action on land and sea was only a few thousands. It does not follow, of course, that all the claims filed will be granted, and probably a large proportion of them will fail for good and sufficient reasons. During the eleven months ending June 30, 2,369 pensions were granted to invalids coming out of the war, and to 1,156 Spanish war widows and orphans. But the enormous number of claims filed show an inclination on the part of the persons who served their country in that war period not altogether pleasing to contemplate. It looks very much as though patriotism was not an inspiring motive in many cases so much as a desire to get a chance for a steady pull at the cash drawer of Uncle Sam.

Poor Man's Friend.

The pipe is the poor man's friend, and it is low down and contemptible for fellows in comfortable circumstances to make play of it. Puffing at a pipe is neither a fashionable nor an agreeable diversion. Cynics, hypochondriacs, disappointees, cranks, pessimists and lunatics smoke pipes because they like to be stared at. Philosophers past the age of 50 smoke pipes because their contents are sedative. But take them all-in-all, pipes are filthy nuisances. You can easily detect a pipe smoker by the skin of his teeth, green-brown with nicotine lodged there, and by his personal smell to heaven. But, after all, what is more calculated to amuse than a good old Irishman with his dudeen? Let me quote: "It is not the descendants of the Mayflower, in short, who are the representative Americans of the present day; it is the Micks and the Pats, the Hanses and the Wilhelms, redolent still of the dudeen and the souerkraut barrel." Great Scott!—New York Press.

MADE STRONG AND WELL.

A Prominent Lady Raised From a Sick Bed by Pe-ru-na—Entirely Cured In Two Weeks.

MRS. E. A. CROZIER.

Mrs. E. A. Crozier, Senior Vice President of the James Morgan Post, W. R. C., the largest corps in Minnesota, writes from "The Landour," 9th and Nicollet, Minneapolis, Minn., as follows:

"Please accept hearty thanks on behalf of Peruna, that wonderful medicine which raised me from a sick bed and made a strong and well woman of me in two weeks. I suffered with bearing-down pains, backache and continual headache, and found no relief until I tried Peruna. It cured me completely, and I feel as young and well as when 18. I wish every woman knew the merits of the medicine, and no home would be without it."—Mrs. E. A. Crozier.

Mrs. Wm. Henderson, Borduiac, N. C., writes:

"I was troubled with very serious female weakness; had spells of flowing that exhausted me so that I feared I would lose my mind. I suffered untold agony with my back, the pain extending down my left leg. My pain was so severe that I would have welcomed death at any moment—so no one need wonder that I recommend Peruna so highly, for it cured me entirely of that. Not a sign of pain has returned, and that will soon be two years now.

"I am glad that there is a way I can speak, trusting that many a sufferer will read my testimonial, and not only read but believe."—Mrs. Wm. Henderson.

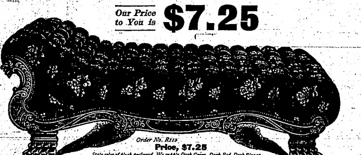
LESS than DEALERS Pay

This is a sample of our Furniture prices. Here is a couch which the factory sells to your dealer at about $8.00. Your dealer's price to you is not less than $10.00 or $12.00 for a couch of equal grade.

Our Price to You is $7.25



Order No. R112

Price, $7.25

State color of plush preferred. We supply Dark Green, Dark Red, Dark Blue or Brown. Dark Green is most popular and will be sent unless otherwise ordered.

An unusually large, luxurious couch, made of selected oak, or, if preferred, in mahogany finish, handsomely carved throughout, and supported by massive carved claw feet. It has six rows of deep hand-made tufts, fastened with the celebrated steel tufting buttons which cannot pull off or pull through the cover.

It is well filled and contains the best grade of steel springs turned from special high-carbon wire, over which is placed heavy duck canvas instead of the burlap commonly used, the best grade of figured velour plush in all the staple colors being used for upholstering.

From a sanitary point of view the open bottom presents a special feature. It allows good ventilation and a free circulation of air, which is disastrous to moths and germs.

The frame is massive and substantial, the workmanship first-class, the appearance neat and artistic; a good, serviceable couch at the lowest price ever offered. Size 30 inches wide, 78 inches long. Weight, 100 pounds.

We do not care to ship goods unless freight charges are guaranteed. If you do not wish to send the full amount, $7.25, send us $1.00 to show good faith, and we will do the rest. If you really think that you ought not to take even this risk, write us and say that you prefer to have the couch sent C. O. D. and that you will pay the full amount upon arrival and examination.

We want to be reasonable from every point of view. It may be returned at our expense if not satisfactory. Send us your order now; do not wait. Order Number R112.

Our large Furniture Catalogue, illustrating and describing eighteen different styles of couches as well as four hundred other articles of furniture, will be sent on request, absolutely free. The above is only a specimen of the marvelously low prices quoted in this book. Your local dealer cannot buy the goods at lower figures than our prices to you.

Our General Catalogue lists over 70,000 articles which we sell direct to customers at wholesale prices, including nearly everything that you use, wear or eat. It contains over 1,000 pages, 17,000 pictures, and 70,000 of the lowest prices ever quoted. It weighs almost four pounds, and the postage alone costs 80 cents. We will send you this catalogue by mail or express prepaid on receipt of 15 cents. It will save an ordinary family at least $100 per year, and may save that on one purchase. If you are not satisfied with it we will return your 15 cents.

Ours is the largest mail order house in the world. Established 1872. We have 52 acres of floor space covered with merchandise; 2,000 employes, and two million customers. We quote lower prices, for values given, than any other house in existence.

NEW WHEAT

Marketed in Thief River Falls Monday.

The first new wheat to be marketed in Thief River Falls was brought to the O. K. Mill Monday by Peter Skjosvold, of the town of New Solum. It graded No. 1 Northern and was threshed from a piece that went 34 bushels to the acre.

Threshing machines are all busy this week and some good yields are reported. The amount of oats and barley raised around here will many times greater than former years, while the wheat acreage is not so large.

THIS IS GENERAL

All Teachers and Pupils Must be Vaccinated.

School children and teachers must be vaccinated before they can return to school at the close of the summer vacation. In addition all lumbermen, mining superintendents and employers of labor generally are ordered to have their men inoculated.

This was decided upon at a meeting of the state board of health at St. Paul Friday evening. They decided that teachers nor pupils could return to school unless they can produce a certificate showing that they have been successfully vaccinated since the year 1896, or in lieu of this, they must produce a certificate from some reputable physician showing that they are immune to vaccinated. School boards in all parts of the state and officers of boards of health have been notified to this effect, and the state board is determined that the rule shall be rightly enforced.

The order was made in view of the fact that smallpox is technically epidemic throughout the state.

The production of a certificate of successful vaccination is to be made an essential condition to the men returning to work in camps, mines and railroad grades.

A Communication.

To the Editor: It has been questioned whether this city could support or needed two English churches. It might be questioned also whether the Sand Ridge school house needs two English services. "O, consistency, thou art a Jewel!" A Thinker.

The unutilized resources of this section in the form of that portion of the grass crop which will not be cut, are of far greater magnitude than is realized. Many thousand acres of the finest grass that grows, which would yield from one and a half to two tons per acre, will be buried under the winters snow. This is the more unfortunate in consideration of the fact that the hay crop in many other places is practically a failure, and the prices will in consequence range high.

THE STATE FAIR

MINNESOTA'S EXPOSITION THIS YEAR WILL ECLIPSE ALL PREVIOUS DISPLAYS.

Many Evidences of Growth Apparent in New Buildings and Other Improvements—September 2 to 7, Inclusive, the Dates for the Big Event.

Most characteristic of all the advance news about the Minnesota State Fair are those items which go to show the wonderful growth of the institution. The Minnesota fair has, in fact, outgrown its position as a "state" fair. It is now a Northwestern exposition and a national live stock exhibit. In this character it is not surprising that it needs more room in every department and that the reports of managers' meetings are filled with the endeavors of the officials to find space for the would-be exhibitors and to provide accommodations for the great crowds which will undoubtedly be present.

Last year's fair was a "record-breaker" in every department; this year's fair promises to so far eclipse that of 1900 as to make it seem a trifling occasion. The management has secured attractions of the highest character and as part of the exhibits will have such a display of live stock as to fairly set in the shade the grand live stock exhibit made in Chicago last winter.

Roosevelt to Be There.

The fair managers made their first hit by inviting Vice President Theodore Roosevelt to open the fair. The invitation went first, informally, through Thomas H. Shevlin of Minneapolis, vice president of the fair, and after the formal invitation of the board, Mr. Roosevelt accepted in an autograph letter. He is to address the crowd from the grand stand on Monday morning, Sept. 2, at 11 o'clock, formally opening the fair, and he will later hold an informal reception and be the guest of the officers of the fair and various notables at luncheon. In the afternoon he will review the exhibits.

A National Live Stock Exhibit.

National exhibitions by the American Shorthorn Breeders' association and the American Hereford Breeders' association in addition to the usual large exhibit of cattle of all breeds will draw to the Minnesota State Fair of 1901 a collection of live stock which will form the largest exhibit of its class ever made, even eclipsing the Chicago exhibit of last year. It will be the event of the year for farmers, breeders and all people interested in the diversification of Western farm industries.

The fair management has joined with the breeders' association in offering increased premiums in both these classes of live stock and the premiums have been enlarged in other departments wherever possible.

Auction Sales of Blooded Cattle.

On certain days of the fair there will be auctions without reserve of many head of fine Shorthorns and Herefords. This will give farmers and breeders an excellent opportunity to improve their herds.

Making Room for the Show.

Every department of the fair is feeling the influence of the live stock exhibitions and the other great drawing cards which the managers have arranged. To accommodate a very persistent demand for space for exhibiting a process of expansion is going on this summer on the grounds.

Most conspicuous among the new buildings is the Agricultural Hall, which was erected with an appropriation of $25,000 made by the state legislature last winter. This building is 260x240 feet in size and of very fine architectural appearance. It is designed by C. R. Aldrich, the architect of many of the university and college of agriculture buildings. It is now the most prominent building on the grounds and the one which will be naturally entered first by visitors. It will contain the exhibits of the horticultural and agricultural departments.

Prizes and Premiums.

Early in the season the fair officers revised the premium list, making extensive additions and increasing the amounts in many cases. These liberal offers have been supplemented in many instances by offers from individuals or firms interested in the success of the fair. In the cattle department, especially in Shorthorns, Herefords and Aberdeen-Angus cattle, the combined offers of the fairs and the breeders' associations make the premiums worth the utmost endeavors of the exhibitors.

In all some $40,000 in prizes and premiums are offered by the fair management.

The Amusement Side of the Fair.

People go to the state fair to be amused as well as to study. One of the chief means of amusement at a fair is found in the race track. At the Minnesota fair the races are under the best conditions—they are simply trials of speed without any objectionable features. As the purses are large and the reputation of the fair the best, the list of entries is found to excel last year's fine line of horses.

It should be remembered that there are fast races on every day of the fair—Monday and Saturday included—and that none of the races is for less than $1,000, while the big trot on Minneapolis day and the pace on St. Paul day are each for $5,000.

Pool selling is prohibited at the fair grounds. The races are clean; and the track is one of the fastest in the country.

Evening Entertainments.

Besides the races there are specialty entertainments in front of the grand stand every afternoon of fair week. These specialties, with variations, will be shown each evening under electric light. So it will be possible for a visitor to enter the grounds early in the forenoon and stay till the evening performance is over. The evening amusements will include racing by electric light, hurdle races, chariot races, standing races, women's races, monkey races, riderless horse races, exhibitions on the rolling sphere by the famous equilibrist, Lional Legare, aerial exhibitions by the renowned Pickett family—and lastly, a magnificent spectacular pyrotechnic drama, put on by the famed fireworks makers, the Pains, of Chicago.

State Fish Exhibit.

With the co-operation of the state game and fish commission and the fair management, an exhibit of the fish of Minnesota will be made. Every known variety of native fish will be shown in capacious tanks. Not only will the full grown specimens be displayed, but the fry and the yearlings will be shown so that visitors may study the development of the fish.

Attractions Galore.

The foregoing are but a few of the attractions of the fair. The exhibits in the main exposition building are to be greatly improved in character this year. The dairy building was overflowing—all space assigned—before Aug. 1. The poultry department will have a larger and better display than ever. The women's building is one of the most attractive on the grounds. Liberal premiums are offered, and the best specimens of textile and fine art work will be on exhibition. The state federation of woman's clubs will maintain headquarters upon the grounds during the fair. The rooms will be kept open for use of women, whether members or not, and all are cordially invited to make the place headquarters while visiting the state fair. Special exercises will be held daily during the week, at which topics of general interest will be considered.

It is believed that the farm implement and machinery exhibit will be the largest and most complete ever seen at any state fair.

Best in the Union.

"But few human undertakings better deserve the title 'ideal' than has this great agricultural exposition during late years," says "Farm, Stock and Home." "It is acknowledged to be 'the best in the union,' which is equivalent to saying that it has no superior any where, and to be superior comes most pleasingly near being 'ideal.' The high character of this exposition is yet unknown to too many citizens of Minnesota and sister states, and this is written that many more may know it; and when they realize what it is they will surely let no ordinary barrier keep them from seeing with their own eyes and understanding with their own judgment what a state fair par excellence looks like and is."

Canada Eclipsed Too.

Not only does the Minnesota fair lead in the states, but it has gone ahead of the great Canadian fair, which has always been held up as a model of what a fair should be. Up to 1900 the great Canadian fair at Toronto was the largest fair in America. Last year the Canucks were rather surprised to find that the Minnesota fair had exceeded their largest gate receipts and was putting up a better exhibition in many ways.

Visitors Well Cared For.

Minneapolis and St. Paul are cities full of people adept in entertaining. They will look well to the interests of the people who visit the state fair during the first week in September. At the fair grounds the managers are ever alert to see that people are taken care of. Many conveniences are being added this year for the comfort of visitors—telephones, postoffice, drinking fountains, park benches on the grounds, etc. The grounds are well policed and sanitation is carefully looked after.

Exhibitors have the best of treatment. The Minnesota fair is noted for paying its premiums promptly. The judges are men of the highest standing. Every thing is done "decently and in order."

Half-Fare Rates on the Railroads.

Every railroad running into Minneapolis has joined in making a rate of one fare for the round trip for the week of Sept. 2-7. These rates apply from all points within 200 miles of the Twin Cities, but are extended to 300 west, so as to include almost all of North and South Dakota.

IS MORE WARLIKE

VENEZUELA AND COLOMBIA MAY ENGAGE IN OPEN CONFLICT.

U. S. WARSHIPS ARE IN READINESS

Another Invasion of Venezuela From Colombia Is Reported, and If This Should Prove True There Seems Little Chance of Avoiding Open Conflict Between These Two Countries.

Washington, Aug. 11.—The situation in Colombia and Venezuela continued to occupy much of the attention of officials here yesterday, and while it was not felt that affairs had reached a serious aspect, yet it was appreciated that both the official and unofficial advices indicated a condition of affairs which might mean war between Colombia and Venezuela, complicated by revolutionary outbreaks in both countries. During the day the state department received a rather lengthy mail communication from Consul General Gudger at Panama, and though this was dated nearly a month ago, it told of the landing of revolutionary expeditions and expressed the current belief held at Panama that this would be followed by other expeditions. The department also received a letter from J. Edward Simmons of New York, president of the Panama Railroad company, confirming his communication relative to the Trouble on the Isthmus

and stating that the superintendent of the road had advised him as to the depredations of an insurgent band which did not number, however, more than fifty men. The more serious aspect of the matter was presented in the press dispatches from Willemstad stating that the Colombians again had invaded Venezuela. There was no official confirmation of this, but if it should prove correct there seems little chance of avoiding an open conflict between these two countries, as such an invasion by Colombia would be, in itself, an act of war. But the authorities here prefer to take a conservative view of the situation until official advices are in hand. At the navy department no further steps were taken toward sending ships to the isthmus. It was decided definitely, however, to send the battleship Wisconsin down to San Diego, Cal., in case the desirability of that move became evident by the time she reached San Francisco, and the state department was so advised.

PRESIDENT'S DAY.

Chief Executive Will Visit the Exposition on Sept. 5.

Canton, Ohio, Aug. 11.—Arrangements were made here yesterday afternoon for "President's Day" at the Pan-American exposition. President J. G. Milburn and Director General W. I. Buchanan of the exposition, Mayor of Buffalo Diehle and John I. Scatherd came here for the purpose. They were met at the station by the president's carriage and taken to the Elks' club for lunch. They spent most of the afternoon at the McKinley home. Besides selecting the date it was arranged that the president should leave here on Wednesday morning, Sept. 4, and reach Buffalo the same evening. The full program is to be worked out in detail later, but opportunity will be provided the president to see the exposition complete and to best advantage both day and night. Thursday will be largely given over to the special program for "President's day," with parades, possible speechmaking and other features.

Thomas Hunt is twenty-one years old. He married the eldest sister, who is twenty-four.

Medicine Lodge, Kan., Aug. 11.—David Nation, through his attorney yesterday brought suit for a divorce from his wife, Mrs. Carrie Nation, the temperance crusader. The petitioner, who is now visiting in Iberia, Ohio, alleges that his wife held him up to public ridicule, neglected her family duties and abandoned his home.

Young Girl Encouraged in Her Infatuation by the Mother—They Leave a Note Telling the Father That They Have Gone to Buffalo, Where the Daughter Hopes to Bask in the Footlights' Glare.

Findlay, Ohio, Aug. 10.—Because his twenty-year-old daughter wanted to go on the stage and his wife encouraged the girl in her infatuation desolation now reigns in the household of Rev. J. D. Green, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of McComb.

Sunday Mr. Green preached at a church five miles from home and came to Findlay to attend the camp meeting. He returned Wednesday night and found his family, wife, daughter and son, up and dressed, although it was nearly 12 o'clock. He thought nothing about it and retired to his own room. In the morning he found the house deserted, with a note lying on the table saying not to expect them back, as they had gone to Buffalo, where the daughter, Cora, intended to become an actress. She is a beautiful girl, with an unusually sweet soprano voice, and since her return from Chicago, where she took vocal lessons, has been stagestruck.

Rev. Green is completely broken up over the affair, as he has not the slightest knowledge of his wife's intentions. They have never had any strife except this one question, but he vows he will never forgive them or take them back again.

WORK OF ONE MAN.

Theory of Detectives Regarding the Smelter Robbery.

San Francisco, Aug. 10.—The theory upon which the detectives are now working is that the robbery of gold bricks from the smelter was executed by one man only. It is thought that the two bars of gold found on the water's edge were placed there designedly for the purpose of creating the impression that the gold had been carried away in a boat. On this hypothesis a strict search is being made near the vicinity of the robbery for the stolen gold.

IN KAISER'S STYLE.

Orders for Funeral Causing All Sort of Surprise and Inconvenience.

Cronburg, Aug. 10.—The remains of the Dowager Empress Frederick were placed in a casket yesterday morning. The empress in her last written directions asked that the funeral might be of the most simple kind, but there is no reference in them to the torchlight procession that will take place on Saturday and is entirely the kaiser's idea. It has very much astonished the older courtiers, whose quiet, sedate appearance contrasts strangely with the showy, gold bedecked followers of the new court. They seem almost overwhelmed by the crash and rattle of the present epoch. The kaiser has taken over the entire management of the funeral, only giving his orders at the last moment, so that they have to be very much hurried through. The Sunday service in the chapel will be the Lutheran service. King Edward will be present and will stop at Friedrichshof with his suite.

Before sailing from San Francisco he will address a letter on the subject to President McKinley, asking the co-operation of the army and civil officers in the Philippines. "It is not immediate independence we ask," he said, "but we want it as Cuba gets it—when a stable government has been established. We have no thought of interfering in any way with the other interests which the United States has in the islands, but we want to govern ourselves."

No doubt you, heroes all, were inspired in your great work for your flag by the traditions of my husband's ancestorial, the first duke of Marlborough, who learned to appreciate the tough mettle of the Dutch soldiers when he fought with the duke of York in Flanders in 1679. BURNED AT STAKE

AWFUL FATE OF A NEGRO WHO HAD ASSAULTED A WHITE WOMAN.

SCREAMS FOR MERCY UNHEEDED

Mob Composed of Both Whites and Blacks Take Part in the Execution of the Brute—Identified by His Victim, He Is Quickly Tied to a Stake and Burned to Death—Confesses His Brutal Crime.

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 9.—With agonising screams and his eyes bulging from his head, John Wesley Pennington, a negro, was burned at the stake near Enterprise, Ala., before a crowd of 500 enraged and determined citizens of Coffee county yesterday morning. The mob was composed of both whites and blacks, and though the suffering wretch pleaded for mercy and frantically endeavored to break the chains that tightly bound him, not a trace of sympathy was shown on the faces that peered at him through the flames. Pennington had committed a brutal assault upon Mrs. J. C. Davis, wife of one of the most prominent farmers of Coffee county, and confessed his guilt. The crime was committed Tuesday while Mrs. Davis was gathering vegetables in her garden. She was stooping over plucking tomatoes when Pennington slipped up from behind and threw her to the ground. He choked the fear-stricken woman into insensibility,

Accomplished His Intention

and fled through the woods near by. As soon as she regained her senses Mrs. Davis crawled to the house and told her husband what had happened. A large posse was quickly organized with bloodhounds and they chased the negro until early yesterday morning, when he was captured in a swamp. Pennington was bound hand and foot and taken back to the Davis home for identification. Mrs. Davis immediately recognized him and the negro broke down and wept. He admitted having committed the crime, and, though he pleaded for mercy with cries of terror, the trembling man was dragged from the house and into the woods, where the crowd had gathered. Evidently expecting a confession several of the citizens had already driven an iron pipe in the ground, and as the men approached with Pennington, both whites and blacks were piling brushwood around the stake. The negro now saw his doom and with a scream of terror fell to the ground in a faint. He was quickly revived and while the crowd stood silently by. The frightened man was limp and had to be held up while the chains were fastened around his neck and body. A match was applied to the pile and with oil to feed upon the tiny flame soon burst into a roaring fire. The terrified negro again pleaded for mercy in the most agonising tones and prayed to God that those around him might perish. He then called upon the maker for forgiveness and as the flames leaped up and encircled his neck an unearthly shriek was heard and the man's eyes had almost bulged out of the sockets. By this time the fire had gained such headway that nothing could be seen except a wriggling motion in the center of the fire. A deathly silence followed and in a few minutes the flames had sufficiently subsided to see that Pennington's head had fallen forward and hung limp over the iron chain. The body was quickly consumed and all that was left of him was a pile of ashes. The crowd then quietly dispersed.

Dragged to the Stake,

FIND AN UNDERGROUND RIVER.

Well Diggers Strike Good-Sized Body of Water With Swiftly Flowing Current.

Ashtabula, Ohio, Aug. 9.—A mile to the west of Chardon, the county seat of Geauga county, well diggers have encountered a supposed underground river. At a depth of thirty-five feet only a thin shell separates them from what is apparently a good sized body of water with a swift flowing current. The roaring noise of this current can be heard several feet away from the bore. Students of geology who have visited the excavation on first examination feel satisfied that this underground body of water is a river of some size. They will make further investigations.

THE PAUPERS DEATH-BED

Tread softly; bow the head—
In reverent silence bow!
No passing bell doth toll;
Yet an immortal soul
Is passing now.

Stranger; however great,
With lowly reverence bow!
There's one in that poor shed—
One by that paltry bed—
Greater than thou.

Beneath that beggar's roof,
Lo! Death doth keep his state!
Enter! No crowds attend—
Enter! No guards defend
This palace gate.

That pavement, damp and cold,
No smiling courtiers tread;
One silent woman stands,
Lifting with meager hands
A dying head.

No mingling voices sound—
An infant wail alone!
A sob suppressed—again
That short deep gasp—and then
The parting groan.

Oh! change—oh! wondrous change!
Burst are thy prison bars!
This moment there, so low,
So agonized—and now
Beyond the stars.

Oh! change—stupendous change!
There lies the soulless clod!
The sun eternal breaks;
The new immortal wakes—
Wakes with his God.

A Slight Mistake.

BY WILLIAM M'LEOD RAINE.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Garrison examined the photograph long and earnestly, as the ethics of the situation seemed to require.

"They're as pretty as peaches, and as like as two peas. I congratulate you on your taste, old man."

"I'm glad you like her looks. I mean her sister for you."

"Thanks, awfully. By the way, which is the sister? To me they look as much alike as the two Dromios."

Blake flushed. "The deuce of it is that I don't know Gladys from Nell. They're twins, you know. I met Gladys one summer in the Adirondacks. That was two years ago, and though we became engaged I haven't seen her since."

"And when did you see the other one last? What's her name—Nell?" asked Garrison.

"I never have seen her. Of course, I've heard a great deal about her from Gladys in her letters. In one way it is just the same as knowing her."

"Oh, yes—exactly. No difference at all," agreed Garrison, ironically. "I must say I like your generosity, Jim. It isn't every man would be so free of his sisters-in-law as you are. You show the proper spirit. Considering the extent of your acquaintance with her she probably wouldn't thank you for disposing of her matrimonially, though. Girls are a little odd that way. They like to meet the man they are going to marry before their friends arrange the details—at least, that has been my experience with American girls."

"Well, you may guy me all you please, Bob, but I'll bet a hat you are running after her before a week is up. She'll lead you a merry chase, too, if she is anything like her sister," returned the other young man composedly.

Robert Garrison examined the photograph again, and when he handed it back said dryly:

"My friend, I see your finish. When those girls get off the train you won't know one from the other. You'll get rattled and make a mistake sure as shooting. Go slow, my son. It doesn't do to be engaged to a girl and not recognize her when you see her. I don't know much about the sex, but I think I know that much."

A Second Gladys Standing Beside Him.

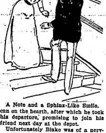
Blake scoffed. "Oh, I'll know Gladys when I see her. What do you take me for? They are not so much alike as all that, and there is always the ring as a last resort."

"Well, I have known girls to wear gloves, so you need not bank on the ring. No, you're going to put your foot in it. There's a very pretty dilemma in the situation. It would never do not to show your joy at seeing her, and it wouldn't do to mistake the identity of your lady. I only hope you won't kiss the wrong one. Better telegraph to Chicago and tell your Miss Harrison to wear a red ribbon round her arm. Send it to the depot, and it will catch her on the train."

With which advice Mr. Bob Garrison got up and danced a cheerful can-can on the hearth, after which he took his departure, promising to join his friend next day at the depot.



A Note and a Sphinx-Like Smile.

Unfortunately Blake was of a nervous disposition, and he began to conceive the dreadful results of making a mistake. He told himself the thing was impossible, but it worried him just the same. Two years are two years, and in that time a girl develops into a young woman. Certainly in the photograph he could not make sure which of the girls was Gladys. Sometimes it seemed to him that the one on the right was undoubtedly she, then again he was just as sure that the other one was his betrothed. He had seen her look exactly like both of them. The more he looked at it the more it seemed to him that the two pair of dancing eyes in the photograph challenged him mockingly for an answer. Finally he threw it down in despair.

"I'm making a mountain out of a molehill," he assured himself. "When I see the girls I'll know which is Gladys fast enough. It's just like Bob to try and worry me about it. I'll just fool him this trip."

Nevertheless he found himself wiping the drops of perspiration from his brow at the mere thought of the possibilities.

He did not find the situation any more tolerable next day at the depot. Bob Garrison was on hand, full of badinage and advice as to the best way of getting out of it. He seemed to take it for granted that Blake was going to make a mistake, and by the time the train drew in Jim had allowed himself to be badgered into a condition in which he would hardly have recognized his own father.

Blake saw a vision of loveliness descending the car steps which he recognized at once as Gladys. There could be no doubt about it, and he went forward with radiant face and outstretched hand. She even wore a brooch with a miniature set in it on the belt about her waist which he remembered to have seen before. Jim had always understood that it was not the proper thing to salute a young woman in a public place, but for this one occasion he made an exception. He was going to show Bob Garrison that he was not so slow after all. A moment later he looked up to see a second Gladys standing beside him with a curious smile on her lips. For just a second doubt crossed his mind, but then he recollected the miniature and smiled complacently. Out went his hand to her in frank brotherly greeting. Presently he became aware of Garrison hovering in the background shaking a fist at him, and introduced him with slight momentary confusion. After which the party gaily drove home in a cab.

Blake devoted himself to Miss Gladys with a lover-like ardor which left nothing to be desired. At the house the young ladies left them for a few minutes while they departed for their rooms to make a change of toilet. Luckily for Jim the miniature was still in evidence when they returned, so that he was sure of his betrothed; otherwise, even he was forced to confess, there was not a pin to choose between them. While they had been absent Jim had taken occasion to make some remarks about the sure instinct of love for finding its mate. He assured Garrison that one glance into the eyes of his Gladys had set his doubts at rest entirely, with some more of the same kind of talk. As for Garrison he simply grinned and hoped Jim had made no mistake, because he expected to lay siege to the vacant heart at once.

By what he considered most adroit management Blake succeeded in getting a minute alone with his sweetheart in the hall before he left, but to his surprise he found that young woman somewhat coy. The reason for it he discovered a few minutes later. As they were going down the steps her sister called him back and handed him a note and a sweet, sphinx-like smile. What the note said was this:

Dear Jim:

Do you remember once telling me that a woman had no sense of humor, that she could not understand a joke and would not recognize one if she saw it walking down the street? I made up my mind then to play a joke on you that you would never forget. My poor old Jim! How tell it for laughing! You have been making love all night to Nell, whom you have never seen before. Five times you have kissed her to my certain knowledge—poor me, who have had to put up with one meager handshake. I want you to be good friends with my sister, but I think you have gone a little farther tonight than the conventions demand. The miniature? Oh, I lent it to my sister for the occasion! I hope you will appreciate the point of this little joke. I am quite sure that your friend Mr. Garrison will see it. Please call tomorrow at three—and do not make any mistakes in identity. Good night, dear old stupid Jim!

Your unkissed sweetheart,
Gladys Harrison.

THE DREADED BACK DRAFT.

One of the Worst Perils That Confront the Firemen.

Next to a dangerous cellar fire nothing is more dreaded by the men than what is known in their own language as the "back draft." This is a sudden veering of the flames, usually caused by the burning away of some portion of the building that gives the fire renewed draft and changes its course completely. The firemen arrive and find the whole second or third floor of a building in flames. Axes in hand, they smash open the doors, and with the hose dash up the stairway. This is all afire, and the flames are rolling above like a red pall. With the engine at work and good pressure on the line, the battle between the two elements—fire and water—begins. Inch by inch the men fight their way up the stairway, now to retreat as the fire gains upon them, and now to advance as it rolls away for a moment. The encouraging words of the commanding officer are heard behind them urging them on: "Now, get in, boys! That's it—get in—get in! Make the next landing! Hit it up boys!" and all the other words of encouragement that he usually gives. They finally reach the landing. They are on the floor with the fire. It rolls toward them, an impenetrable wall of fire—the deadly back draft! Their only chance of escape is to throw themselves upon their faces, in hope that it may roll over them, or to hurl themselves down the stairs up which they have so gallantly fought their way. Better a broken leg or arm than death by roasting, and the water of fifty engines could never stay the progress of that awful wave of flame. Many a brave fellow has lost his life in this manner, and very often all the members of a company return with their eyebrows, hair and beard singed off, bearing evidence that they have been "ketched," as they express it, by a less terrible form of this deadly draft.—St. Nicholas.

Eccentric British Magistrate.

Sir Harry Poland, a British magistrate noted for his brilliancy, is careless in his dress. Once his family persuaded him to go to Poole and order a fashionably-cut suit. To the chagrin of the household Sir Harry looked more outlandish in the new clothes than in his old ones. His brother-in-law went to see Poole about it. "It is not my fault, sir," the tailor assured him. "Every care was taken, but how could we fit a gentleman who would insist upon being measured sitting down?" And the only satisfaction that could be obtained from Sir Harry Poland himself later on was the dry comment: "Well, it's my business, and not yours. I like to be comfortable. I spend three parts of my life sitting down, and I prefer to be measured so."

Figures may not lie, but there is always more or less doubt about the veracity of the figures on a gas meter.

OUR FLAG IN SOUTH SEAS

Commander Tilley of the United States navy has been the first to show to the world that Uncle Sam can govern a colony wisely and well. For the space of more than a year he has been absolute ruler over the people of Tutuila, subject only to the control of the far-away administration in Washington. There are five islands under the control of the United States. Tutuila, the largest, has a population of some 4,000, and is of the greatest importance, because it possesses the magnificent harbor of Pago Pago, the finest haven in the south seas. Here all the war ships belonging to Uncle Sam could ride in safety without the slightest crowding, and here we are constructing a magnificent coaling station and pier, at a cost of over $300,000. Indeed, it is safe to say that if it were not for this harbor the United States would never have dreamed of acquiring an interest in the Samoan group. Manua, with a population of 2,000, comes next, and then there are the smaller islets of Tau, Olesanga and Ofu.

Of the islands and their inhabitants Commander Tilley writes:

The natives of Tutuila are naturally

a kindly, gentle, simple-minded race, and it was only due to the lack of good government that they developed warlike tendencies. The first thing I did was to disarm the natives. They gave up their guns readily enough without compensation. I considered that the best way to govern these people was to let them govern themselves. The Samoans are still in the patriarchal state; the head of each household is supreme ruler of his own little family, and these chiefs, in turn, form a council which governs each village. Each town is practically independent of the other, though there is a parliament, or fono, for every district, which, however, used to do little more than talk. My aim was to modify this system so as to adopt the plan which has proved so successful in Fiji, of appointing native chiefs as local magistrates, or governors, in each district.

The great trouble was the superabundance of material available. Nearly every other man was a chief, and, naturally, they all sought the coveted positions. There was no question about the head chief, Mauga. He was undoubtedly the man of highest rank in Tutuila, but the minor chiefs all seemed to have equal claims to precedence. However, after an exhaustive genealogical research, we got the right men selected, and the natives themselves elected them magistrates. Then we held a general council and very sensibly the natives began to institute their own reforms.

There were many injurious customs, which had existed from time immemorial, which could only be abolished by general consent. Chief among these was the practice of going on malangas, or large picnic parties. A whole village would suddenly make up its mind to take a wandering holiday. All work would be dropped and the merry party would start on its travels. With the Samoans the virtue of hospitality is developed to an excessive degree, and it was the bounden duty of each village to lavishly entertain the visitors. Dances were held, all the pigs were killed and fun and feasting were the order of the day. This went on as long as the supplies lasted, and when the resources of one village gave out the tourists moved on to the next. Of course, when the visitors returned to their homes this boundless hospitality had to be reciprocated, so that there was always a malanga going on somewhere.

This system led to a shameful waste of food and induced improvident habits. If a village had nothing to eat, it would go somewhere else and get food. If, however, provisions were plentiful, others would come and eat with them. Thus, no one ever thought of laying up stores for the morrow, and if there was a general failure of the crops the natives often suffered severely from lack of food. The first council decided unanimously to prohibit malangas, and the custom was dropped at once, for the natives are wonderfully law abiding and obedient.

As the Samoans are naturally a virtuous people, I have left their marital customs undisturbed, except that it is now necessary to get a certificate of permission from the native governor before the ceremony. Then the couple are free either to go to a missionary and have a religious service or to get united in the old-fashioned native way, fa'a Samoa. Of course I have not interfered in any way with the religious belief of the people. Missionaries go on with their work of evangelizing and educating just as before the annexation. The London Missionary Society has by far the largest number of converts; in fact, in a religious sense, it dominates the group. The society, which teaches an absolutely unsectarian form of Christian worship, has churches and schools all over the island, and a new high school for girls has just been completed at Leone at a cost of over $10,000.

The taxation question was a serious problem at first, for Samoans, like most other people, naturally object to be taxed by others. Here again I turned to Fiji for example, and settled the matter by allowing the natives to tax themselves for their own benefit. Money was needed to defray the expenses of administration, and the native councils assessed each village at what they considered a fair amount. No money is asked for, but each district must make and deliver so many pounds of copra, the dried kernel of the cocoanut, which is the chief native product. Formerly the natives could only get a cent a pound from the traders for their copra, but I have sold it by tender for nearly two cents. In this way we raise a revenue of about $7,500, which is sufficient to defray the modest expenses of our administration.

Manua, the other pricipal island over which I have charge, is some 60 miles from Tutuila, so that it is more rarely visited. I have pursued the same policy there, with slight modifications to suit the peculiar character of the people. The Manuans, being so isolated, have some strange customs, unknown to the rest of Samoa. They used to have a queen, whom they regarded with the greatest awe and reverence. They worshiped her so highly, indeed, that she was never allowed to leave her house, and was guarded closely day and night. The poor girl naturally fell ill under such treatment, and one night, a few years ago, the house caught fire and she was suffocated. Naturally, there were no other candidates for the vacant crown, and, when I took charge Manua was getting along as best she could without a monarch. I appointed a king, who, of course, is in reality only a high chief, subject to my control, but the natives are quite satisfied, and have now abandoned the custom of imprisoning their ruler.

A PATRIOTIC TUTUILAN BELLE.

The white population of the group is very small, and is not likely to increase much, as there are few opportunities for commercial development. Though the soil is very rich, the country is too mountainous for cultivation, and there are no large level areas suitable for plantations. The only native industry is the production of copra, which is purchased by the traders or exchanged for European goods.

Franklin's Tomb Is Simple.

The vestry of Christ church in Philadelphia, replying to the many suggestions for memorial tablets at the grave of Benjamin Franklin, says: "It may not be generally known that the grave of Franklin, though simple, is what he himself, in his will, dictated it to be. The church has for past years maintained a policy of keeping the historic spot as it is."

There is a vast coal supply in Australia, which is almost unworked as yet.

HOW TO TELL BOGUS MONEY.

An Easy Matter When Certain Rules Are Borne in Mind.

Talking of counterfeiters puts me in mind of one, a notorious rascal, who was caught not long ago in this city while at his nefarious trade," said the ex-treasury official to the Washington Star. "The paper money this man produced was absolutely perfect in every detail but one thing, and it seems strange that a man of his knowledge and experience of the art of counterfeiting should not have known it." Here the treasury official took a $1 bill from his pocket. It was new and crisp and he pointed out a diminutive letter C on the right under the bill's number and another down in the other corner. "Now," he continued, "I don't suppose there are ten men in a hundred outside the treasury department who knows that these seemingly unnecessary letters are on United States bills. And even if they had noticed them I am willing to bet that not one of them could tell what they signify." Handing another bill to the reporter, the ex-treasury man asked him to read the last four figures. They were 5321. The treasury man said almost instantly, "The letter on that bill is B," which was correct. Half a dozen other bills were produced and when the treasury man was told the last four figures of their numbers he was able to tell with lightning rapidity what letter would be found on each bill. In each case the letter was either A, B, C or D. "The explanation is simple," said he. "If you take the last four figures of the number on any bill, no matter what its denomination, and divide them by four you will have a remainder of 0, 1, 2, or 3. If the remainder is zero the letter on the bill will be A. If it is 1 the letter will be B. If it is 2 the letter will be C and if it is 3 the letter will be D. This is one of the many precautions taken by the government against counterfeiters. You can tell instantly whether a bill is bad or good by making that test. I wouldn't give a 5 cent piece for a $1,000 bill, no matter how perfect it seemed, if its little letters did not correspond with the remainder obtained by dividing the last four figures of its number by four."

HELEN FORSYTH'S ODD WAISTBELT SOLD.

A magnificent specimen of New Zealand greenstone, which is extremely rare nowadays, was sold last week at Messrs. Debenham & Storr's auction-rooms in London. The stone, which is fashioned into a waistbelt, was the property of the late Helen Forsyth and was sold for $500. It is set in gold and the greenstone is decorated with grotesque figures of Maori deities. Some of the panels are set with brilliants, forming monograms and allegorical figures of birds. The waistbelt was a present to Miss Forsythe and was highly prized by her. Its original cost is said to have been $5,000. It was about the last of her effects to be sold.

Stock Exchange Slang.

We have a pretty assortment of slang on the New York Stock Exchange, but it is not a marker to that which is current in what Londoners call their "house." The legalized gambling institution in Capel Court has many odd nicknames for securities. "Berwicks" are shares of the Northwestern Railway, "smelts" are English and Australian copper shares, "pots" are shares of the North Staffordshire Railway; "muttons" are the Turkish loan of 1865, partly secured by the sheep tax; "Morgans" are the French 6 per cents, floated by that firm; "Singapores" are the British Indian Extension telegraph shares; "Yorks" are Great Northern Railway shares, "Leeds" are shares of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, "Dovers" are Southeastern Railway shares, "Brums" are London and Northwestern Railway shares, "Cohens" are the Turkish loan of 1869, floated by the firm of that name; "dogs" are shares of the Newfoundland telegraph.—Victor Smith in New York Press.

Man Has a Right to Spit.

The laws and rules against expectorating in public places, as street cars, ferry boats, waiting rooms, etc., are becoming more and more widespread. But a New York judge has made a rule which will either send the anti-spitting ordinances into "innocuous desuetude" or create an unprecedented demand for cuspidors. The judge referred to discharged three men haled before him on the charge of spitting on the floor of a ferry boat. He said to the officer who made the arrest: "What's the use of arresting these men? You know we will have to discharge them whenever there is no accommodation such as a cuspidor. Men have to spit, and if cuspidors are not provided they have to spit elsewhere."

Temperature of Cold Storage Eggs.

Madison Cooper has recently written a book on "Eggs in Cold Storage." The following extract from it will be of interest to our readers:

As far as possible we will dig out reasons for the claims made by advocates of both high and low temperatures. Taking 29 degrees or 30 degrees F. and 38 degrees or 40 degrees as representing lowest and highest of general practice we will see what is claimed by each. Those holding their egg rooms at 40 degrees say it is economical, that the eggs keep well, that the consistency of the egg meat is more nearly like that of a fresh egg after being in storage six months than if held at a lower temperature. As against a low temperature they say: "A temperature of 30 degrees is expensive to maintain; the yolks of the egg becomes hard and the white thin, after being in store for a long hold, and that when the eggs are taken from storage in warm weather it will require a longer time to get through the sweat than if held in storage at a somewhat higher temperature, resulting in harm to the eggs." Some claim that the keeping qualities are impaired by holding at a temperature as low as 30 degrees, and others note a dark spot or clot that forms in the vicinity of the germ when eggs are held below 33 degrees. Against this formidable array of claims the low temperature men have some equally strong ones, though fewer in number. They say:

"There is very much less mildew or moisture at 30 degrees than at temperatures above 32. The amount of shrinkage or evaporation from the egg is less. An egg can be held sweet and reasonably full at this temperature for from six to eight months." This last claim is a broad one and very few houses are turning out eggs answering to this description.

The following, relating to high temperatures, is quoted from a letter written by one of the best posted men in the business, who has spent much money and time on experiments and studied the question for years. He says: "A temperature of 40 degrees is very good for three months' holding, but if they run over that it is more than likely the eggs will commence to cover with a white film, which grows the longer they stand, and finally makes a musty egg." This gentleman advocates a temperature of 30 degrees for long period holding. It should be noted that the high temperature men ignore entirely the effect of high temperatures on the growth of this fungus, spoken of above as a white film. The worst thing about most storage eggs is taste, caused by this growth (usually called mildew or mold), which results in what is commonly called a musty egg. To enable us to understand the validity of these claims made by the low temperature people, it will be necessary for us to ascertain the conditions that are favorable, and also the conditions that are unfavorable for the propagation of this growth of fungus, which has given cold storage men so much trouble, ever since cold storage was first used for the preservation of eggs.

Heat and moisture are the two conditions leading to its rank growth, and the opposite—dryness and cold—will retard or stop the growth entirely. In moist, tropical countries many species of this parasite grow, while in the cold, dry regions of the north its existence is limited to a single variety. The causes leading to a growth of the fungus on the outside of an egg are not far to seek. It feeds on the moisture and products of decomposition that are constantly being given off by an egg from the time it is first dropped until its disintegration, unless immersed in a liquid or otherwise sealed from contact with the air. If the temperature is low this process is retarded.

Cold Cured Cheese.

The New York Experiment Station made a number of tests in curing cheese at different temperatures. A bulletin on the subject says in part:

Pure milk handled with the greatest care to avoid dirt and odors, and ripened, set, cooked, drained and pressed after the most approved methods, was made into Cheddar cheeses. Different lots of these cheeses were made at various times through two seasons, the lots for each test being made from the same vat of milk if possible or made from milk of the same herd at very short intervals, in order to secure cheeses of uniform quality for comparison when cured at different temperatures. These cheeses were then placed in the station curing rooms, where the heat is under automatic control and can be kept uniform at any degree between 40 and 90. The different rooms were held about 5 degrees apart; so cheeses were cured at 55, 60, 65, 70, 75 and 80 degrees F. The curing was continued from two to five months or more and cheeses of the same lots, cured at different temperatures, were scored at the same time by unbiased experts.

Fourteen comparisons were made between cheeses cured at high and low temperatures, five comparisons including all the temperatures given and four, all except the two very high temperatures.

In every case the cheeses cured below 60 degrees scored higher in flavor and texture than those cured at higher temperatures, the deterioration in quality at the high temperatures being very marked in some cases. The average score, home-trade scale, of the cheeses cured at and below 60 degrees in 1899 was almost 5 points higher on flavor and 2.5 points higher on texture than the score of the cheeses cured at 65 degrees and above. In 1900, when some cheeses were cured at the high temperatures of 75 degrees and 80 degrees, the difference in the scores was still greater: Flavor 8.1 points; texture, 2.7 points. These are more than 10 per cent gains, so far as scoring is concerned; but the real advantage of the cold curing is greater than this; for many persons will not touch a poor-flavored, poor-textured cheese at any price, who would consume or handle freely a perfect article. It is only by improvement in quality that a home market can be built up which will take all the cheeses the dairies of the state can supply. Many of these cheeses cured at low temperatures were pronounced nearly perfect in flavor and texture by the scorers. One says: "I have tested the cheese (55 degrees) and can say that it is especially fine;" another, "The cheeses all good, the 55 degree F. very fine;" another, "Nos. 5 (60 degrees) and 6 (55 degrees) are very nearly perfect cheeses. Considering that they were made four months ago we might say that no cheese could be made that would show better at the expiration of that time;" and of another lot the same expert says: "Nos. 1 and 2 (80 and 75 degrees) are about the poorest we have had from you and Nos. 5 and 6 (60 and 55 degrees) the best, particularly No. 6. This we call * * * a perfect August cheese."

Breeding of Diseased Fowls.

The fate of a sick mongrel is to have its head cut off, but what becomes of the diseased high scoring birds? asks A. K. Boyle in Inland Poultry Journal. Who would think of killing a 95-point bird just because its head swelled up? It would be doctored and fussed with until all visible signs of disease were gone, then into the choice pen it goes to contaminate all the rest and produce offsprings subject to the same disease and very likely become afflicted again itself with the first change of weather. If this is not true, why do we see so many articles on the treatment of swelled head, roup, etc?

About ten years ago I saw the effects of doctoring sick fowls. Roup got a start in our midst from a poultryman that lived on very low ground. The neighbors that did not buy eggs or stock "traded eggs" because he had a new breed. The consequence was half the chickens were "roupy." Some treated their birds very sensibly, while others dosed theirs with anything recommended. Some of us used the hatchet on all sick fowls, good or bad. That soon cleared things up for the better, but each year a few cases would crop out until all of that diseased blood was bred out. There has been a general change of breeds since and roup is hardly heard of here now. I have not seen a case of roup for several years.

It takes grit to butcher right and left among your pets, but always, remember you are saving the lives of what is left. Some claim they can cure roup, but just so long as they try it just so long will it keep cropping out when least expected. I would as soon breed from a glandered horse as a diseased fowl.

Dairy Notes.

Very few people seem to know how to cleanse dairy tinware. Using scalding hot water seems to be popular, but this is not the best way. The tins should first be washed in warm water, and not till all the milk has been removed should the scalding process take place. After being wiped dry they should be placed where the air will circulate through them.

We see that some eastern man thinks he has found a way of getting rid of all kinds of bacteria in milk. His plan is simply to freeze it, and he fondly imagines that the germs of disease and of every kind of ferment are to be thus exterminated. If the gentleman will look the matter up he will find that very severe tests have been made in the way of freezing germs to death but without much result. True, a good many germs are destroyed, but they are for the most part those in which we have no interest—being harmless. The disease germs are those for which we care most, and they are the hardest to exterminate. Heat is about the only agent that will touch most of them.

We are glad to know that the government of the United States intends henceforth to inspect all dairy goods to be exported. We have not yet learned the details of the inspection or whether it is to be compulsory on all dairy goods sent out. Unless the latter, it would appear to be little effective. Some time ago an inspection was talked of that should be made only when the men doing the exporting should ask it, and the inspectors' brand on the goods was to be a sort of carte d'entree into good society on the other side. We do not see how the United States government in that case could prevent all kinds of goods being sold as inspected goods on the other side of the water. Certainly American laws could not be enforced there, and we could hardly expect the foreign governments to be benign enough to enforce them. Let all the goods be inspected and permit no butter or cheese to leave the coast without the brand of the government upon it.

Care and Breeding of Sheep.

John Howat, at the Iowa State Farmers' Institute, spoke on the breeding and care of sheep. In part he said:

In breeding sheep the first necessity is a knowledge of conditions and an understanding of what market demand you want to meet. If you expect to go into business as a breeder of fine stock to supply the market for breeders, then you need the best there is to be had at reasonable figures. If you expect to raise fat lambs for the market, then you may be satisfied to get your experience with common sheep. Good natives make a very satisfactory foundation. But be sure and use a good mutton ram of known family. Avoid buying a cheap ram. We have seen men pay $400 for a bull and $25 to $75 for a boar pig, and $5 for a ram. The longer the leg, the poorer the wool, the more mongrel the appearance, the better he suited. We have never seen the arguments for breeding to good stock so thoroughly fortified as in breeding a half hundred native ewes to a Shropshire ram and having every lamb bearing on its face the image of its sire.

I will say that in personal experience the April lamb is the lamb for Iowa conditions. The early lamb needs too much feed before the grass comes and the late lamb gets the stomach worm and the hot weather. Breeding sheep is a simple matter, but caring for them is different. They need the closest watching.

In building sheep barns or sheds, we always have the doors in the ends and never less than eight feet wide. Sheep are the most gentle and docile animals on earth, and yet are the biggest fools in creation. It makes no difference how well fed and cared for they may be they will wedge themselves in a doorway or a gate and strain and pull and cause abortion. We have never been able to go through a season without some cases of abortion, especially in young ewes.

We rarely shut our breeding ewes in the shed, except at lambing time. Unless the wind blows hard the coldest nights will find the bulk of the flock in the open yards. Avoid close sheds; sheep must have an abundance of air. If a man will go into a close shed where a flock of sheep has been penned over night, the stench will almost sicken him. Even in the open yards, in moist muggy, heavy weather the smell is foul. Fresh air is the first great requisite.

In going around among your sheep, go quietly; don't hustle things and make them jump and run. We often go through our sheep with a lantern, and scarce a sheep gets on its feet, but if a stranger be along they get on their feet with a bound. We have lain among them by the hour, watching lambing ewes, but a quick movement will get them up in an instant. The lambing season is a delicate time with the shepherd. Where it is possible it is profitable to have some one with them all the time, especially at night. Lambs are apt to come at all hours. We have heard men say at stockbreeders' meetings that sheep were safe from 10 p. m. till 4 a. m., but we have to confess we have never in our experience had the pleasure of handling sheep possessed of such capabilities or good manners. We have sometimes thought that daybreak was the most popular time with the ewes, but we get experiences that confirm us in our opinion that a ewe drops her lamb whenever she gets ready. On one occasion we had seventeen lambs dropped between the hours of 12 midnight and 1:30 a. m.

When the lamb is dropped it is necessary to see that the ewe milks freely. A black, stringy matter fills the teats, and in many cases the lamb cannot start the milk. It should then be done by hand. The long ends and tags of the wool surrounding the udder should be clipped so the lamb won't get them in its mouth. We let our lambs run with the ewes till August, when they are weaned.

Will England Exclude Our Horses?

The importation into England annually of about 40,000 American horses has stirred up the English horse raisers, who are trying to find some excuse for excluding the foreign competitors. Up to this time they have been able to charge American horses only with pink-eye and influenza, and both of these diseases are common in England. Recently a deputation of English horsemen waited on the English department of agriculture and asked that steps be taken to prevent cheap American horses from "spreading ruin and disaster among valuable home-bred thoroughbred and carthorse stock." The deputation was asked to give some cases where American horses had given disease to English horses, but the deputation acknowledged itself unable to do so. The president of the board of agriculture then said that they had investigated the matter and had been able to find but few cases, not enough to even warrant quarantining imported horses. Out of the 1,600 American horses brought into Hull, not one case of pink-eye or influenza had been found.

It does not seem likely that our horses will be excluded. The English horse buyers have something to say in the matter, and it is to their interest as well as of the general public to continue to import American horses.

G. W. Franklin: The goat has asked for a portion of the honors belonging to sheep. Not being satisfied with the peculiarity of assisting in clearing brush lands, it is asking for a part of the demand for flesh, and unscrupulous dealers are palming off large numbers of them for mutton. They go into the stock yards at Chicago and other large market centers as goats, but no goat meat is ever brought out of any of the killing establishments.

How Mail Beats Passengers.

The vast difference between the mail service and the passenger is well illustrated by the following fact:

One of the Pacific railroads hauls a combination train, mail and passenger, over the mountains. When the level country is reached the mail cars are cut off and sent ahead. A passenger leaving the coast may mail a letter on one of these cars on his own train, and by the time he has reached Chicago he will find that the letter has already gone through the Chicago postoffice, been delivered and is waiting for him at his hotel.—Gunton's Magazine.

The Weather Man's Precarious Job.

"The business of the weather bureau is to keep a careful record of meteorological phenomena and to note 'probabilities.' This is all he is expected to do in return for the millions he receives. 'Meteorology' is at best only a pseudo-science. There is no ground for confident prediction in its vague and constantly-changing data, and long forecasts of the weather will not be made by more scientific persons than the compilers of almanacs until some one has measured the influence of the Japanese current, the spots on the sun and the habits of the ground hog. —Collier's Weekly.

For Women's Troubles, Too.

New Baden, Ill., August 12th:—Mrs. Anton Griesbaum, Jr., has been very ill. Female weakness had run her down so low that she could not do her housework. She tried many things, but got no relief.

Dodd's Kidney Pills, a new remedy, which is better known here as a cure for Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy, and Rheumatism, worked like a charm in Mrs. Griesbaum's case. She used three boxes, and is now a new woman, able to do her work as well as ever she was. Her general health is much improved, and she has not a single symptom of Female Trouble left.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are making a wonderful reputation for themselves in this part of the state.

1.50 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

The Minneapolis Journal's crop estimate will be far from correct if conditions were not sized up better in other portions than in the Red River Valley. No mention was made as to the crop in Red Lake county, which is one of the greatest wheat producing counties in the state, and where the crop this year will be many times larger than it was last year.

WILL WAIT

The Wylie Cheese Factory Will Not Run This Year.

Although the building has been completed for some time, with the machinery all in place. The Wylie Dairy Association has not been able to secure a cheese maker, and now the directors deem it rather late to start and will wait until next spring. In the meantime the farmers in the vicinity can prepare their herds by the addition of good milch cows, and have everything in readiness to begin in tip top shape in the spring. Its success will thus be assured. The Wylie creamery is another adjunct to the fast growing creamery industry that will have much to do with advancing the interests of the farmers of Red Lake county.

A bet was recently made in Great Falls due to the controversy as to the quality of bricks produced by a large yard there. The proprietor and a contractor, himself a graduate brick mason, got into a discussion, and as a result a bet of $10,000 was made. The builder maintained that the brick would not sustain a column of 300 feet. He is to undertake the construction of a stack, and after it reaches a height that ordinary workmen refuse to continue on the structure he will continue it up till something gives way. If the thing falls before it reaches 300 feet he wins. Otherwise he loses. The stack is to be six and a half brick square at the base with a square one foot flue, up which the brick are to be conveyed. The builder agrees to continue the stack until it falls, to be on the thing when it gives way and bets an additional $5,000 he is not hurt in the collapse. The loser is to pay for the bricks.

VOL. XVIII. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 1901. NUMBER 33.

JOLLY OLD UNCLE JOSH

His Great Generosity Towards His Newly Married Niece.

A Realistic Romance of Thief River Falls in Which a Number of Prominent Business Men Take a Very Conspicuous Part.

(COPYRIGHTED BY W. A. GUTHRIE.)

"Miss Summers—Polly—I—I—er—dare I—" But the speaker took a header over bashfulness, only to hear a sweet

"Yes, Charlie."

"Can I aspire to—er—to—that—is." Again a lapse into silence followed by an encouraging.

"Yes, Charlie."

"Oh, if I might only hope to—er—" Another failure of language. It was seemingly a hopeless case and might have been, only for a demure.

"Charley, I have said 'yes' twice and if you mean it I mean it, too, and—"

And to this day the young man will insist that he poped the question.

All this happened way "down east," and it wasn't long before there was a wedding. Not much longer before there was a letter from Polly's Uncle Josh, (Hon Joshua Turner, an old pioneer of Thief River Falls) rich, generous and level headed, who wrote effusively of his delight at her exhibition of what he called "grit," and he proposed that if the young people would locate at Thief River Falls he would buy a farm and start them up in life, as a wedding gift, having explained that this was the best spot in the world for young married people to get a good start. Of course they accepted and were soon bidding their friends adieu.

A few weeks subsequent to the above conversation a travel stained party arrived in Thief River Falls. Our friend, Uncle Josh, was in [illegible] straightway to the Ogahmah hotel. "We'll go the Ogahmah," said he, "'cause that's the popular place and strictly first-class. I have known Chas. A. Robbecke, the proprietor, for years and he is mine host after mine own heart; being endowed with that delightful intuition that makes a guest feel at home, comfortable, contented, and in mighty good luck. The house is one of convenience; the apartments are well furnished and the cuisine—well, that hotel is noted for its excellent table, so I have engaged rooms here until your own house is in readiness." With these remarks Uncle Josh graciously presented to Charles the deed of a cozy cottage.

"After breakfast is over," continued the old man, "I must take you for a little drive and then we'll proceed to buy your outfit. To expediate matters I'll just call up phone No. 17 and have Joe Ryson, our enterprising livery man send us around a rig." When the handsome carriage, with elaborate trappings and prancing horses drew up in front of the hotel Polly declared it to be a turnout fit for a queen. "Yes sir-ee," replied Uncle Josh, "that is a purty neat rig—the three S's 'Speed, Safety and Style' is Joe Ryson's coat of arms, and best of all, the rates are mighty reasonable. Joe Ryson, wedding, party and funeral eqipments are unsurpasled. It was in a stylish turnout indeed that the rounds of the city were made.

"No grass shall grow under our feet," remarked Uncle Josh, "so what's first on the program?" "Oh, goodness knows there's lots to buy, remarked Polly. "Then suppose we buy 'lots' first," quoth Charley without turning a hair. "Well I see you've got a great head for business," laughed Uncle Josh, "we'll just step into the real estate office of Prichard-Stone Co., in the rear of the First National Bank. I can always depend upon them for bargains in real estate, as they never hold out false lights to induce people to buy, but what they tell you about property, may be set down as solid facts. The Prichard-Stone Co. controls a large list of desirable farm properties, and their judgment on the 'good things' is par excellence." Accordingly Mr. Prichard accompanied the trio on their drive and before returning had sold to Uncle Josh, for his wards, a fine farm.

"Having already provided a cage for the bird," said Uncle Josh, "now the first thing we'll look after will be the furnishings for it." Hereupon Polly energetically delared that she had heard so much about H. M. Hicks that she had decided to go there. The result was that they were ushered into such a bewildering display that the girl was at first at a loss how to select. But she soon yielded to the seductiveness of a magnificent parlor suite, a bed room suite in oak, golden finish, that would do credit old Mr. Klondyke himself. To this she added an easy rocker for Uncle Josh, and didn't forget a most convenient and ornamental writing desk for "Hubby" Charles, having come to the conclusion that Hicks' prices were below the very whisper of competition.

"Halt!" commanded Uncle Josh as the party came in front of F. J. Stebbins' drug store. "Walk right in." Why, Uncle, we're not sick and—" "Guess I know that," laughed the old man, "but I suppose it won't be long before this young man begins to take an interest in matters of paregoric and—" "U-n-c-l-e" "We'll go in and get acquainted, besides Polly may find some toilet articles she wants." Sure enough, before leaving he was loaded down with combs, brushes, face powders and several bottles of fine perfumes. "Don't forget," added Uncle Josh, "to come here with your prescriptions, as Mr. Stebbins is a competent pharmacist and uses none but pure and reliable drugs."

"Let's see. I promised you a gold watch, didn't I?" queried Uncle Josh of Polly, "and Stebbins is the man to give us the worth of our money." At this popular store the old man gallantly acquitted himself of the promise and then directed Polly's attention to the superior stock of silverware carried by the house. "There is no other such house in town," said the old man, "and I will guarantee the quality to be the very best. Pick out your family clock while here, Stebbins carries a magnificent line. Don't forget another fact," he continued, "if ever you unfortunately need optical goods, this is the place to get your eyes scientifically tested and fitted free, and say, my boy, remember that J. Bjerkhoel is an expert doctor on sick watches."

"A pretty good start," said the old man, "and now we'll go to T. G. Thompson big hardware and stove store where Polly's house-wifely instincts will have full play in marvels of kitchen apparatus. There is not an establishment in the country that carries a more comprehensive stock of cooking machinery," remarked Uncle Josh. "Every possible piece of kitchen furnitue from a tin dipper to a cooking range is here in all styles and variety." If Polly fails to accomplish wonders in the culinary art, it will not be for want of superior cooking utensils, for they purchased a Favorite range with all others equipments needed in a well regulated kitchen, all of which Uncle Josh paid for with delight 'cause he knew T. G. Thompson had treated him all right just as he treats everybody.

"I declare, uncle," exclaimed Charley, "there goes a handsome buggy. I must have one like that for the girl." "Get it right over here," said the old man. "You see Jackson & Bailey conduct a carriage repository here that for variety and excellence of stock can't be beat. They carry a full line of surreys, carriages, buggies phaetons and wagons of all the leading makes and styles, and Jackson & Bailey satisfied with a moderate profit too." Polly was soon the possessor of a handsome carriage, but before they left Charley also got much interested in a road wagon. Uncle Josh, saw what was up, so he quickly said, "I'll honor your draft for that, my boy, 'cause I know that anything you get of Jackson & Bailey is O. K."

"And as you are going to keep a horse," continued Uncle Josh, "I reckon I'll have to give you my mare 'Kitty,' but of course, you'll need harness. Now the boss horse milliner of this section, to my notion, is C. A. Loken There is nothing in harness that cannot be had of him heavy and light, single and double, plain and fancy, work and buggy harness, C. A. Loken has 'm in stock or can make 'em to order, besides every other kind of turf goods imaginable and the finest lot of lap robes, blankets and saddles you ever laid your eyes upon." Calling upon C. A. Loken Charles soon discovered that Uncle Josh, had taken him to a good place and he ordered a set of harness that made nag "Kitty" look like a two-year-old.

"Well, Scat my!" exclaimep Uncle Josh, with a David Harum accent, as they reached the street, "I must run over to the First State bank and get another check book. Come along with me and get acquainted for of course you will do business with them and it is always more pleasant to be personally acquainted with the people you do business with. This bank is as solid as the base of the universe, is managed on safe conservativeness, and has a strong working capital. You will find them ever ready to extend any accommodations compatible with business principles."

"Guess I'll open an acount with the First State bank right away," replied Charles and he did.

"Oh, say, Uncle," exclaimed Polly, "where can I go for dry goods? This dress is hardly suitable I must admit." "Well my girl, if you want to select from one of the most popular establishments in the city, I will direct you to Central Mercantile Co. who carry stock of dry goods that for variety and real value is seldom seen outside the largest metropolitan cities they have all the latest weaves in fashionable dress goods and you are sure to be guided right in your selections. You will find the Central Mercantile Co.'s clerks pleasant to deal with, while the prices cannot be duplicated." It didn't take Polly long to tell a bargain when she saw one. She got a handsome dress with all the necessary trimmings, and several other articles of "fantastic disarray" so dear to the heart of every woman.

"Oh me! Oh my!" ejaculated Polly as she noticed the shoe department, "what a perfectly lovely slipper." "Yes," said Uncle Josh, "the Central Mercantile Co.'s stock can't be equalled in style and extent in this section. Look it over. Pick out what you want and I'll foot the bill." It might have been policy not to have extended that invitation, had not Uncle Josh known what wise economy it was to trade at this store, for Polly found goods and prices so seductive that she purchased an outfit from a pretty slipper to a handsome walking boot. Charley invested in gent's fine shoes, while Uncle Josh indulged in a stout boot, with rubberst for the crowd. No one needing footwear can resist the styles and prices offered by the Central Mercantile Co.

At this point, somewhat to the confusion of Charley, the old man indulged in a half serious criticism of his personal appearance. "You are decidedly off style for a townsman," said he, "and we'd better go see The New C. O. D. about some new duds. That's an up to date place, where they understand the changing styles and are noted for good fits, and I bet you'll look more like a newly married man when you get togged out in a C. O. D. suit." Accordingly, having found goods and prices irresistible, Charles purchased a neat suit and then invested in a complete outfit of mens furnishings from a late style hat down to sox, and he readily agreed that Uncle Josh took him to the right place when he took him first to The New C. O. D.

After this visit, Uncle Josh suggested a resort to some place of refreshment. At the refreshment table the old man waxed philosophical. "Never neglect your larder," said he. "That important adjunct to housekeeping controls masculine temper. To that end you must patronize a grocer on whom you can depend for honest goods. Through a long term of years I have found H. A. Ohm perfectly reliable. You will find him a careful man always fully stocked with every possibile thing in the line of staple and fancy groceries, fresh and firstclass no shelfworn goods there, while the prices are down to brass tacks. To keep peace in this family get all your groceries of H. A. Ohm.

At this point Uncle Josh was again noticed to inspect his bank book with a dubious 'where am I at' expression. "Gee all hemlock?" he ejaculated, "my balance is mighty nearly exhausted, but fortunately I think I can solve the difficulty. I'll see my friend M. C. Harlow and negotiate a farm loan. He has all kinds of money to loan on farms and real estate security. A man can get money of Harlow and don't have to go through a lot of red tape. No commission, no delay." So saying Uncle Josh proceeded to replenish his exchequer.

"Well, great smoke, Charley, where in the name of creation did you get that rope? That's about the worst snipe that ever came in contact with my olfactory nerve," laughingly remarked Uncle Josh. "Step in to this store and get a C. & P. or a Tip Top cigar then you'll have a gentleman's smoke. Coenen & Pederson takes great pride to make none but the best and consequently their cigars grows more popular every day." Charley was so well pleased with the cigar Uncle Josh treated him to that he bought a whole box and advised his wife to remember the brand when she got his next birth-day present, not forgetting to also make note of Coenen & Pederson fine display of other cigars, in the store.

"Law sakes!" suddenly exclaimed Uncle Josh. "all this trading 'round town has caused me to forget another one or two of the greatest essentials to future existence. Newly married folks can't live on love and scenery any more than anybody else—but your ta ble woul look slim without bread; it's the staff of life," you know. Polly must make the acquaintance of O. H Nelson the bakery; his bread pies and cakes and nicknacks are conceded by all to be the finest on earth. Remember, Charley, there is no use of your 'ootsy tootsy' bothering herself much about baking, so long as there is a good baker in town like Nelson, he made that elegant cake I sent to your weddin'." "Yes, and everybody said it was just lovely," eagerly responded Polly.

"Yes, and while we are on this important topic of gastronomics," continued Uncle Josh, "we must not forget meat. It goes hand with bread. Now the next thing is to locate a good market where you can get fresh wholesome meats, poultry, etc., at all time, and according to my notion Fosburg & Larkin are the only men to supply you. This is the boss meat market in the city and is popular with everybody who is particular to have the best. The reason for this is all because Fosburg & Larkin very careful in the selection of stock, get the best of everything and keep it fresh on cold storage. To keep your 'hubby' in a good humor, Polly trade at Fosburg & Larkin market every time." Good advise.

"Now," cried the old gentleman, "now for a picture of this crowd. In good old country fashion we'll go to the photograph gallery, and my friend, J. Borry has a good one. His pictures are wonderful in fidelity and finish. I want one full-size photo for my study and some small ones for my friends. Mr. Borry has the soul of a true artist; all his work is a labor of love in which he will not stop short of perfection. As he is famous for successful enlarging, I want to give you a life-size representation of 'yours truly. The pictures of Uncle Josh, Polly, and Charley may all be seen at Mr. Borry's studio any time the reader desires to call.

En route to their home the party called at The News office.

"You'll want the news every week" remarked Uncle Josh, and as this is the favorite local paper here I'll subscribe."

Upon summing up the wonderful event of the day Polly began to volubly express her thanks. "You have bought us everything," she exclaimed.

"Only one thing," replied Uncle Josh, reflectively, "but I can remedy that. H. M. Hicks the furniture man always has a nice line of them and you can get one whenever you want it; I'll pay for the best."

"W-h-y," exclaimed Polly with great suprise, "Uncle, what can it be?"

"Well it's a baby carriage, and—But Polly had fainted.

One of the strangest botanical curiosities in the world is the "wonder wonder" flower in the Malay peninsula. After having enjoyed several years of uninterrupted popularity the russet shoe seems at last to have been laid upon the shelf. Shoe dealers admit that there is no logical reason for the decline of the russet other than that people want a change. This year the low shoes worn by men are almost invariably of black leather. In the windows where russets are displayed at all they are marked down.

Overburdened people have hitherto looked upon a sea voyage as a sure escape to days of rest; but wireless telegraphy now opens the terrible possibility of daily papers printed upon ocean steamships, and receiving news from both sides. Long ago the apostle spoke of "inventors of evil things." Although wireless telegraphy will have many worthy uses, the "Evil Thing" would be a good name for a mid-ocean newspaper.

A certain number of peasants in the wilder and remoter districts of Ireland still wear something like a national costume. About Lough Mask plenty of the lasses are to be seen in the picturesque red petticoats that artists loved to bring into their sketches of Irish life. A sprinkling of the old high hats may be seen; the older fishermen and others wear them, but the younger school shun such antiquated headgear, as the English peasant of today does the smock frock.

That baseball is a rest-cure is the thesis plausibly defended by a Western paper, which suggests that the enthusiasts who support it do not do so because, as they affirm, they "like the game." If they liked the game they would want to play it, just as a fisherman wants to fish and not to watch some other fellow. What they really enjoy is the opportunity to relax—to yell, gesticulate, talk nonsense, and act in a way that, if they duplicated the performance on the street, would expose them to suspicion of insanity. Of course, to get away from conventionality and honestly to act out his emotions does a man good, sometimes. Better for him to do it at the expense of a "professional," who is paid to be yelled at, than to stretch his lungs against the peace of his friends or his family.

The Moorish girl is stately, graceful, palm-like, and plastic; she is robed in semi-transparent muslin, suggestive of mystic light, draping and mellowing such female loveliness as Phidias and Praxiteles sought to embody in ancient art. Her features reflect her soul as a mountain lake she bears on its surface a picture of the sunlit sky; her lithesome limbs are rounded and shapely, as if cast in a perfect mold by an Olympian artist. Her words are poetic smiles and proverbial wisdom, lisped in a soft dialect of Arabic.

PROTECT FOREST.

Black Hills Fire Warden Organizes a Fire Company.

Deadwood, S. D., Aug. 18.—The forests of the Black Hills are from now on to have the best protection possible. Capt. Seth Bullock, who has but recently been appointed supervisor of the forests of the Black Hills, has organized a fire company, which is undoubtedly the largest one in the world. The forest reserve is divided into twenty divisions, each one of which is looked after by a ranger, who sees that the laws of the reserve are observed by the settlers and mining companies.

WILLMAR'S CARNIVAL.

Officers Elected and Usual Committees Appointed.

Willmar, Minn., Aug. 18.—Willmar's harvest festival will be a hummer. At a second mass meeting of citizens a carnival association was organized and a committee on invitations chosen. Some big attractions are being negotiated for. The dates will be Sept. 26, 27 and 28. The sum of $700 is now subscribed and the amount will reach $1,000, which is a good fund to start with.

Vacancy Filled.

Anoka, Minn., Aug. 18.—Judge Giddings appointed W. B. Davee, editor of the Sherburne County Times, clerk of courts of Sherburne county, to succeed E. Bryant, resigned.

Gun in Hip Pocket.

Grantsburg, Wis., Aug. 18.—Morris Henry, who lives near here, was dangerously injured while trying to get off a train at Wyoming last night. He fell, and a revolver that he carried in his hip pocket was discharged, the ball entering his back. He was taken to a St. Paul hospital and is not expected to live.

Tent Blown Away.

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 18.—During the progress of the Pan-American circus at Port Arthur the windstorm raised the tent and many ladies fainted. A number of minor accidents occurred.

A NAVAL SCANDAL

SCHLEY INQUIRY PROMISES TO CREATE A GREAT SENSATION.

SOME BIG SURPRISES IN STORE

Former Secretary of the Navy Tracy Will Appear as One of Schley's Attorneys, and It Is Said That He Will Bring Out the Fact That Schley Has Been the Victim of Bureau Jealousies.

Washington, Aug. 16.—There is said to be a big surprise in store for the navy department when the court of inquiry meets to investigate the charges against Admiral Schley.

Secretary Long and other officers at the navy department have been proceeding on the assumption that Admiral Schley would not take the greatest advantage of the unusual privileges accorded him of having the hearings of the court open to the public and of being represented by counsel as he might choose. Both the concessions are unusual in courts of inquiry, which are, like court-martial—purely military tribunals.

The friends of Admiral Schley will take advantage of the privileges granted to the admiral and make a fight to influence public opinion and forestall the report of the court. The admiral will be represented by the ablest counsel that can be employed. Jere Wilson, the noted lawyer of Washington, will be one of his counsel, and it is said that Former Secretary of the Navy Benjamin F. Tracey of New York will also appear on that side of the case.

That Is the Surprise

which may worry Secretary Long. Gen. Tracey is one of the greatest lawyers in the United States, and it is whispered that his part in the case will be to handle the witnesses so as to reveal favoritism and petty department scandals which will assist to create the impression that Schley is the victim of bureau jealousies. It is intimated by Admiral Schley's friends that Gen. Tracey will so develop the old condition of bureaucratic methods of the navy department before the court of inquiry as to create a sensation if not a naval scandal which will cause a complete overhauling of the department whatever the result of the inquiry into Schley's alleged insubordination. It is also anticipated that such revelations will be made as to increase the public feeling that Schley is the victim of bureaucratic jealousies.

Another Attorney for Schley.

Baltimore, Aug. 15.—It was announced here yesterday that Isidor Rayner, attorney general of Maryland, has been retained as one of the attorneys for Rear Admiral Schley in his coming hearing before the court of inquiry. Mr. Rayner received a letter from Admiral Schley on Sunday in which he was asked to act as one of the counsel in the case and at once accepted the commission.

FRENCH TAKE A HAND.

Warship Suchet Arrives at Colon—Uribe-Uribe's Death Not Confirmed.

Washington, Aug. 16.—No important developments in the Colombia-Venezuelan situation were received at the state department yesterday, and the reported death of Gen. Uribe-Uribe could not be confirmed in any quarter. It is expected that the Machias will complete her coaling and taking on of ammunition and be off for Panama today. In this connection it has been noted that the French warship Suchet already has arrived at Colon. Although the French are understood to have considerable property interests on the isthmus, it is said that there is no provision in the treaty between France and Colombia similar to that in the treaty between France and the United States requiring that free transit across the isthmus shall be kept open. However, it is not doubted that the presence of the Suchet will have a salutary influence in quieting disorder. The statements made in the French press that the incident on the isthmus might lead to an American acquisition in that quarter received no attention or credence in the best posted official circles.

IOWA POSTOFFICE SCANDAL.

Investigation Reveals a Shortage in the Funds.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Aug. 16.—A shortage in the accounts of the Marshalltown postmaster made public yesterday created considerable excitement in business circles here. The shortage was discovered by Postoffice Inspector William Ketcham, and amounts to $833.36. Postmaster J. Q. Saint was at once informed of the shortage and promptly made good the loss. The responsibility for the $15,000 in stock and the $3,000 in postal funds has largely rested with Deputy Postmaster Max Kruskopf. However, others have access to the funds, which are kept in the vault, and there can be no determination made as to who must be held responsible until the matter has been fully investigated.

COMMANDER WISE DEAD.

End Came Suddenly at Yokohama From Heart Disease.

Washington, Aug. 16.—The navy department has received a cablegram announcing the death at Yokohama hospital of Commander Frederick M. Wise. He died of heart disease and had only been sick a few days. Commander Wise was in command of the old Monocacy when that ship was fired upon by the Taku forts in the early stages of the Chinese trouble.

MALTESE ARE ANGRY.

Union Jack Torn to Pieces—Victoria Statue Disfigured.

Valetta, Island of Malta, Aug. 16.—The discontent herearising from the language question and other grievances is growing more acute. Sunday the Union Jack was torn to pieces in the streets by a large body of demonstrators. This was followed by the disfiguring of Queen Victoria's jubilee statue. The marble was deluged with damaging acid. The perpetrators of the outrage have not been discovered.

REVOLUTION IN PROGRESS.

Serious Condition of Affairs in Central America.

Washington, Aug. 15.—The state department yesterday received mail advices from three different quarters in Colombia, all showing revolutionary movements in progress and a rather serious condition of affairs. Both termini of the Panama railway route were heard from, Consul General Gudger writing from Panama as to a revolutionary attack on near-by towns, and Consul Malmros, at Colon, reporting that guerrilla fighting had been going on at different points between Colon and Panama. At the same time Minister Hart wrote from the capital of Colombia as to the arrest and imprisonment of prominent adherents of the former president, Dr. San Clementes, as they were suspected of seeking to have the Nationalist organization join with the Liberals who are said to be showing increased strength and activity in a revolutionary movement. Although these letters have taken some time to come forward, yet they give the state department about the best and the only definite information which is at hand as to the condition of affairs. Mr. Gudger's letter speaks of a revolutionary raid on the 25th and 27th of July in which an alcade and several policemen were made prisoners and some arms and provisions captured. This is not the holding up of the train at Matachin reported by him by cable, as that happened later and did not result in any looting.

GEN. URIBE-URIBE DEAD.

Report Reaches New York That He Was Killed in Battle.

New York, Aug. 15.—The Times says: According to El Conservador, a semi-official newspaper published at Barranquilla, Colombia, Gen. Rafael Uribe-Uribe was killed at San Cristobal, Venez., on July 27 while fighting with the Venezuelan troops against the Colombian invaders. El Conservador's authority for this report is a message sent by Gen. Iguaran, in charge of the Colombian government forces at Riohacha to the commander-in-chief at Barranquilla. The Colombians engaged in the fight at San Cristobal were led by Dr. Rangel Carbinus. Much excitement was caused among Colombians here by the report. The friends of Gen. Uribe consider it significant that the Colombian government has not sent the news by cable to its representatives, for the Colombian consulate here has not been officially notified. While there is nothing definite on which to base a denial of the report, the general's friends discredit it on the ground that several times during the rebellion a year ago Gen. Uribe was declared killed in battle.

THEY ARGUED RELIGION.

A Free-for-all Fight and a Riot Call Resulted.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—August Martinson, the publisher of a religious paper, attempted to discuss religion with three men who were preaching Mormonism to a large crowd at Chicago avenue and Wells street last evening. A general fight took place and a riot call was sent to the Chicago avenue police station. Before the police arrived, however, the three missionaries had disappeared and the crowd had dispersed. Martinson received a severe blow on the left side of his face from one of the alleged preachers, and was stunned.

TALKS TOO MUCH.

Von Waldersee Makes Surprising Assertions.

Berlin, Aug. 15.—The Vossische Zeitung in a leading article yesterday severely criticizes Field Marshal Count von Waldersee's speeches since his return from China. It says that the count's bombastic assertion that while the German reputation in the East is advancing that of other powers is declining, is likely to cause perturbation in diplomatic circles. The paper intimates that Count von Waldersee would like to be chancellor.

MANY PRISONERS.

British Forces Continue to Capture Boers.

Pretoria, Aug. 15.—Within twenty-four hours 158 prisoners have been reported captured by the various columns, including 70 taken in the western part of the Orange River Colony by Gen. Elliot. There have been no large engagements. The number of Boer refugees now receiving relief is over 100,000.

HAS FEEBLE HEART.

Real Source of President Kruger's Failing Health.

New York, Aug. 16.—"Reports of Mr. Kruger's failing health are not authoritatively confirmed," says the London correspondent of the Tribune. "Specialists may be required for his failing eyesight, but feeble heart is the real source of danger, and cannot be guessed at."

Game Warden Makes Arrest.

Moorhead, Minn., Aug. 16.—A. C. Beck, Fred Gruhl and John E. Schoenborn, the three men arrested by Game Warden E. J. Murphy on the charge of shooting prairie chickens, pleaded not guilty yesterday and demanded a jury trial. The men were caught by Murphy and another warden and two guns and three dogs taken from them, also one chicken, which will be placed in evidence.

Died Alone in the Woods.

Cumberland, Wis., Aug. 16.—The body of Lusten Hegg has just been found in the woods about twenty miles northeast of here. Hegg, who was spending the summer at Long lake, wandered from his lodging place over two weeks ago, and is supposed to have died of epilepsy. He came to this county from Minnesota for his health.

Paris Green Suicide.

Champion, Mich., Aug. 15.—Mrs. Amos Thompson of Calumet committed suicide by swallowing a dose of paris green. Family difficulties are said to have been the cause. She was visiting her brother here.

Cash Store Consumed.

Granville, N. D., Aug. 15.—Granville's first fire was witnessed when the Iowa Cash store and contents, owned by G. H. Dwello, was completely destroyed. The loss is estimated at $3,000, with no insurance.

THE CHILDLESS

"I wonder why I shed those tears
When they laid my little child away?
After the lapse of wearying years
I am glad that I sit alone to-day;
I can hear his laugh and his glad wild shout,
I can see him still, as he ran about,
And I know the prayer he used to say.

"I hold his picture to my face
And I fancy I feel his hand again
As it creeps into mine, and he takes his place
On my knee, as he did in the fair days when
The world and the fates were kind to me
And the songs I heard were but songs of glee,
And I stirred the envy of other men.

"His days were only days of joy,
Happy, he shouted the hours away;
He was glad with the glee of a careless boy,
He laughed as only the innocent may;
He never was doomed to wearily fret
He never looked back with vain regret
At the close of a sorrowful day.

"I keep the little clothes he wore,
I treasure the shoes that encased his feet;
The way was smooth that he traveled o'er,
The flowers that bloomed at its sides were sweet;
The winds that blew through his curly hair
Had blown out of peaceful realms and fair—
There were no grim foes that he had to meet.

"I wonder why I shed these tears
When they crossed his hands and laid him away?
After the lapse of wearying years
I am glad that I toil alone to-day!
He knew life's gladness, but not its woe,
And I have his memory, and I know
The sweet little prayer he used to say."

The Girl of Lamy.

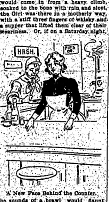
BY H. A. CALLAHAN.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

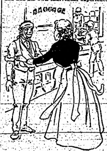
Just a handful of wooden houses in Lamy, thrown together as if by the haphazard hand of a careless God into the little pocket of the mountains that stand like priests around the city of Santa Fe. Here it is that the dust gray coaches which thunder in from Arizona on the west, meet their brothers from the east and exchange for a few brief moments the greetings of the way.

Of course, the red clap-board eating-house and station are the main attractions during these arrivals and present scenes of unwonted activity to those accustomed to the aching solitude of the place by day or its blinking dreaminess beneath the stars at night.

No one distinctly remembers just when or how the Girl became an institution at Lamy. However, they do remember that one September morning some years back there was a new face behind the counter in the eating-house; a face framed in dull gold hair and lighted by two blue-gray eyes, which seemed forever on the brink of laughter. The boys who made their home in the little clap-board affair used to call her Mollie; but it was a name of their own devising and she accepted it, as she did many other little things, with an inscrutable smile that puzzled, yet meant nothing. When the crews would come in from a heavy climb, soaked to the bone with rain and sleet, the Girl was there in a motherly way, with a stiff three fingers of whisky and a supper that lifted them clear of their weariness. Or, if on a Saturday night, the sounds of a brawl would flaunt down on the still air the Girl would walk over to German Joe's in a business-like way and scatter the drunkest of them with a quiet word and an admonitory jerk of the sleeve that sent them sneaking out like coyotes. Then, perhaps, she would stand and smile in the doorway with her hair blowing in the wind, her eyes speaking more plainly than words that a new era had begun in Lamy. Her sway was absolute. And it was not long before every fire-boy and throttle-man on the Division had had his own individual experience, tamed by the graceful slip of a girl with golden hair, who seemingly came from nowhere—the Angel of the Grade.



A New Face Behind the Counter.



"Where's Dan?"

This was all before Dan Beard happened in. Dan was from the Colorado hills and no angel. They had put him first on the little bunt line that runs crazily over the hills to Santa Fe. Then he was shifted to the main line for relay work and became a fixture at Lamy. Dan was six feet one, brown as leather and as tough, and incidentally could drink more whisky than any man this side of Phoenix. He spent his mornings against the bar in German Joe's place, cursing out the road, from the president down. Then about ten minutes before his run began he would shuffle over to his machine and get his orders. When these were duly scanned Dan would open up No. 20 gently and sneak out of Lamy like a snake, but before the whistling post was passed he had her galloping over the rails like a frightened thing and bellowing like a bull. He became notorious as the most reckless devil on the road, and everybody said that sooner or later there would be a smash somewhere up in the hills and Dan Beard would get off the line forever. But the smash didn't seem to come, and Dan's mad way continued. Then a change came. It was almost imperceptible. But gradually Dan dropped away from the whisky and bade fair to quit it altogether. He didn't take the grades so fast and slackened up on the curves almost like the rest. Some said it was "Mollie." Some said the Division Superintendent. Nobody ever really knew.

It was a morning in the early June the great event occurred. A dispatch had come over the wires saying that a special was coming from the east and that a double-header would be needed to carry it over the grades. Dan Beard's No. 20 could climb a tree, and the big fellow got his orders to make the run. It was getting close to starting time and Johnny Coleman, Dan's fire-boy, was growing anxious. Dan had not shown up all morning. He was not at German Joe's, nor around the station. The dispatcher was standing in the sun looking at his watch and swearing safely to himself. He was just on the point of putting another man on No. 20, when something white caught his eye on the hill-path that runs above the cut. As it came nearer he saw it was Mollie, and right behind was Dan, clumsily picking his way over the stones. At the station Dan called out: "All ready," to the dispatcher, looking rather sheepish and strangely happy.

"Remember, Dan," spoke Mollie, as No. 20 began to move. "Not another drop, little girl. Not another——" and he waved a brown fist back at the girl, as the tender bumped over the switch to the main track. And not until the big machine dwindled to a mere bug in the distance did Mollie turn her back and disappear in the doorway.

That night the special from the east was late. It crept into Lamy with one engine and that engine was not No. 20. The little knot that gathered in curiosity on the platform felt in their hearts something was impending. Johnny Coleman limped up, his head bandaged in white cloth, and looking weak and sick.

"Where's Dan?" asked a little woman with a face very white.

Johnny Coleman did not answer, but looked uneasily away. They were lifting something very gently from the baggage car to lay it on the platform. Johnny told as briefly as possible the details.

"Making up time, we left the track at the culvert," he said. "I jumped clear, but Dan didn't get out in time. When we got him from beneath he was pretty bad. And——" (someone was crying very softly over where Dan lay.) Johnny continued: "I guess we could ha' pulled 'im through at that. But he wouldn't take the whisky we give him.

"'Ain't drinking, Johnny; not another drop,' was all he said, and then he sort o' turned over like a tired little kid and—I 'spose that's when he died."

That night was a lonely vigil in Lamy and along in the early dawn they buried Dan Beard. He's up there near the hill-path that runs above the cut, and can hear the 100 tonners climbing up the grade. And sometimes when the boys give the long blast for the Junction they just pull a short one for Dan—the worst man on the Division.

If you are ever down that way, drop in on the girl at the eating-house. She's not very stylish, and I guess perhaps her talk is a bit western, but somehow or other they seem to think pretty well of her in Lamy. And, by the way, they don't call her "Mollie" any more. It's just Dan Beard's girl—the Girl at Lamy.

"There's a Pipe."

Do you know there is much fake business about the pipe-smoking and pipe-offering host? So long has the earth been flooded with rot and rubbish about "the pipe" that ordinary men must live fifty years before they can break away from the idea that a briar or cob, packed with long-cut or granulated at 20 cents a pound is the very quintessence of comfort and hospitality. Tut-tut! Who wants to put between his lips a guttapercha stem that others have slobbered through? I have in mind several acquaintances who keep on hand from ten to a dozen rancid old pipes to hand around when friends call. Such men are practicing economy for economy's sake. They are too mean to offer you a 10-cent cigar, and pretend that their dirty old pipes are good enough for anybody. Catch 'em outside and ask if they'll have a smoke. Why, certainly. And they order quarter cigars. I have had much experience of these chaps.—New York Press.

Advice to Girls Who Travel.

The young girl who is traveling by herself should seek information from the train people rather than from her companions on the train. No girl in traveling should make confidants of strangers of either sex, disclose her name, her destination or her family affairs, or make acquaintances on the road. She may, however, show kind attention to a mother traveling with little children, amuse a wearied little one, and politely thank anyone who does her an unobtrusive kindness.—Margaret E. Sangster in the Ladies' Home Journal.

A Cosmopolitan Army.

The conflict between the Germans and Czechs in Austria-Hungary, which deserves Secretary Seward's appellation of "the irrepressible conflict," makes interesting a study of the elements composing the army of that country, which consists of 428,000 Slavs, 227,000 Allemands, 120,000 Magyars, 48,000 Roumanians and 14,000 Italians. The Slavs are made up of 174,000 Czechs, 76,000 Poles, 75,000 Ruthenians, 75,000 Croatians and Servians and 28,000 Slavonians.

New York the Sunniest City.

New York claims to be the sunniest of the large cities. The United States weather bureau has charts in light and shade showing, from 1870 to 1895, how many days have been sunny in each part of the country. Although Arizona has sometimes attained a percentage of 80 and other parts of the west have seen very clear skies, New York city follows closely with a mean percentage of 60.

PORCUPINE PARADISE

ANIMAL WITH THE QUILLS PROTECTED BY LAW.

A Statute in Wisconsin the Like of Which Exists Nowhere Else in the United States—Protected to Save Lost Men from Starving.

Suppose you took your gun and your dog and went into Wisconsin on a hunting and fishing trip. Suppose you saw more porcupines, of the common hedgehog variety, than you did game. Suppose one of them sneaked up behind your camp and made off with the string of black bass that was all you had for dinner. Suppose your one-hundred-and-fifty-dollar dog made a dash at the thief and came back with his nose so full of quills that you had to sit down and pull them out by main force, while he howled loud enough to be heard in the next county. Then you would probably pick up a club and start for that porcupine, determined to send him where there are no black bass to steal, and no hunting dogs to maim. And suddenly your guide seizes you and prevents you by main force. In answer to your argument that a porcupine is of no use on earth, he tells you that it is against the state law of Wisconsin to kill one. Wouldn't you think that law was a queer law? And suppose you saw acres of dead basswood and birch and maple trees that the porcupines had killed. Wouldn't you be inclined to think that the people of Wisconsin were crazy to keep such a law on the statute books and enforce it? And wouldn't you think Wisconsin should be called, instead of the "Badger State," the "Hedgehog State," or the "Porcupine Paradise?" This queer Wisconsin law, the like of which exists nowhere else in the United States, is apparently designed to establish the right of the porcupine to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness within the state boundaries. It has been on the statute books ever since there have been any such volumes, and there has never been an effort made to repeal it. Of course it is often violated, but nine out of ten country justices of the peace will inflict the full penalty under ordinary circumstances. This is severe; the law provides a heavy fine or imprisonment for the killing or snaring of a porcupine. At first glance, one of the queer things about this law is the fact that no effort has ever been made to have it repealed. One would suppose that the lumbermen would have had it scratched off the books long ago. Lumbering is one of the principal industries of the state and the lumbermen naturally have considerable influence in the legislature. Now, the lumberman does not love the porcupine; on the contrary, he holds him in undying hatred. The animal ruins thousands of dollars' worth of timber every year, and the aggregate of the damage it has inflicted is almost beyond computation. Of course the porcupine does not go about killing trees for fun; but nature has given him an insatiable appetite for the inner bark and tender buds of the basswood, the birch, the maple, and other forest trees. He picks out a good-looking tree, begins at the top, and ends at the bottom. When he gets through with that particular tree there is nothing left but the bare trunk and the stripped limbs. Then he picks out another maple or birch and repeats the performance. Meanwhile his sisters and his cousins and his aunts, to say nothing of the male relatives, are doing the same thing all around him. So it is easy to see why the lumbermen do not love the porcupine. As a matter of fact, nobody loves the porcupine. Hunters detest him because he is eternally nosing about the camp and making off with anything eatable that he can secure. He does not eat insects and small animals that annoy the agriculturist; therefore the farmer has no use for him. Even the beasts of prey let him severely alone. The panther, the lynx, the wild cat, the wolf, the wolverine, and even the bear give the gentleman of the quills a wide berth; they prefer to get their meat somewhere else. Why, then, does the law of Wisconsin protect the animal? This is the reason: The porcupine is a life-saver. Nature seems to have designed him as a food supply for lost and unarmed and starving men. Wisconsin forests are vast, and human habitations in certain parts of the state are few and far between. But no man need starve to death while the porcupine flourishes. For the animal is everywhere, waiting to be killed and eaten. He cannot escape if he would, and he does not try. He curls up into a ball and fancies himself secure, but a blow from a club will kill him easily. In short the porcupine is the only eatable animal that an unarmed man can catch and kill. Every year many a lost and hungry man in the pathless forests of Wisconsin has dined heartily on roast porcupine and come out alive and unharmed; whereas otherwise he would have chewed his belt and boots, gnawed bark, and died.—John Dickinson Sherman in Youth's Companion.

Sandwich-Board Men's Union.

Only a few years ago the business most despised in New York was perhaps that of the sandwich-board man. Now it has achieved the dignity of a union whose members are as rigid in the enforcement of their rights as the men in any other trade.

Law of Affinities.

The law that holds this universe together is the law of affinities: like will seek like. Make your choice now for the good things of time that go into eternity with you.—Ladies' Home Journal.

NO CHECK REIN ON HORSES.

Citizens of Roanoke, Va., Advised to Follow a Washington Style.

A Roanoke gentleman who is much interested in the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, returning from a recent trip to Washington, said that one thing which struck him especially there was the absence of check reins from the horses. He said that not only were the horses allowed the use of their heads, but they were free from this torture of high reining. There is much meat for thought in this. The question is naturally asked, Why is it necessary to rein horses up at all? If reining is necessary in order to make the animal more useful, then it is extremely peculiar that horses in Washington do their work so well without it. Surely there is no difference between horses in Roanoke and horses in Washington when it comes to that. In fact, it is against common reason to argue that a horse or any other animal is worth more with his head doubled back at right angles to its natural position. That being so, the practice of reining must come from a desire to be in style, a desire which is, to say the least, in this case, somewhat inconsistent, as styles change. They have changed in Washington, but the check rein is still answering its fiendish, cruel purpose here in Roanoke. One would think that people who are so zealous in following the fashions in the height of the collars, the shape of their shoes and the size of the trousers at the knee would pay some attention to the fashion in regard to reining. They appear to believe it to be incumbent upon them to bob their horses' tails. That is purely a fad. Why not take up another as well? Horsemen discourse upon the advantages of high reining on the trotting courses. They perhaps know what they are talking about, but one does not see them driving their thoroughbreds over the country roads or leaving them standing for hours in the sun with their heads drawn back. If asked they would most likely say that a horse which is worth having will hold its head up without artificial props, and that it is usually the cheap plug that owners are trying to prod into some sort of show that has to be reined in order to pass for more than a baggage wagon hack.—Roanoke (Va.) TANK SHIPS STANCH AT SEA

Their Huge Airtight Compartments Are Always Kept Sealed.

For transportation of petroleum over sea steel tank ships are made for both crude and refined oil, says a writer in the Cosmopolitan. Most of the crude oil exported goes to France and Spain, where it is treated in local refineries, the duty imposed on refined oil by those countries being practically prohibitive. For the Oriental trade the oil is shipped in cases—two five-gallon cans crated together constituting a "case"—on sailing vessels, as the voyage around the Horn takes from 116 to 176 days, far too long a course for steam vessels. But the trans-atlantic trade is chiefly carried on in tank steamers, huge steel shells in which almost the entire space in the hull is devoted to carrying oil in bulk. There is a small dry compartment in the bows for ordinary freight and the crew's living quarters are put at the extreme stern, with the engines immediately forward of them. The rest of the hull is divided into from twelve to twenty air tight compartments, each of which has a capacity of about 140,000 gallons. The largest tank ship carry nearly 2,500,000 gallons and so powerful are the pumps by which they are controlled that such cargo can be taken on board or delivered within six hours. As these airtight compartments are kept hermetically sealed from port to port—instead of being closed only in an emergency, as on an ocean liner—the oil tank ships are the stanchest vessels afloat, and many a handsome sum in salvage have they earned for their owners by towing into port a vessel disabled in a storm.

Sweet Revenge.

As the magazine editor walked toward home at 3 a. m., willing hands seized him from behind and dragged him upstairs into a garret room. The budding young authors bound and gagged him, and one after another read to him the MSS. he had sent back unopened. The editor tried to break his thongs, but finding this impossible he prayed for mercy. It was a hot night in July, but one spring poem after another smote upon his ears until he fainted sheer away. When consciousness returned he found himself on his own doorstep. There was a placard pinned on his coat bearing these words: "Returned with regret!" —Ohio State Journal.

Lace on Every Gown.

Lace, it is safe to say, is on every gown in one form or another, generally in several varieties. Coarse guipures mixed with black Chantilly are the favorite ornamentation for the black and white foulards, while tambour work and Swiss embroideries prevail for muslins, crystalines, batistes, and linens.

RATTLESNAKE GOING.

FAMOUS AMERICAN REPTILE WILL SOON HAVE PASSED.

He Is Disappearing From the Arizona Frontier—Some of the Enemies of the "Rattler"—Prospector's Experience in a Three-Cornered Fight.

In a country where a quarter of a century ago a rattlesnake was to be found under every rock and in every hillock, the reptile is rapidly becoming a rarity. With his human relative, the Apache, the rattler is disappearing from Arizona and is now found only in the most isolated districts. To the advance of civilization and the unremitting warfare of the road runner and the king snake may be attributed the extermination of the rattler. Wherever irrigation has found its way the rattlesnake has been driven to higher ground and there the prospector and miner have slain him whenever and wherever found. The road runner, that long-legged, feathered warrior, the fighting cock of the desert, has done his part and done it well. Much resembling but more lightly constructed than the fighting cock, the road runner is one of the most dreaded enemies of the rattler. In fact, so great are his snake killing proclivities that heavy penalties are provided by the territorial statutes as a protection to him from the gun of the hunter. Apparently immune to the venom in the poison sac of the rattler, the road runner attacks the largest snake with impunity and was never known to lose a fight. Frequently, indeed, the road runner has been known to battle with and kill a pair of large diamond rattlers, whose total weight was five times that of his own. Not so common an enemy to the rattlesnake, but no less deadly, is the king snake, a large species of the bull snake family. Rarely seen in the lower countries, but often found in the northern forests and higher mountains, the king snake wages constant warfare on the rattler and when his great lithe form coils around the body of the rattlesnake the life of the latter is a matter of only a few seconds. Herbert Housland, a prospector, had an experience with a rattler, a king snake and a road runner a few days ago which he will not soon forget. He was with a party in the Bradshaw mountains, south of Prescott, and was guarding camp for the day. He had lain down to sleep, when he was suddenly aroused to find a great rattlesnake coiled upon his breast. "I almost suffocated from fearing to breathe lest I should be bitten," he said. "The snake was greatly excited and in a minute I saw the cause. A king snake was trying to excite the rattler to combat, and my person was the chosen battleground. The king snake had probably forced the rattler to refuge upon my body, and following up his aggressive tactics was running in a circle around the rattler very rapidly. He crossed my breast from left to right and my thighs from right to left, and within less than a foot of the rattler's body. The velocity of the snake was most wonderful. It seemed to be one continuous ring, and part of the time I could seemingly see three or four rings at once. I made a slight movement with right foot, which attracted the rattler's attention for an instant, and that was fatal to him. At that one false movement of his eyes the king snake darted in and seized the rattler by the throat, close up to his head and began instantly to coil around his victim. They rolled off me in their death struggle and became one tangled mass for ten minutes when the rattler's sounds died away gradually. While I lay exhausted from my fright a road runner darted out of a bush, and grabbing the two snakes in his beak, began to drag them away. The weight was too great, but he killed the king snake by a blow from his long bill and ran away as I arose. I threw the two reptiles into the bushes, and there the bird and his mate devoured them."

How to Button a Coat.

The art of properly buttoning a coat—any coat—is, do it the other way. That is to say that nine out of every ten of us button our coats the wrong way; we commence with the topmost button when we should commence with the bottommost. The frailest portion of a coat, in respect to shape-retaining qualities—no matter how well made—is the region of collar and lapels. The swagger merchant tailor always cautions his customer to "wear it buttoned a few days so that the collar may set properly." Then, this admitted, it follows that tugs and strains affecting this part of the garment tend to destroy its symmetry. Drawing the coat together by the topbutton and buttonhole for the purpose of fastening, exerts a pull all around the shoulders and neck region, which, by repetition, in time will give the smartest coat a hang-dog appearance.—Chat.

Ancient Cast Steel.

The manufacture of cast steel in India can be traced back over 3,000 years, while there are also examples of wrought iron work nearly as old. Near Delhi, close to the Kutub, there is an enormous wrought iron pillar, which weighs ten tons and is thought to be over 1,500 years old.—Chicago Chronicle.

Our Own Kangaroo.

A miniature kangaroo has been discovered in the far west. It strides around like a kangaroo, making great jumps on its hind legs, which are long and powerful. It also has a surprisingly long tail, which adds to the resemblance to the marsupial after which it is named.

North Dakota Crop Prospects.

Conservative Summing Up of the Wheat Situation All Over the State.

An expert who has just completed a three weeks' trip over the main lines and most of the branches of the Northern Pacific and the Soo roads and has studied the agricultural and crop situations at first hand in the region traversed by these lines, in the State of North Dakota. The distance traveled was nearly two thousand miles, and covered some of the oldest settled portions of the state and some of the parts recently occupied by incoming settlers. A summary is given of the study of the present crop situation and the prospects for future development of the state in agriculture and stock raising.

The wheat crop in the Red River valley, which represents the oldest settled part of North Dakota and the most fertile and productive wheat farming region in the world, will, in the opinion of the writer, prove to be a good deal of a disappointment when the threshing is done. The heavy rains of the months of June and July were such as to drown the crop on the lower lands, and many fields are now being harvested only in parts, the ground being bare of anything to harvest in the low places. The growth of straw is large on the higher lands, but the heads are small and not well developed. Flax bids fair to yield a crop up to the average, but the season has not been favorable for a large growth.

Along the line of the Fargo Southwestern branch of the Northern Pacific the drouth of the early season gave the starting crop a hard setback. The growth of straw is not large, and the leaves were brown and dead in many that there must naturally follow a light yield of grain. In Ransom and La Moure counties there is much land that is high, dry and sandy. This region seems to have suffered a great deal from the early drouth. The summer rains have brought out a good crop of hay on the grass lands in these regions, and those farmers who have gone into stock raising will have a good showing for stock. Haying was in full progress along the line, and a good quality of hay was being put up. There is some good farming land in Ransom, La Moure and Dickey counties, but a large amount of it is yet unbroken sod. At the time of passing through this region during the last days of July the crops were suffering under a scorching hot wind, and serious results were anticipated to the then just maturing crops.

Along the line of the Bismarck extension of the Soo road, from western Dickey and La Moure counties through Logan, McIntosh and Emmons counties, the country is high rolling prairie, on what is known as the coteaus of the Missouri, or the great Missouri plateau. The settlers in this part of the state are mostly Germans or German-Russians. The country is well and naturally adapted to ranching or stock farming. At Kulm and Wishek, two growing and lively towns on this line, the topic of conversation on the street corners and in the shops, such as the visitor to the towns would be able to overhear, was as to the effect of the recent hot winds upon the crops. The ominous shakes of the head betokened the fear that was generally felt that the crop had sugored considerably. There are seven elevators at Kulm, and a passenger on the train said he had seen as many as three or four hundred teams ranged in line along the roads waiting to get to the elevator to unload wheat, the road for two miles out in the country being lined with teams.

At Wishek railroad construction on the branch which extends south to Ashley and thence through South Dakota across to the Missouri river, was in active operation, but the general scarcity of men made it impossible to carry on the work with the rapidity desired by the railroad people. The demand for laborers on the farms was so great that it was impossible to get men enough. Special cars for the transportation of laborers had been run from the Twin Cities, but farmers along the line had induced most of them to drop off and go to work in the harvest fields.

The country between Wishek and Braddock, the present terminus of the branch, is largely a ranching country, and for this purpose offers great inducements. The ranchers appear to be among the most prosperous in the state. There seemed to be abundance of water in the lakes and streams, in which the country abounds, and the hay crop is very good.

Returning to the main line of the Soo road at Fairmount, in the extreme southeastern part of the state, the crops which are mostly wheat, are good upon the higher land, the heavy rains having been favorable for the development of the crop on the sandy soil. Hankinson is located on the great sand plain, known as the delta of the Cheyenne river—a delta formed in the ancient Lake Agassiz, which once covered the now fertile Red river valley. Here the soil is sandy, in places piled up into Dunes. This land requires and can stand a great amount of moisture. The same system of hills that has been spoken of as lying about Lisbon extends across this section of the state. There is a good deal of land which is adapted for grazing. North along the line to Enderlin there is not much in crop over much of the way. The soil is sandy, and has been piled by the wind into low dunes. Where there is a crop, though, it is bidding fair to yield well this year, the heavy rains having been advantageous for such soil.

North of the intersection of the Soo and Northern Pacific roads at Valley City the Soo line passes through a fine section of prairie land. Carrington, Fessenden and Harvey, in Foster and Wells Counties, are all thriving and busy towns in the midst of good agricultural lands. The wheat and flax crops are better northward than farther south. And the farther north one goes the better the crops are seen to be. This was seen to be the case throughout the entire length of the Soo line in North Dakota. This, together with reports from other northern portions of the state, make it look as if the northern half of the state would lead the southern half this year.

Minot and the Mouse valley country will almost outdo the entire state in the quality of the wheat and flax crops, judging from present prospects. In the real estate offices in Minot are not the only places where fine samples of wheat, flax and potatoes and corn are to be seen. The real estate men are not slow to show the good things that country is this year producing, but as a matter of fact some of the best crops in the state are up in that section. All along the line up to the international boundry the crops are very good, better, in fact, than at any points in the southern portions of the state which were visited. One field of wheat which we drove through was declared on good authority to be the thirteenth successive crop on that ground, and it was unqualifiedly one of the finest pieces we have seen anywhere this year. This field is just over the Canada line north of Portal. Our informant, whose word we had no reason to question, but have every reason to deem reliable, said that that same field had yielded an average of twenty-one bushels per acre for the twelve crops which have been taken off from it in twelve successive years. The land showed careful and diligent farming, and we have no reason to think that the statement is at all overdrawn. There was not a weed to be seen in the whole immense field. The land here is just about the same as the land south about Portal (N. D.), Flaxton and Bowbells.

Westward from Minot, along the line of the Great Northern road, similar favorable conditions prevail. The country has settled up with magical rapidity during the past two years and this bids fair to be a very successful one for the new settlers. Des Lacs, Lone Tree and Berthold, which, two years ago, were but names on the map—section houses, with vast stretches of prairie surrounding for miles in every direction are now thriving towns surrounded by settled communities.

Returning over the Soo road to the Northern Pacific at Valley City, the country westward to the state boundary at Sentinel, Butte was traversed over the main line of the Northern Pacific. In the main the same disappointing aspect of the crops which has been noted in the counties farther south are repeated here. There are some good crops about Valley City and Jamestown, but on the whole there will, we predict, be a good deal of disappointment when the tally is made from the threshing. On the Missouri "slope" again the crops were unusually good, as judged from a hasty survey of the fields. The late heavy rains seem to have been in time to bring on the wheat, and flax bids fair to be a good thing if not set back by frost or other hindrance. West of Bismarck, on the Missouri, there is little farming. Ranching is the main business, and a mighty good business it is, too. Dickinson, the county seat of Stark county, away out in the far western part of the state, is one of the most prepossessing appearing towns in the whole state. Located in the midst of a region devoted to stock ranching, where general farming is an art almost unknown, it is a thrifty and prosperous town. Houses well painted, door yards and lawns well kept, flower gardens nicely trimmed and in full bloom, one almost forgets that he is in the Far West, and falls to thinking that he is in some snug New York or Massachusetts town which has been struck with a sudden impulse to wake up and do business—for Dickinson is a live town and business appears to be moving.

The famous "Bad Lands" are just west of Dickinson. The traveler who can ride through this picturesque region and not be interested must be indeed stupid to the beauties of the Creator's handiwork. But not altogether "bad" are these lands if one rely upon the testimony of the ranchman who have dwelt in this land for twenty years—and there are none whose word we would trust farther—for here are said to be the finest grazing lands in the whole Northwest. The grass is abundant in the coolees and it is said to be of a very nutritious quality, far more so than that which grows upon the prairies. But except for the hay crop there is "no crop report" for this region. Hay is cut in the broad valley bottoms and on the table lands, but for the most part animals live by their own labors, eating first-hand the year around from the mother earth.

On the whole, the crop outlook for the State of North Dakota for 1901 is not as bright as it was generally hoped it would be a few weeks ago. It is the writer's prediction that there will be a general disappointment over the state as a whole when the threshing has become under way enough to allow of a definite estimate of results. The reports which have already been heard from some localities where threshings have been made, that where thirty bushels per acre had been expected from the great growth of straw, only about twelve to fourteen bushels per acre had actually been realized, may not be a fair criterion for estimating, but we anticipate from observations made directly in the field that there will be a great deal of disappointment. When the leaves are seen to be brown and dead on wheat before the heads are fully formed, no matter how large the growth of straw may be, there must be bound to be shriveled and shrunken wheat in the heads when threshed, because the leaves are the stomachs and lungs of the plant, and when these are dead and useless the plant has no way to form and prepare the materials which go to make up the valuable parts of the berry, except what can be accomplished by the green part of the stem or stalk, and this can but poorly make up for the loss of the leaves, and, at best, can make but a shriveled kernel.

If the state, as a whole, yields twelve bushels per acre of wheat, the expectations based upon observations made in twenty-seven counties during the last two weeks of July and the first week of August will be fully realized. This estimate will be received by many with contempt, but it is an estimate based upon what has been seen and what could be learned in the field.

EIGHTY LIVES LOST.

Steamer Strikes an Iceberg and Goes to the Bottom.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 20.—The steamer Islander, the crack passenger steamer of the Alaskan route operated by the Canadian Pacific Navigation company of this city, struck an iceberg off Douglass island at 2 o'clock on the morning of Thursday last and went to the bottom, carrying down 63 to 80 souls, including passengers and members of the crew. Some of the survivors arrived here last evening by the steamer Queen. They report that when the vessel went down her boilers exploded, causing the death of many who might have escaped. Capt. Foote was on the bridge and went down with his steamer.

George McL. Brown, executive agent of the Canadian Pacific railroad, after interviewing the officers who returned, said:

"The purser is remaining in the North attending to the forwarding of through passengers. It is impossible to give an exact list of those lost, but from the fact that 133 were saved the number lost must be below the figures mentioned. In my opinion the loss of life will not exceed twenty."

GEN. MACARTHUR ARRIVES.

Will Go to Washington to Report to the War Department.

San Francisco, Aug. 20.—Gen. MacArthur arrived from Manila yesterday on the transport Sheridan. After spending a day or so here Gen. MacArthur will leave for Washington to report to the war department. S. M. Green of Milwaukee met Gen. MacArthur here with a greeting from the people of Milwaukee and an invitation from the Merchants and Manufacturers' association of that city to a sumptuous feast when he arrived home. Gen. MacArthur left Manila July 4 and spent several days traveling in Japan, leaving Yokohama Aug. 3. On conditions in the Philippines the general said he could say nothing beyond what is contained in his report to the war department made July 4, the day of his departure. Gen. MacArthur regards the capture of Aguinaldo one of the most important feats of his campaign. He said Aguinaldo had since his capture been of service in bringing about a full acknowledgment of the authority of the United States.

PROGRESS IN PHILIPPINES.

Commissioners Find the People Ready for Civil Government.

Manila, Aug. 20.—Both the civil and military officials are gratified at the progress now being made by the Philippine commission. Everywhere in the Northern islands the commissioners find conditions ready for civil government, and Gen. Chaffee has received none but satisfactory news from Batangas and Nimaoro. Advices from those districts tell uniformly of captures or surrenders. Many rifles have recently been obtained and large quantities of supplies secured. Malvar and his principal officers are being closely pressed. Representative Julius Kahn who left Manila yesterday, says the great needs of the Philippines are a line of fast steamers to carry the mails and to keep the people in touch with current events, electric cars, and the removal of the nipa houses from Manila, these to be replaced by villas.

EUROPEANS BURN OUR COAL.

United States Now Stands Third Among Coal-exporting Countries.

Washington, Aug. 20. — The United States now stands third in the list of coal exporting countries. Only Great Britain and Germany now exceed this country in exporting coal. Coal exportations from the United States during the fiscal year just ended, as shown by the treasury bureau of statistics, amounted to $22,317,496, against $19,502,813 in the fiscal year of 1900, $13,661,026 in 1899, $11,008,613 in 1897, $10,646,063 in 1896 and $8,391,026 in 1891. Thus the value of coal exportations from the United States has doubled since 1897, and nearly trebled in the decade. These figures relate to values. Measured by quantity the increase has been even greater, the exports in 1901 being 7,676,140 tons against 2,339,037 tons in 1891, thus making the total exports of 1901 in quantity more than three times as much as in 1891.

ANIMALS FLOODED OUT.

Alabama Still the Home of Deer and Bears.

Mobile, Ala., Aug. 20.—The Louisville & Nashville railroad, which was put out of business between this city and New Orleans by the gulf storm, was put in condition yesterday, the first train from New Orleans arriving in Mobile during the day. Telegraphic communication with New Orleans was also obtained yesterday for the first time since the storm. Several linemen who have been working below came in last night. They say that the water in the Tensas swamp completely demoralized the wild animals which have their haunts in that wild waste. Many deer came up on the railroad to escape the flood, and the linemen caught one which was so exhausted by swimming that it was unable to get away. A big black bear also came out of the swamp, but it was not captured.

MOLTEN METAL EXPLODES.

Three Men Killed and Eleven Others Badly Injured.

Youngstown, Ohio, Aug. 20.—An explosion of ten tons of molten metal in the blast furnace department of the Ohio plant of the National Steel company yesterday resulted in the death of three workmen and the injury of eleven others. Two of them are in a dying condition and at least six others are not expected to live. The accident was the result of the machinery which controlled the ladle containing the molten mass breaking and letting the metal drop into a vat containing water.

MAY BE SCENE OF GREAT STRUGGLE

News of Important Developments in South America Is Received in Washington — Ecuadoran Troops Ready to Invade Colombia and Venezuela Sends Assistance to Colombian Insurgents.

Washington, Aug. 20.—News received yesterday from South America shows that the plot revealed a few days ago is thickening, and it would not surprise Washington officials if Venezuela, Columbia and Ecuador would within the next week be the scene of one of the greatest struggles in the history of South America. Word was received yesterday that Ecuadoran troops are preparing to invade Colombia and that President Castro of Venezuela has sent men and arms to Colombia to assist the Colombian revolutionists. This news

It was found later, minus its contents, in a down-town restaurant. There is no clue.

SLAPPED CARRIE'S FACE.

Joint Smasher Attempts to Down the Nicotine Habit and Gets Jolted.

Utica, N. Y., Aug. 17. — Mrs. Carrie Nation took in the Island Ramble excursion on the St. Laurence river yesterday, and as a result of her efforts to suppress the nicotine habit among the smokers aboard the boat she had her face severely slapped. Immediately on getting aboard the excursion steamer she began a tirade, and accosted every one who was smoking with the command to throw the weed away. Some complied and some did not. Some she relieved of their cigars by force of arms and some by force of eloquence. To all, individually and collectively, she delivered her diatribe against the evil of smoking. Going up to Eugene Foley of Clayton, representative of a Utica shoe house, she demanded that he throw his cigar into the river. He refused and she made a short-arm jab for the weed. Foley side-stepped and countered with his open hand upon the robust cheek of the reformer. This encounter ended for a time her cleaning-up process, and she turned her attention to the beauties of the scenery.

CHRISTENED AND LAUNCHED.

Three New Additions to the United States Navy.

Baltimore, Aug. 17. — Like sleek, crouching tigers starting into the native jungle, the torpedo boat destroyers Whipple, Truxton and Worden yesterday slid from the ways at the marine department of the Maryland Steel company's works at Sparrow Point, and are now in the blue waters of the Patapsco river. The Whipple left the ways at 1:48, the Truxton at 2:03 and the Worden at 2:13. The Whipple was christened by Miss Elsie Pope of St. Paul. The Truxtun was named by Miss Isabelle Truxtun of Norfolk, Va., the granddaughter of Commodore Truxtun. Mrs. Emilie D. N. Worden of New York christened the Worden. A special train of eleven coaches left union station for the launching at 1:05 o'clock, arriving at Sparrow's Point at 1:30. It was packed with distinguished guests of the Maryland Steel company. Wharves and sheds were covered by thousands of spectators, including the inhabitants of Sparrow's Point. The whole scene was made gay by bunting distributed over the torpedo boat destroyers and other available places in the yards.

CORN KING BANKRUPT.

Receiver Appointed for the George H. Phillips Company.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—On the petition of three creditors of George H. Phillips' company a petition in bankruptcy has been filed for the company in the United States district court. George H. Phillips and two other directors of the company filed their consent that the petition be allowed, and the Chicago Title and Trust company has been appointed temporary receiver. Sackett, will be appointed by the receiver to manage the business, and the affairs of the company will proceed under the new management. It is now estimated that the assets of the company will aggregate $250,000 and the liabilities will not exceed $200,000.

Washington, Aug. 17.—Admiral Winfield S. Schley arrived in the city from his home in New York yesterday on business in connection with the coming board of inquiry asked for by him to investigate the Santiago campaign. He smilingly declined to make any statement bearing upon the work soon to be begun by the court. During his stay here the admiral will consult with Hon. Jeremiah Wilson and his other attorneys as to the conduct of the case. It is expected his presence will be required here for several days.

HILL'S BIG PLANS

COMPREHENSIVE SCHEME FOR DEVELOPING TRADE WITH THE ORIENT.

GREAT THINGS FOR THE FARMERS

New Venture Will Revolutionize Ocean Transportation — Will Set Down Our Products in the Orient Cheaper Than Ever Before — Ocean Leviathians Being Built for This Trade.

New York, Aug. 20. — James J. Hill, who is the head and front of the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Burlington group of railroads, has comprehensive plans on foot for developing the traffic of those companies in connection with the Oriental trade, which he is about to enter on a huge scale. He will, he says, be able to carry ocean freight in his big liners at half the cost required with the average vessel, and, although he talks modestly about the new venture, his friends say he has assured them he will revolutionize ocean transportation. Mr. Hill figured out that the surplus of the principal crops raised in the western half of the United States—Particularly west of the Rocky mountains—must find a market in the Orient, instead of being hauled eastward to compete with the exports from the Atlantic ports.

Must Be Done on a Large Scale.

When this can be done on a large scale, not only will the agricultural classes receive more for their products, but the shipments of the railroads will be considerably increased. Furthermore, the profits of the transportation companies will show at still larger increase, because they will get a greater volume of west-bound tonnage, which thus far is comparatively light in the Western states. The transcontinental railways have plenty of freight to bring east, but the showing on west-bound traffic has not been so good, although it costs just as much to haul empty cars west as loaded ones. Now, according to Mr. Hill, the building up of Oriental traffic, particularly from the railway standpoint, will add largely to the net returns of these companies without their operating expenses, for they will be carrying back full cars, where many of them at present have to run empty. But in addition to this he expects large returns from the steamboat lines. Mr. Hill, for the first time, yesterday gave some details of how he will handle the Oriental trade with his ocean leviathians of 25,000 tons capacity, which, he said, would carry the cargo of the White Star freighter Celtic, at present the largest ship afloat, and lift the bulk almost equal to that of the latter ship in addition. Mr. Hill's new ships for the Pacific trade, which are now building at New London, will cost $2,500,000 each. "There is an enormous trade awaiting development in China and other Asiatic countries," said Mr. Hill, "but in order to capture it we have to deliver goods to them than anybody has done in the past. To get our share of the business we must make the things more cheaply than merchants of other nations, and to build up the trade in interior points of Asia we must, of course, reach a level of prices much lower than has ever before been attained. There are myriads of Orientals who live on 10 or 15 cents a day—some for less—and we must give them cheap food and clothing. Now, how can this be done? If we cannot lessen the cost of production we must get the cost of delivery down. We can apply the same principal in ocean navigation as in railroads, carry much larger quantities at once. The relative cost will be less. We expect with our large ships to be able to greatly reduce the rate of transportation to shippers and still make a good profit. As a result we shall secure a large amount of new business in the Orient."

Greatly Increasing

More Cheaply

MORGAN'S LATEST SCHEME.

Plans the Greatest Labor Union of the Age.

New York, Aug. 17.—The Press says: J. Pierpont Morgan has planned the greatest labor union of the age, a union of labor and labor's ally—capital. According to his plans, stock of the United States Steel corporation valued at several millions of dollars at par, has been set aside for the purchase at inside figures by the 165,000 men employed by the companies that make up the great steel trust. It is contemplated to form this copartnership between the shareholders and the employes of the United States Steel corporation. The plan was conceived before the strike was thought of, and then it was expected that it might be put in operation in two years. It required time to formulate the details of such a tremendous undertaking. For this reason announcement was withheld. At a recent conference, however, between the executive board of the Amalgamated association and Charles Schwabe, the president of the steel corporation, it came out that Schwab, under the direction of Morgan, had formulated a profit-sharing scheme whereby it was proposed to make every employe of the steel corporation a copartner in the business.

But the Latter Also Perished in the Water.

Helena, Mont., Aug. 17.—Agnes and Isabelle, aged eight and seven years respectively, children of Charles Gales, were drowned at Coburg, near here, while playing at a dam on the Savoy creek. The younger of the two slipped on the edge of the dam and fell into the water, which is five feet deep. The other little one made an effort to rescue her sister, and in doing so fell in also. The children went to the bottom and were drowned before they could be rescued. The parents are prostrated from the shock.

Whitford and P. C. Carberry.

She has been able to give but a vague description of the man.

Fargo Helps Steel Strikers.

Fargo, N. D., Aug. 17. — The Fargo typographical union held a meeting and made an assessment for the benefit of the steel strikers. An address was issued to the public to assist in the contributions.

IT HAS SHIFTED

INTEREST IN THE STEEL STRIKE SEEMS TO HAVE MOVED WESTWARD.

NEWS THAT CAME OUT OF THE WEST

Cheered the Strikers in the East—They Believe Both Milwaukee and Chicago Will Be Won Over—On the Other Hand the Operators Say the Strikers Are Now at the Flood-Tide of Their Success.

Pittsburg, Aug. 18.—The center of interest in the steel strike has shifted to the West, where Joliet finally swung into line with the strikers and Milwaukee appointed to-day as the time for a final vote on the question. The news that came out of the West cheered the strikers throughout the districts in this vicinity as no other development since the labor war was declared. In their enthusiasm they count on favorable action at Milwaukee to-day, and carrying their hopes still farther, say that they will yet win Chicago over. These successes, they declare with apparent confidence, will make them masters of the situation and win the strike. The steel operators, on the other hand, say that the strikers are now at the flood tide of their success, and that when the ebb comes it can never be stopped. They do not seem to be disturbed by recent events and with a confidence equal to that of the strikers talk of the certainty of ultimate success. They assert that popular sentiment has never been behind the strikers and that the general interest which was once aroused by the Contest Is Quickly Waning.

They claim that they are more than holding their own in the non-union plants that were unaffected or have been started since the strike began, and are perfecting plans for reopening several plants now idle. They also claim that many of their men, particularly at McKeesport, Wheeling and Bellaire, were forced out by intimidation and will come back as soon as the excitement dies out and their safety is assured. Talk of peace has been dropped for the time being, and it is agreed that in its present aspect the situation indicates a prolonged and stubborn contest.

Two hundred men employed in the National Galvanizing works of the National Tube works at McKeesport struck yesterday. They were the last remaining workmen in the affected trades in that city and the tie-up is now as complete as possible there. Many of the tube workers, although on strike, have refused to join any union, and the opinion is expressed that there will soon be a break among the strikers. The leaders for to-night to re-enthuse the men and check any break that may be possible. The organizers are working indefatigably to keep the men in line. They are also extending their operations to Duquesne and Homestead, the two great strongholds of the Carnegie company, and claim to be gaining ground at both places. The recent gains here and at Joliet will bring the total number of men brought out by the third and final call of President Shaffer to about 30,000, and press the grand total to something over 70,000. Thousands of the men out have found other work and the exact number now idle is unknown. The Amalgamated association is organizing a number of employment bureaus and plans to place many more of the idle men. President Shaffer announced that after Sept. 1 the idle Amalgamated men would receive strike benefits of $4 a week apiece, and that some provision would be made for men outside the organization.

Tin Plate Workers Hesitate.

The lodges of the International Tin Plate Workers' Protective association throughout the country are passing upon the question of handling the Welsh plates which the American Tin Plate company plans to import to replenish the supply cut off by the strike, and their decision will have an important bearing upon the strike. The tin plate workers claim that on certain occasions in the past when they asked for the aid of the Amalgamated association they were given no satisfaction, and that the association itself furnished precedents against sympathetic strikes.

Seem to Favor a Strike.

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 17.—The members of the Bay View lodge of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers will to-day at 3 o'clock decide for a second time whether or not they will obey the strike order of President Shaffer. Michael F. Tighe, representing President Shaffer, accompanied by W. C. Davis, vice president of the Fourth district of the Amalgamated association, reached Milwaukee yesterday afternoon, but not until late last night did he have a conference with President Redfern of the local lodge relative to the date of the meeting. As time goes on the chances seem to favor a strike, the sentiment in that direction seeming to have gained strength since the men at Joliet decided to go out. There are, however, many conservative members of the Bay View lodge who favor remaining at work. These are men who have gone through strikes heretofore, and before another such step is taken the question will be weighed very carefully.

Floral Parade at Night a Pretentious Affair.

Grand Forks, N. D., Aug. 18.—Winnipeg day was celebrated here as it never was before. From early morning until midnight, when the last special left for Canada, it was a day of general festivity. Three specials arrived over the Northern Pacific between 11 and 12 o'clock, bringing over 2,500 persons, including over 200 of the Ninetieth battalion, under command of Lieut. Col. Chambre, and members of the Canadian Veterans' association. The floral parade started at 8 p. m. and was the most elaborate affair of the nature ever witnessed in the Northwest. Over 200 handsomely decorated carriages, a dozen floats and over fifty bicycles passed in review through the principal streets.

SIXTY ARE MARRIED.

Breezes From the Sea Have Peculiar Effect on Teachers.

Carbondale, Ill., Aug. 18.—Among the four hundred American teachers who sailed on the transport Thomas from San Francisco to Manila, sixty of them on reaching Honolulu were married. The teachers had been chosen from the many normal universities of the country and were all strangers to each other. Their acquaintanceship and courtship extended over a period of less than ten days. The captain of the Thomas refused to permit the weddings while en route and the thirty pairs upon their arrival at Honolulu sought out a clergyman and were married. A boat was chartered and the thirty pairs made a tour of the bay. The information reached this city from one of the men who was appointed from the school at this place.

A SET OF SILVER.

Fine Prize for Oshkosh Yacht Club Races.

Oshkosh, Wis., Aug. 18.—The regatta committee of the Oshkosh Yacht club has deviated from the customary rule and for the Oshkosh club trophy race on Aug. 23 of regatta week has purchased a solid silver and gold lined dinner service set, containing 12 forks, 12 dessert spoons, 12 large teaspoons, 12 small teaspoons, 1 gravy ladle, 1 cream ladle and 1 berry spoon. The silver is of Gorham make, valued at $150, and is in a mahogany chest 22 by 28 inches. The 20-footer capturing a single race becomes permanent owner of the chest.

TOWN IN DARKNESS.

Electric Light and Water Plant Destroyed by Fire.

Glenwood, Wis., Aug. 18.—As a result of a fire which broke out in the boiler room of the Glenwood water works pumping station and electric lighting plant at 6:45 p. m. yesterday, the city is without either fire protection or light. The fire communicated from the power plant to the stave mill of the Glenwood Manufacturing company, which adjoined the pumping station, and both buildings were totally destroyed with their contents and a large amount of stock. The loss will aggregate $40,000, partly covered with insurance.

DRUM LUMMON MINE.

Company Abandons Lower Workings of Mine.

Helena, Mont., Aug. 18.—The Montana Mining company is preparing to abandon the lower workings of the Drum Lummon mine at Marysville, for many years the principal gold mine in this state. Pumps will be pulled out and lower workings from the seventeenth to the fourth level will be abandoned. The mine has produced more than $20,000,000.

STOPPED THE ENGINE.

But Only After It Had Passed Over His Body.

New York, Aug. 18.—Alfred Blanco, an employe of the West Shore railway, wagered a week's pay with his brother Pietro that he could stop a switch engine in the yard at Granton, N. J., claiming that the engineer would respond to his signal. The engineer did not recognize the man's authority and signalled him in turn to get out of the way. Blanco, still anxious to stop the engine and win the wager, waited until too late and was killed.

MACDONALD DISAPPOINTED.

Had Hoped to Secure Free Transportation to America.

London, Aug. 18.—At the Mansion House police court James MacDonald, who, Aug. 9, was charged in that court on his confession with robbing the Western Lumber company at Portland, Or., last December, was discharged, the officials of the United States embassy announcing that the Washington authorities did not desire his extradition. The prisoner was greatly disappointed at not securing transportation home.

Towne brought in a gusher yesterday near the bottom of Spindle Top ridge and immediately adjoining a 160-acre tract owned by the company. Mr. Towne has completed the organization of the Central Asphalt and Refining company and work on a $200,000 plant will begin in ten days.

Claims an Estate in England.

Yankton, S. D., Aug. 18.—Mrs. Charles Ingalls of this city, through her attorney, Robert S. Cooley, has put in a claim to an estate in chancery in England, her share of which will be $40,000 if she wins. The claim is to some valuable real estate in London which was owned by Mrs. Ingalls great-grandparents.

Prominent Business Man Dead.

ONLY JUST BEGUN

NOTHING HAS BEEN DONE TO PREVENT A RECURRENCE OF THE BOXER TROUBLE.

OTHER POWERS ARE SCHEMING

The Protocol Has Not Been Signed, and Probably Will Not Be Agreed Upon Before the First of the Week — Commissioner Rockhill Hopes to Leave Pekin Within a Week — Practically Nothing Accomplished During the Year.

Washington, Aug. 18.—Secretary Hay received a dispatch from Commissioner Rockhill, dated at Pekin yesterday, expressing the belief that the protocol would be signed within a few days. This dispatch disposed of the press report that the protocol was signed Thursday. Commissioner Rockhill expected to sign the protocol and leave for home Thursday. He is waiting for the purpose and expects to get away from Pekin within a week.

The state department does not regard the signing of the protocol as the end of the negotiations. It is, in fact, only the beginning, and it is not encouraging that the powers have consumed one year in getting together on the basis of an understanding with China. What has been accomplished is satisfactory to a degree, but there will probably be more trouble in arranging the treaties that are to be drawn in harmony with the protocol. The greatest objection to the protocol is that it simply meets the demands of the powers on China, and does practically nothing toward preventing a recurrence of the Boxer trouble or the antagonism to foreigners.

There has been little done toward a treaty of friendship with China. The powers have agree as to what China shall pay for the outrage a year ago and have agreed to an increase of tariffs that will enable China to meet the indemnities assessed against the treasury. There are yet to be drawn treaties that will insure a change of administration in China which will make the country safer for foreigners in the future. The foreign ministers still have much work before them, and it is of a character to test their diplomatic skill and their political judgment. Minister Conger will resume the work for this government. While he can be relied upon to negotiate a treaty satisfactory to the United States, he will be more or less hampered by the conflicting motives and concealed purposes of other powers. What has been accomplished is in striking contrast with what was accomplished by Japan in her treaty with China after the war of 1895. The treaty negotiated in 1895 did much more than exact indemnity. It opened China to industrial development and gave a great boom to foreign trade with China.

HAVE NOT MOVED.

British and Americans Still Occupy Temples of Heaven and Agriculture.

Pekin, Aug. 18.—The troops of the powers have not yet evacuated the public buildings. The British and the American troops propose to occupy the Temple of Heaven and the Temple of Agriculture until their barracks are ready. Sir Ernest Satow, the British minister, thinks it would not be wise to withdraw before the protocol has been signed in conjunction with the Chinese plenipotentiaries, as withdrawal would remove the chief inducement to the Chinese to sign. The Japanese still hold the northern section of the city. It is considered significant of their relations with the Chinese that a Japanese colonel has been selected to command and organize the Chinese police. The opinion is growing that the court will refuse to return so long as the powers maintain such large forces in the province of Chili. The protocol does not provide for the destruction of the forts, the ministers of the powers having failed to agree on this point.

CAUGHT JUST IN TIME.

Prisoner Manufactures Saws and Nearly Escapes.

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 18.—Turnkey Ciiders of the La Crosse county jail caught a prisoner named George Crosse in the act of sawing the iron bars in his cell. Burglars Got Little.

Morgan, Minn., Aug. 18.—Burglars entered the clothing store of J. C. Albrecht, but secured little booty. They helped themselves to $2 in small change that had been left in the till, and secured several suits of clothes.

Wiped Out by Fire.

Burlington, Iowa, Aug. 18.—The business portion of Seaton, Ill., has been almost wiped out by fire. The loss is estimated at about $50,000; insurance about one-half.

Glad to See Him.

London, Aug. 18.—Crown Prince Frederick William of Germany has arrived here. He was met at the Victoria station by the members of the German embassy and a large crowd, and was given a cordial greeting.

WOULD LYNCH HIM.

Soldier Has Narrow Escape From Fellow Prisoners.

Chicago, Aug. 18.—Private George Campbell, Company [illegible], Twenty-ninth infantry, had a noose tied about his neck and was preparing to say his prayers, convinced that he was to be swung aloft by his seven companions in the guardhouse at Fort Sheridan. Campbell is said to have made an assault on Chancellor Livingstone, four years old, after an evening spent in Highwood. It was said he had stumbled over the boy and beat and kicked him until his cries summoned the guard. The guard rescued the boy and took charge of Campbell, who was taken to the guardhouse and placed in a cell with seven other prisoners confined for petty offenses. As soon as his comrades in the cell learned of the charge against Campbell they started to punish him. A coil of rope was lying just outside the cell and one of the soldiers discovered that he could reach it through the bars. He secured it and made a running noose at one end. This was thrown over Campbell's head. His cries finally attracted attention, but the relief could not find the key to the cell and the soldiers kept on leisurely casting the end of the rope at a bar. Just as the rope fell over and Campbell prepared to say his prayers the men outside broke in and rescued him.

"THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER."

Has Been Translated Into Spanish, Retaining the Original Meter.

Canton, Ohio, Aug. 18.—Among yesterday's callers on President McKinley were Hon. Louis Delevay of Buda Pest, a member of the Hungarian parliament, and Fernando Stand, Spanish consul at Chicago until the breaking out of the war, now connected with the public schools of Chicago. Mr. Delevay is making a study of the customs and institutions of this country, particularly its financial systems. Mr. Stand has translated "The Star-Spangled Banner" into Spanish, retaining the original meter. He made a handsome hand-painted copy which he presented to the president. The dedication to President McKinley describes the author's aim in making the translation, which is to have it officially introduced into the schools of Porto Rico and the Philippines.

WILL GO TO PANAMA.

The Iowa Will Receive Orders to This Effect Immediately.

Washington, Aug. 18.—A telegram has been prepared at the navy department to go forward to the Iowa immediately upon her arrival at San Francisco, ordering her to prepare at once to go to sea. When she advises the department that she is ready an order will follow for her to proceed to Panama at once. The little cruiser Ranger, which is at San Diego, has been ordered to sail. It is not believed that there will be any delay in her departure, as she has had several days notice in which to prepare for sea.

San Francisco, Aug. 17.—The battleship Iowa has arrived from Puget sound.

BRAZIL WILL ATTEND.

Appropriation Passed for Delegate to Pan-American Congress.

New York, Aug. 18.—According to the Rio de Janeiro correspondent of the Herald, opposition in congress to representation at the Pan-American congress is increasing. Deputy Morales said if there is a Brazilian delegate in the congress the delegate would not represent Brazil, but only President Campos Salles. The chamber of deputies, nevertheless, passed the appropriation for a representative to attend the congress.

LEARN FROM AMERICANS.

Scotchmen Will Study Labor Conditions Over Here.

New York, Aug. 18.—According to the London correspondent of the Journal and Advertiser, twelve representative Scotch workmen sailed from Glasgow on the Ethiopa to investigate labor conditions in America. They will make careful inquiry into engineering, mining, railways, building and other trades so as to learn the best and latest American methods, for the purpose of bringing the Scotch works up to the scale.

Fifty Surrendered.

London, Aug. 18.—The war office has received the following dispatch from Lord Kitchener, dated Pretoria, Aug. 16:

"While a party of fifty of French's scouts were proceeding to join a column near Bethesda they were surrounded in the hills by a superior force under Theron and surrendered. One was killed and three wounded, Capt. Bethlehem dangerously."

Lord Kitchener does not give the date, but the casualty list indicates Aug. 8.

Launch Blew Up.

Harbor Springs, Mich., Aug. 18.—The naptha launch Delora, owned by S. S. Edgar of St. Louis, blew up on Little Traverse bay. The occupants were badly burned about the face and arms and were rescued by the steamer Lord A. Cumming.

Is in North Dakota.

Manchester, Mich., Aug. 18.—The report from Middletown, Ohio, that Edward Grossman of this place had been murdered by paper mill employes and his body thrown on a railroad track seems to be unfounded. A letter was received from him by his relatives only a few days ago, dated Inkster, N. D.

Broke His Neck.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Aug. 18.—David Ugle of Lord township, adjoining Ann Arbor, was found dead in his barn. Dr. Conrad George was called and found the neck broken. He must have fallen from the loft.

NOW

Break now the alabaster box
  Of sympathy and love,
Amid the cherished friends of earth,
  Ere they are called above.
How many burdened hearts are here
  That long for present help and cheer.

The kindly words you mean to say
  When they are dead and gone
Speak now, and fill their souls with joy
  Before the morning's dawn.
'Tis better far when friends are near
  Their saddened hearts to soothe and cheer.

The flowers, withheld till after death
  Has closed their eyes in sleep,
It proffered in life's weary hours
  Would still their fragrance keep.
While hearts can thrill and ears can hear,
  Let loving deed and word bring cheer.

The Success of Failure.

BY SARA LINDSAY COLEMAN.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

She was a tiny creature. It seemed precocious for her to be twenty years old; her hair curled wilfully on her neck and brow; in the dark-lashed gray eyes, in the mocking red mouth, a charm, rare, perverse, a charm that transcended beauty lurked. She rode slowly up the mountain trail. On every side strange flowers shone, mosses covered fallen logs; in the interstices of broken rock great pines grew; a stream in its seaward rush leaped and swirled over its rocky bed.

Lost in a mesh of thought she was brought back to the mountain trail by a sharp blow on her face that dislodged her hat. Her steed, a mule, went on in spite of the desperate pull on his mouth. She felt herself being lifted from the saddle, her eyes stood out, her face blanched with pain; unless something stopped the mule's course the low-lying limb of a tree that had caught her hair threatened to place her in a very uncomfortable position, for the party had gone on and there was no help in shouting distance.

"Absalom, Absalom," a laughing voice called, "I am coming," and down the mountain path a man came running at full speed. He threw the mule back and released the girl from her painful position.

In radiant good humor with himself and all the world he looked up at her with laughing eyes.

It was her fate to be seen by him at a disadvantage. There are people who always see one at one's best, but the Professor came on the scene when Miss Peyton was least desirous of spectators. Not two hours before she had plunged from a rock into the Professor's long arms and he had laughed and said he knew she would fall just there so he had waited to save her a few bruises. The afternoon before when the male members of the camping party were fishing, she, at the entreaty of the girls who knew her reputation for such adventures, had climbed to the top of an apple tree, gone out on the limbs and tossed apples to the hungry girls, and in an endeavor to descend swiftly, warned by them that the men were approaching, had caught her dress which refused to tear, and hung in mid-air to be rescued by the Professor.

"Are you all right?" The Professor's laughter had changed to solicitude.

"Yes." The haughtiness in her voice was born of humiliation.

The Professor led the mule up the mountain-side, a breathless task. In spite of the young woman's protest he clung on to the bridle. Finding conversation a failure he relapsed into silence.

Miss Peyton sat erect, a flush on her cheeks. It would have been impossible for him to follow the train of her thought. It is said that every bachelor is secretly watched by some woman. Miss Peyton had known the Professor for several summers. His mother's cottage was not a hundred yards from her own summer home. There was a vague report that his mother's and his sister's avowed disapproval of matrimony had caused him to give up the woman he loved. Each year he grew more preoccupied, more wrapped in his studies. If one might judge from externalities, the Professor seemed drifting into permanent bachelorhood.

She Rode Slowly Up the Mountain.

Miss Peyton was young, pretty. She counted her lovers by the dozen, and she was not accustomed to have her plans miscarry. The Professor's ill-luck depressed her—she believed his relatives had doomed him to unhappiness. She took things into her own hands. She filled her house with guests.

The summer had been one round of frolic, which was to terminate with the week of camp life. The Professor had joined the party and had thrown himself into the gay life with an abandon and a boyishness that had delighted Miss Peyton.

There was a unanimous vote that the summer without him would have been a failure. He danced with Daphne, played cards with the men, Maud claimed him for golf, he rode with Irene, talked books with Isabel, rescued a half dozen girls from perilous positions, but Miss Peyton was forced to acknowledge that he seemed no nearer matrimony than at the beginning of the season.

"You!"

Lunch was served on the mountain's top. The daintiest of lunches, with water clear as crystal, cold as ice, from the depths of a fern-shadowed spring. A mountain top lunch—happy faces, careless laughter, born of youth and joyousness, a background of mighty hills clothed to their crests in verdure, golden sunshine, the country below spread out in the beauty of blue, misty distance, mountains melting into mountains and receding into dimmest distance—and over all the wide panorama, shifting shadows.

After lunch Miss Peyton did not accompany the party to a distant point to see the view—she was tired.

The Professor found her in the depths of a very flimsy handkerchief. His consternation got the better of his caution, and he made himself known by taking the handkerchief from the hidden face. He was rewarded by an indignant glance—under which he quailed, but he sat down beside her.

"You've made my summer miserable!" with a burst of righteous anger. "I was sorry because you were lonely, and I thought you needed a wife—every man does who reaches your age. I've done everything to help you out. But you have no sentiment, no gratitude!" She paused for lack of breath and the Professor regarded her helplessly.

She said every man of his age needed a wife—she thought him old—and he had been dreaming such sweet dreams.

"I've given up my summer to you, I've been dragged to picnics, crawled up mountain sides, danced on hot nights, and this is the end of it!" she threw out her small hands tragically, "I can't make you marry anybody!"

"Why do you want me to marry?" the Professor's face was graver than she had ever seen it.

"Because I do," she said. "Because I want you to be happy."

"Do the girls know?" he asked.

"No," indignantly. "It was my own plan, I never told a soul."

There was a wonderful tenderness in the man's eyes as he regarded this spoiled child of happiness—she was so young so tenderly nurtured.

"I had committed the folly of falling in love at an earlier date," the Professor was punctilious in his speech. "It was folly, but folly is sometimes divine." The Professor's calm voice actually trembled.

"And I didn't have anything to do with it," the girl said regretfully.

"You had everything to do with it. I danced attendance on them, I didn't care a rap for them but I saw it pleased you. Lord," the Professor groaned, "what fools men are! You wanted me to marry one of them, and I wanted—"

"Who?" breathlessly.

"You."

The trees and the landscape were out of their normal places. There was a rushing and a roaring as of many waters in the girl's ears.

"If time would help my cause," his voice was very far away.

Time! It was such an old, old fact that the Professor wanted to marry her—to marry little Dorothy Peyton with all her faults and inconsistencies.

"If I were younger," the Professor said sorrowfully.

"Wed not boys, but wed grave and gentle men;" some where she had heard these words that rang in her brain.

The Professor's watchful eyes, that had not left the girl's face, saw a soft color flush her cheeks.

"Dorothy, Dorothy," the Professor's hand closed over hers, his voice was tremulously eager.

Without warning the other members of the party flocked into the quietness and sweetness of their retreat, then stopped discreetly, but Daphne, the irrepressible, cried: "The Professor is in love with Dorothy."

There was an awkward moment.

"And I am in love with the Professor." Dorothy's laughter rang out as amused and unconscious as a child's. It's silvery peal opened the gates of heaven to a man.

WATER PURIFIED BY OZONE

Moscow's Successful Plan for Keeping Down Infectious Disease Germs.

A new method of sterilizing a city's water supply is being successfully operated in Russia and it was described at the annual meeting of the American Association of Waterworks Engineers recently held in New York, in a paper forwarded by Nicholas Simin, chief engineer of the city of Moscow where the system has been adopted and according to M. Simin is universally commended. The plan is to sterilize the water by the introduction of ozonized air and it is contended on its behalf that it destroys all the bacteria in the water and makes it at comparatively small cost absolutely safe for drinking purposes. So far, the system has not been adopted outside Russia, but M. Simin contends that in this country conditions are more favorable than anywhere else for its adoption, and he advocates its introduction here as tending to solve all problems in regard to contaminated water supplies.

The system is based upon the principles that ozone burns all organic matter with which it comes into contact in water, including bacteria and their vital products, that with water which has been freed previously of suspended matter the destruction of the bacteria is equally efficient no matter how great may be the number, and that the pathogenic bacteria are among the first to be destroyed. The purification of the water in this way is simply a development of and an improvement upon the ordinary aeration of water by means of atmospheric air. The air, before coming in contact with the water, is subjected to a series of electrical discharges which convert the oxygen from diatomic oxygen to triatomic oxygen which is ozone and is remarkable for its power of oxidizing organic matter including the bacteria in water. The cost is put at $6.25 for each million gallons, or in large plants even less. Extensive experiments in the system have been made in France, Germany, Holland and Belgium. The necessary removal of suspended matter is accomplished by using a small quantity of coagulant for more clarification, M. Simin says. Oxonization oxidizes not only the bacteria, but all organic matter. The water is rendered colorless, sparkling and ordorless. It has an agreeable and refreshing taste and there is introduced into it no foreign matter except oxygen, which, of course, is beneficial.—New York Sun.

BUFFALO, MODEL CITY.

Its Water System a Wonder to Experts From Other Towns.

To persons interested in municipal government one of the sights of the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo is the city of Buffalo itself, which has the reputation among municipal experts of being one of the best governed cities in the world. It has 4,000,000 square yards of asphalt pavement, almost as much as New York itself, its system of parks and boulevards is scarcely surpassed in the world and its other public utilities are not equalled in a town of its size. Most of all, however, Buffalo's water system is agreed by experts to be a wonder. Its plant is valued at $9,000,000; the water supply, coming from an intake in the middle of the Niagara River within a mile of Lake Erie, is inexhaustible, and in the center of the city is kept a vast distributing reservoir, which alone has a capacity of 116,000,000 gallons. Water comes to Buffalo from the river through two great tunnels, both hewn out of the solid rock. The pumping station which controls the supply is the largest in the world. It has 6,880 horse power, driving through the mains daily 187,000,000 gallons, which is almost equal to the flow of the River Thames. Buffalo owns and operates its own water plant. Although the population of Boston is twice that of Buffalo, twice as much water is consumed in Buffalo, as in Boston, and the cost and revenue of the Boston water plant are four times those of Buffalo.—New York Sun.

MID-AUGUST.

August, Sweetheart of the sun,
Summer work is nearly done,
While the idle days are going
List thy ardent lover's wooing.

Now the year is in its prime
Take thy brief vacation time.
Stubbly fields are brown and yellow,
Pippins ripe are growing mellow.

Ranks on ranks of shining corn,
Jeweled by the dew of morn,
Whisper in the evening airs
Like a legion saying prayers.

Farmer boys on loaded wains,
Harvest moons on gathered grains;
Tender hearts a bit forlorner,
Summer's turned another corner!

EXPECTING MORE COMPANY.

An Irish servant girl of recent importation was preparing the ice cream, tea and cakes for a Brooklyn evening party when her employer remarked to her daughter jocularly, apropos of the heat:

"I'm afraid those mosquitoes will come in to-night over the back fence."

Going down-stairs to the kitchen later she was surprised to find several gallons of tea more than she needed already made.

"You've made too much tea, Norah," she said. "I told you the big kettle full would be quite enough."

"Sure, that's so, ma'am," replied the girl, "but that was before you said anything about the other gists."

"What other guests?" inquired the hostess in astonishment.

"Why, the Mosquitoes, ma'am, you said were comin' over the back fince."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

PUNISHED.

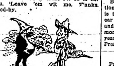
From the Buffalo Courier: He was a great musician. He came to the exposition to bathe his soul in harmony, but heat overcame his judgment and he washed his parched throat with stimulants to excess. He couldn't carry the load. A policeman found him making an ineffectual effort to do so, and the next morning he faced the sunrise justice.

"Musician, eh?" said the court. "Musician and a gentleman, but beastly drunk. Well, sir, I'm going to make an example of you. The usual penalty for this offense is ten days in jail, but in your case it will be ten days in a bally-hoo band on the Midway."

STILL ABLE TO BE ABOUT.

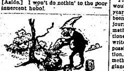
Boys—Yes, sir, these is tater bugs what dad made us pick, an' we got to burn 'em up.

Brainy Bowers—Well, you needn't bother to do dat, 'cause I'll do it fur you. 'Leave 'em wit me. T'anks. Good-by.

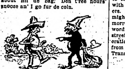


"Do I wanter pick tater bugs fur 25 cents per hour? Dat's what!"

Farmer Smallwood—Well, I'll pay yo when yo bring back this bag nigh full. [Aside.] I won't do nothin' to the poor innercent hobo!



Brainy Bowers—I guess dese jars'll about fill de bag. Den t'ree hours' snooze an' I go fur de coin.



"What, wait till to-morrow fur me pay? See here, if de plunks ain't in sight in five minutes I let de bugs loose on de patch!!"

Farmer Smallwood—Wa'al, go off with your money, yo highwayman. I got my coin's worth, anyhow!

Brainy Bowers—"Dese long afternoon naps is good fur de brain, an' I'm glad it's so, 'cause I'm usin' mine in me business."

WHY HE DID NOT PLEASE.

From the Louisville Times: About the greenest apple on the bough is the young fellow whose fond mamma is trying to introduce him into society. He is as awkward as a bear, all hands and feet, and when sent to call on a girl he glares around her parlor for some means of escape, and looks like he was sitting on a porcupine.

One of these young fellows paid a party call on a beautiful girl in society.

"Had a mighty pretty party, Miss Bee," he said.

"Thank you," was the reply, "I am glad you were pleased."

"It was a real handsome party."

Again the hostess smiled affably.

"Ma said she heard it was a splendid party."

"Now, I tell you what, Miss Bee," he continued, irrelevantly, "don't you know, when I call on a girl I don't care whether she's pretty or not. No; I just call anyhow. I don't care if she's as ugly as sin."

Had the hostess been homely she would have slain him for that, unless she possessed a sense of humor. As it was she put her fan before her face, and history has never stated whether the conversation and visit ended there or not.

HAMMOCK MEMORIES.

It was this way. Brown, putting it plainly, is fat. Some of his friends with cannibalistic imaginations say that he is fat enough to butcher. But let that pass. He is fat, and the other night, shirt open at the collar, damp hair spread at will, and fan going like a pendulum of a grandfather's clock, he served notice that he was going to stretch a hammock in the back yard and sleep there. Mrs. Brown made the foolish suggestions of burglars, croup, and neuralgia, but he was fixed in his purpose.

Brown is the best and most reliable sleeper in town. The storm came with its deluge. The swaying hollyhocks banged him in the face, and the swinging branches of the big maple tried to bat him out of the hammock. But they only rocked him, and the rain cooled him. His visions were a charm until he dreamed that he was Cadillac, standing at the prow of his bateau and going for the foot of Randolph street as though pursued by a sea serpent of the New York yellow journal breed.

All would have gone well, as a nightmare, but he sprang to his feet with a valiant shout, waved an imaginary sword, pitched about like a dugout in a maelstrom, went overboard head first, and came down hard on a sidewalk.

Brown is all right unless complications set in, but one side of his scalp is trying to grow on again, his left ear flops, he has an arm in a sling, and there is a towel over one eye. The moral he draws is that once in 200 years is a great plenty.—Detroit Free Press.

LESSON IN JOURNALISM.

Professor of Journalism—"Mr. Spinks, what would you do if a man fell down in front of the office and stubbed his toe?"

Mr. Spinks—"I should think the circumstances too trivial to be noted."

Professor—"Mr. Spinks, there you would be wrong. In old times, say ten years ago, your course would have been eminently proper, but the larger journalism of today demands larger methods. In the circumstances mentioned your first duty would be to write half a column on the humorous possibilities of the laws of gravitation. Next, a column on the different methods of laying sidewalks, with a glance at the brick industry; then half a column of the history of the particular street, and, finally, a reference to the enterprise of your own paper, with quotations from applauding readers. And, by the way, Mr. Spinks, you might find out the man's name. Tomorrow the class will present a 2,000-word account of a dog fight in the street, including a 2,000-word consideration of the dog in human sociology from the earliest times."—Boston Transcript.

Judicial Consolation.

A man who had been convicted of stealing a small amount was brought into court for sentence. He looked very sad and hopeless and the court was much moved by his contrite appearance.

"Have you ever been sentenced to imprisonment?" the judge asked.

"Never! Never!" exclaimed the prisoner, bursting into tears.

"Don't cry, don't cry," said the judge, consolingly; "you are going to be now."—Chicago News.

Warwick—Now, on what basis do the powers ascertain the indemnity China is to pay each of them?

World to End this Year.

This is the recent decision of one of the prominent societies of the world, but the exact day has not yet been fixed upon, and while there are very few people who believe this prediction, there are thousands of others who not only believe, but know that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the best medicine to cure dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness or liver and kidney troubles. A fair trial will certainly convince you of its value.

No Milk With Lobster.

My young friend had evinced a gentlemanly discrimination in favor of the petite luncheon, and during his last foray he shocked the sensibilities of the attendant fairy, by ordering a lobster salad, roll and a glass of milk.

"We are not permitted to serve lobster with milk," ejaculated the lady sprite.

"Why not?" inquired the young man. "Is it a general order or solicitude for me personally?"

"The combination is poisonous," replied the sprite.—Boston Letter to Chicago Post.

Rare Butterflies Bring Big Prices.

About twenty butterflies and nearly 500 moths are supplied by Wicken Sege Fen in Cambridgeshire, England, but only a few of the rarer and more valuable specimens are sought after by the entomologists. Their value from a monetary point of view is somewhat difficult to guage. For instance, a very scarce and inconspicuous brown moth, called Hydrilla Palustris, which is only taken at long intervals, several years intervening, is worth $10 to $16, while a swallow-tail butterfly, although found nowhere else in England, is worth but 10 cents. A good specimen of the large copper butterfly is worth from $30 to $40, but this butterfly is now extinct.—Pearson's Magazine.

Wabasha Hears Good News.

Wabasha, Minn., August 19th:—George Huber of this town suffered from Kidney Trouble and Back-Ache. He was very bad. Dodd's Kidney Pills, a new remedy, has cured him completely. He is now quite well and able to work. He says Dodd's Kidney Pills are worth their weight in gold.

News comes to hand almost every day of wonderful cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, which, although but recently introduced in this country, has already made many warm friends by its splendid results in the most serious cases of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy, Rheumatism and Back-Ache.

Wilfully Misunderstood.

"Some of my latest photographs," said the camera fiend, "I took fifty feet under water."

"Why did you go to the trouble of taking them there?" inquired Peppercy. "It would have been easier to just tie a stone to them and throw them in."—Philadelphia Press.

CITY SCHOOLS

Fall Term Commences Trusday Sept. 9th.

The fall team of school in this city commences Monday, Sept. 9, and although there is a great lack of room it is thought that accommodations can be provided for all. The Evenson store room on Main avenue will be used until the addition is built to the city hall, which will be converted into two school rooms. Alterations are being made on the upper floor of the Central building for high school work and the old school house back of Swenson & Aos' store will again be used.

The teachers are as follows:

First and Second Grades Miss Wallin city; Miss Curran, city; Miss McMurch, Harwood, N. D.

Third Grade—Miss Fisher, Long Prairie; Miss Frank, Warren.

Fourth Grade—Miss Wilson Lake City.

Fourth and Fifth Grades—Miss Miller, Crookston.

Fifth and Sixth Grades—Miss McGrath, Winona.

Sixth and Seventh Grades—Miss Tisdale, Minneapolis.

Eighth Grade—Miss Phillips Minneapolis.

Ninth and Tenth Grades—Miss Livingston, Minneapolis, Prof. James Wilson, Lake City.

Misses Tisdale, Miller Fisher and McMurchie will teach in the Knox school.

ACCIDENTIALLY

Crookston Man Shot In the Arm Friday.

Frank Neptune, of Crookston while enroute to the Red lake last Friday on the steamboat Ethel was accidentially shot in the arm between the elbow and shoulder. The accident happened at High-landing and the boat was at once turned around and the injured man brought to this city where his injuries were dressed. On Saturday he took train for his home in Crookston.

Fresh Oysters!

On Friday, Aug. 30, the Thief River Falls Meat Market will have fresh oysters in cans for sale.

PASSENGER TRAIN.

Good Prospects for One on This Branch.

Wiley Tindolph returned to this city Monday from Michigan where he had been visiting his son. Tindolph reports that he had the pleasure of enjoying the company of Vice President Miller, of the Great Northern, from Duluth to Bay View, Michigan, and the matter of putting a passenger train on this branch was discussed. This is something that comes directly under the supervision of Mr. Miller and he promised to look the matter up and if conditions would warrant it the train would be put on. The Great Northern, he said would not put on a passenger unless the receipts from this venture would pay at least $75 per day. Conductor Lockman states that the revenue received from passengers on this branch would average about $100 per day, and it is very probable that the passenger train will be put on.

Lumber Business.

The Minneapolis Lumberman contains the following correspondence from Thief River Falls:

"The wholesale trade was never better. A large retail trade is expected this fall. There is a good crop of grain upon the ridges and high lands, but owing to the recent heavy rains a portion of the grain upon the flat lands it drowned out. The expected opening of the Red Lake reservation next May is bringing a lot of homeseekers to this section.

"Wisconsin parties are negotiating for a mill site at the mouth of Thief River and are expected here soon to close the deal. This is the property that was in litigation so long but is now owned by James Meehan, Jr. Labor is scarce, but the lumber company here have succeeded in keeping sufficient crew to run night and day, and sawing will continue until it freezes up.

An Aged Homesteader.

That Uncle Sam's broad acres are attractive to all classes and conditions of people both young and old, was evident today when Mrs. Caroline Lewis, of Gilby, N. D., who is over 79 years of age, appeared at the U. S. land office and made a filing upon a 160 acre tract near Thief River Fall. Attorney Nat Campbell assisted her in making out the papers and took her by carriage to the court house to secure her first citizens papers. The aged lady is hale and hearty, and expects to enjoy the blessings of life for some years to come.—Crookston Journal.

PERTINENT POINTERS.

Daniel Shaw—I have been over a great deal of the northwest, and can truthfully say that I never saw a country where there was so much material with which to make good roads as there is around Thief River Falls. This convinces me that some day—when the people are woke up—that the country roads in this section will be the best in the state.

A Traveling Man—There are more goods sold in Thief River Falls than in any other city in the Red River Valley, with the exception of Crookston.

O. J. Rollis—The crops on the dimished reservation are fine, and the settlers are all prosperous.

A Farmer—I have a very small crop this year, and had but little the year before. My land is flat and not drained. By reason of the wet seasons I have lost not less than $3,000 on my crops, enough to construct a good drainage ditch.

A. C. Baker—About the cheapest good land in the United States can be found in this section, and it can be accounted for by the fact that there has been but very little road and ditch work done around here.

Agent Miller—Business in the way of freight is good these days. All of the merchants are receiving large shipments.

F. J. Stebbins—There is no denying the fact that this city needs more school room, and I believe it will be economy to erect a good substantial brick building—one that will last for years, and be a credit to the most prosperous city in Northern Minnesota.

HIGH SCHOOL.

Brick Building Will Be Built Next Spring.

E Strassburger, the Crookston architect, was in the city Tuesday and submitted the plans to the school board for the proposed new school building. It is not the intention to erect the building this fall—although it is badly needed—but to wait until next spring. The cost of the proposed building will be $14,000 complete. It will be 72x62 feet, built of brick, and steam heated. The first floor will contain four school rooms, while the up stairs will be devoted exclusively for high school purposes. It will contain a general assembly room, and two recitation rooms, one room for the principal one for the teachers, a labratory and a library. It will be modern in every respect and a building that will in every way be a credit to the city.

RUSH ON AGAIN

The Tide of Actual Settlers is Again Setting This Way.

The large number of land buyers arriving these days is proof of the truth of the prediction that the fall rush of home seekers will equal if it does not exceed, that of the spring. Those now arriving are from the farms where the harvest work is completed, and they form a class of men that seek to secure land upon which they can settle, and bring their families at once, prepared to put in a crop another year. The earlier arrivals were men whose interest in the land was largely speculative, or who intended to secure it at as low a rate as possible for those who were to come later.

The real estate agents are confident that the real influx of the solid class of settlers has but just begun, and the large numbers that are arriving on every train bears them out in their belief.

BE CAUTIOUS.

Farmers Should Not Thresh Until It Is Dry.

The farmers cannot be too cautious about waiting until their wheat is thoroughly dry before threshing. Joseph Johnson, the wheat buyer, says that a great deal of wheat was either entirely ruined or given a very low grade last year on account of threshing during the wet wearther, and thinks that the farmers shoud profit by the experience of last year. Thus far all the wheat brought to this market has graded No. 1 Northern, and if the farmers wait until their grain is thoroughly dry before threshing they will all secure this grade which means several cents more a bushel.

DIED TUESDAY

Mrs. Wm. Benzie, an Old Resident, Passed Away.

Mrs. Wm. Benzie died Tuesday morning at 11:30 in the presence of her three sons and husband. Her last illness was of but few days duration, although she had been in very poor health since last winter.

The deceased was a resident of this city for a number of years, and was held in high esteem by a large circle of acquaintances. She leaves three sons, William, Allen and Dave, and husband to mourn her death.

The funeral services will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The local school board is in receipt of a letter from the state board of health stating that all teachers and scholars attending the public schools must show a certificate of successful vaccination before they can attend school. This order will be strictly obeyed and parents should see that their children are vaccinated before Sept. 9th if they wish their children to attend school upon the opening day.

The open season for killing prairie chickens opens Sunday, Sept. 1, and a large number of people are making preparations to go into the fields that day and hunt. There has been very little illegal shooting around here this year, and consequently all the hunters are anxious to commence killing the birds.

Wm. Benzie and sons wish to express their heartfelt thanks to all who so kindly assisted them during their late berievement.

CITY AFFAIRS.

A Much Discussed Topic in This City Just at Present.

An entire new set of city officers will be elected this fall and already numerous persons are being "mentioned" for office. It is quite evident that considerable interest will be taken, and that there will be a lively election.

The issues will be various, but is quite evident that a large majority favor seeing a system of water works and sewerage established, and the aiding of townships in building permanent roads which lead into the city.

In the building of roads the present city council has, perhaps, been more liberal than any previous council in the amount expended, but there is a general belief that much of the money spent has been wasted, by hiring poor workmen and doing no work of a permanent character. Of course it will cost considerable to grade the roads up and put gravel upon them, but if this is done the roads will always be in good condition and the cost of keeping them in repair will be so small that in the long run it will be much cheaper.

There are a few who will say that it is not this city's business to go out in the country and build roads, and with them the News cannot agree. The business interests of this city demand that we must come in closer relation with farmers, and the only way to do this is to build roads, and make it easy for them to come to town. The farmers cannot and are not able to do it all, and it is the duty of this city to help.

Two thousand dollars would not be too large a sum to contribute next year for country roads, and then have the work done by contract. It would spoil a few "soft snaps," but the public as a whole would be greatly benefitted.

There are altogether in Yucatan seven cities, thirteen towns, sixty-two ruined cities, 143 villages, fifteen abandoned settlements, and 33 haciendas. Scarcely any of these places has as many as 10,000 inhabitants, the population of the great majority falling below 1,000.

American Roman Catholics contributed during 1900 for foreign missions $71,280, the amount being sent to the Central Council of the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith. The headquarters of the propaganda are in Paris, France, and from there the money is sent to support weak missions in all parts of the world. The American contribution is much larger than previous ones.

It isn't against the law in Minnesota to kill a gambler if he has been cheating, and will not return the money to his victim. At least, a case at Granite Falls has just been decided to that effect. Dr. Wintner pulled his pistol and shot a gambler with whom he was playing cards, because the gambler had cheated and refused to pay the money on demand. A jury declared upon oath that Dr. Wintner was not guilty of murder.

"Future punishment? Let's not discuss the theological side of it just now," said the old clergyman, gently, to his hot-headed young parishioners. "But did you ever think of it from the domestic and family side? When these babies of yours begin to grow up, and you see them imitating your faults and hampered by your weaknesses, and know that you're to blame—ah, there's a kind of future punishment there can be no two opinions about!"

He began his trip on the Seine and he is now on the Marne. He will sail down the Yonne, the Saone, the Rhone and its small branches flowing into the Mediterranean. Then he will go on the Loire and end his voyage through France on the Rance, which will conduct him to St. Malo, where he will take a steamboat to Jersey. The name of his canoe is Olthona, and is so constructed that it can be wheeled on terra firma whenever its occupant gets tired of being on the water.

The London Lancet, a high medical authority, says that the habit of self-drugging has grown to be a source of untold mischief. The practice has been greatly assisted by the enormous improvements in pharmaceutical preparations. Treating symptoms without medical advice may be temporarily satisfactory, but what if the physical disturbance be the sign of fatal disease? A little knowledge, coupled with overconfidence, is a dangerous thing in dealing with the ailments which come in so many forms. Varying the adage, it may be said that a man who is his own doctor has a fool for a patient.

Some amusing letters find their way into the government archives. One federal officeholder recently made an appeal for screens for the building where he worked, saying that within a hundred yards were three livery stables, one mule boarding house, one horse sanitarium with operating table, and one fish morgue. He added that his handwriting had been spoiled by the constant endeavor to write and keep off flies at the same time. He had pasted ten sheets of sticky fly-paper, and while they carried off thousands of victims they seemed to occasion no vacancies in the ranks of the survivors. The pathetic appeal was in vain. "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all screens, but he is too hard-hearted to do it.

During the famous Douglas and Lincoln debate and subsequent campaigns the point was frequently brought out by the supporters of "the Little Giant" that Mr. Lincoln had served only a single term in Congress, but that Senator Douglas had enjoyed for years a national reputation. This point, says a writer in Lippincott's, was urged in a heated discussion between an ardent supporter of Douglas and a German voter who favored Lincoln. Finally the former, thinking to overwhelm his opponent, said: "Who is this Lincoln, anyhow? Nobody ever heard of him until Senator Douglas brought him into notice by holding a joint debate with him. Senator Douglas, on the other hand, is a great statesman. Why, he has had his eye on the presidential chair for the last ten years!" "Vot is dot you say?" was the reply. "You say Meester Douglas have hat his eye on der bresident chair for ten years?" "Yes, that is just what I said." "Vell, you shoost tell Meester Douglas if he vill keep his eye on dot chair shoost a leedle vile longer he vill see old Abe Lincoln sitting down in it." This closed the debate, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

The Rochester Theological seminary may be removed to New York in the near future, plans to that end being under consideration by the president and trustees of the institution. The reasons for the proposed removal, as stated by President Strong, are that modern tendencies toward the great cities make it necessary for institutions of learning to seek large center because of the superior opportunities in reach of students, and also the fact that a large part of the support of the Rochester seminary comes from New York City.

D., Aug. 24.—Further investigation of the fire of Tuesday night reveals a complete destruction of the following stores and all their contents: Drug store of George Baker; Dr. Hugo Miller, in this building, lost his entire medical library, instruments and X-ray apparatus; he estimates his loss at $1,000, with no insurance. La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 24.—While taking a traction engine to his farm yesterday afternoon Charles Twite, a prominent farmer residing a few miles south of here, near Stoddard, met with a probably fatal accident. On the road he met a team, and in turning out the engine ran off the road and rolled down an embankment. He was thrown off, fell under the engine and pinned to the ground for some time. The occupants of the buggy released him, but his body was cooked in places and his limbs burned to the bones. His condition is very serious and may prove fatal.

MONTANA'S LAND AUCTION.

Many Inquiries From Everywhere and Sales Days Fixed.

Flathead county sales will begin Oct. 22. There are 55,000 acres in this county. Whether any intervening sales will be held has not yet been decided. The state land office is being flooded with inquiries as to the character of the land and terms of sale, which are, briefly, that no land will be sold for less than $10 an acre, and if not sold will be leased to the highest bidder.

YOUTHFUL TRAIN WRECKER.

Eleven-Year-Old Boy Sentenced to the Industrial School.

Janesville, Wis., Aug. 24.—An expensive wreck on the Janesville branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway was caused a few days ago by William Kinney, the eleven-year-old son of a watchman. The boy pleaded guilty yesterday and Judge Fifield sentenced him to the industrial school for boys at Waukesha. Young Kinney, who had previously ditched a train at Spring Brook by throwing a switch under a train, loosened the brakes on some freight cars, which, running down a steep grade, crashed into a freight train.

ELEVATOR FIRE.

Northfield Farmers' Company Loses a Building and Much Grain.

Northfield, Minn., Aug. 24.—The elevator of the Northfield Farmers' Mercantile and Elevator company burned, also 10,000 bushels of grain. The insurance on the building was $3,500, on the grain $5,000, and on flour and feed in stock $400. This covers the loss. The origin of the fire is not clear. It is not known whether the company will rebuild.

De Camp, who was for many years in the commission business in St. Paul, died yesterday in Seattle from burns received in an attempt to rescue a servant whom he believed to be imprisoned in a room in his blazing home. OFFICIALS COERCE NORMAL BOARD

Will Compel Submission to Financial Management of Board of Control.

State officials have decided to take a hand in the dispute between the normal board and the board of control and will attempt to force the normal board to submit to the financial management of the board of control.

Gov. S. R. Van Sant, State Auditor R. C. Dunn, Assistant State Auditor S. G. Iverson and the three members of the board of control, S. W. Leavitt, William E. Lee and O. B. Gould, met in the auditor's office and held an executive consultation for several hours. The final result was an announcement that the officials would in every way support the board of control, acting on the theory that the board of control law relative to financial management of educational institutions, is constitutional.

"The upshot of the whole matter," said Auditor Dunn, "is simply this: No vouchers will be permitted to go through my office from the normal board unless approved by the state board of control. This decision is not given out with any autocratic spirit, but to follow the instructions of the law. We believe the law to be constitutional until it is declared otherwise. This includes every payment of money for normal school management, even to teachers' salaries."

The auditor has in his office a number of warrants drawn by the various schools and has notified the normal board that they will not be paid until they are approved by the board of control.

REPORT ON THE SERVANT GIRL.

State Labor Bureau Makes an Investigation.

The servant girl problem is being investigated by the state department of labor under the direction of Commissioner O'Donnell, and the report will doubtless attract attention throughout the country. The investigation will include St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth. The inquiry will really cover the whole field of women's work, for the purpose of determining why girls are leaving domestic service to enter other work. The report will contain statistics showing the increase and decrease in the number of women in various occupations during the last two years, the wages paid in the kitchen, compared with other employment, and the conditions surrounding the work.

Commissioner O'Donnell thinks that the inquiry will show that one reason for the shortage of servant girls is that the mistresses do not always treat their servants as they should, and that other occupations give the girls more freedom.

Reports to the labor bureau show that there are 2,500 domestic servants in St. Paul, not including waitresses and nurses. Their wages vary from $2 to $8 a week.

CAN'T GET THEIR MONEY BACK.

No Authority to Return Taxes Under Anderson Law.

There is no state official with statutory powers to order a refundment of taxes, according to an opinion furnished to State Auditor Dunn by Assistant Attorney General Somerby.

The Minnesota, Wisconsin & Pacific railroad paid, under protest its taxes under the Anderson law of 1889, which taxed the railroads' unsold lands. The supreme court held that the law was unconstitutional and the company asked the refundment of some $12,000 paid in taxes.

Two courses were pointed out to the company by the opinion. It may seek to recover the money by suits against the counties in which the taxes were collected, or, if this fails, an appeal may be made to the legislature to refund the money.

BOY KILLS HIS COMPANION.

Tripped and Fell Accidentally Discharging His Gun.

Duluth, Aug. 24.—Robert Smith, the thirteen-year-old son of Chan Smith, president of the Union, Zenith and Climax Building association, shot and instantly killed John Hawkes, aged fifteen, son of Former City Assessor T. B. Hawkes, while hunting game at Sucker river, twelve miles east of the city. They were inseparable companions and every day had taken their rifles and gone on long jaunts together. Yesterday afternoon they both espied a white rabit and proceeded to give chace. While hurrying through the tall grass near a pond young Smith tripped and fell. His rifle was discharged and the bullet entered Hawkes' heart.

Chatfield, Minn., Aug. 24.—Stacking is substantially finished, and threshing is well under way; oats are yielding from 30 to 50 bushels per acre; barley from 25 to 40; wheat was practically destroyed by chinch bugs, and corn was damaged to quite an extent. However recent rains have revived the corn, and there is a prospect of a good crop. Potatoes are a very poor yield. Hay is much heavier than last season. On the whole, we have a better crop than last year.

A WOLF STORY.

Bounties Are Being Paid the Same as Ever.

The story given out from the state auditor's office that no more wolf bounty is available, was just another wolf story. Aug. 1 the standing annual appropriation of $6,000 became available, and since then 343 claims have been audited, aggregating $1,222.56. They came from the following counties: Aitkin, 22; Benton, 2; Kanabec, 71; Kittson, 95; Murray, 6; Otter Tail, 12; Pope, 22; Roseau, 70; St. Louis, 17; Todd, 30; Wadena, 1.

ROMANCE ENDS IN TRAGEDY.

Startling Case of Attempted Murder and Suicide.

Palmyra, Wis., Aug. 25.—A startling case of attempted murder and suicide occurred here yesterday afternoon at the residence of Alfred Watson and served as a realistic ending of a romance of a few months. Mort Cartright lies at the sanitarium with two bullets through his body in close proximity to the heart, and Ella Cartright, his wife, lies at the home of her grandparents with a bullet in her back. He can live only a few hours, while she is expected to recover, her life being saved by her corset steels, which destroyed much of the force of the bullet. A few weeks ago this mere boy of eighteen years met and loved Miss Etta Strike, a pretty girl of fifteen, and was married shortly afterward. They lived together at the home of his parents for a few weeks. Trouble arising, they separated, she going to Iowa and he remaining here. Later the trouble appeared to be settled and Mrs. Cartright returned to Palmyra yesterday, stopping at the Watson residence, where she was met by her husband. The tragedy occurred shortly after the arrival of young Cartright, when a fusilade of bullets was heard. No further explanation of the tragedy is given.

LIND OUT OF POLITICS.

Pledge Given When the Partnership Was Formed With Judge Ueland.

St. Paul, Aug. 25.—Judge Ueland, law partner of John Lind, declares that under no circumstances will the former governor re-enter the political field. Judge Ueland, it appears, exacted a written pledge from Mr. Lind before the professional copartnership was formed that he would not take any active part in politics. When the idea of a partnership between the two men was first considered Judge Ueland indicated very plainly that if Mr. Lind had not concluded absolutely to keep out of politics there was no use at all in discussing professional relationship. Mr. Lind assured his friend in the most positive manner that it was his intention thereafter to keep as far away from politics and politicians as possible.

His crime was premeditated and there is little prospect of a pardon.

Fink of Bricelyn, arrested for violating the game law, and he has seized a dog and gun. The parties were in a field with guns and dog and were shooting, but the warden did not secure any of the game.

EVIDENCE OF MURDER.

Bloody Wagon Spoke Found in Ward's Cabin.

Deadwood, S. D., Aug. 25.—The Lawrence county commissioners yesterday offered a reward of $250 for the capture of W. H. Ward, the alleged murderer. The searching party at the Ward cabin found the clothes of Kirk Shepard stowed away in a barrel, and a wagon spoke was found near the house covered with blood. This settled the question of the murder of the second brother.

Pitched Battle Between American and Italian Laborers in Arkansas.

Texarkana, Ark., Aug. 24.—An Italian named Gingotti was killed near Ashdown, twenty miles north of here in a fight between Italian and American laborers at work on the line of the Kansas City Southern. The killing may become an international affair. The fight grew out of a dispute over a car of track materials. An American was stabbed by an Italian and later an Italian foreman was attacked and badly beaten. About fifty armed men went to the Italians' camp and ordered them out. It was then that some one fired a rifle, killing Gingotti instantly. The dead man had nothing to do with the fight and the Italians are greatly incensed. The Italian minister at Washington and the Italian government have been notified and other developments are expected.

Leadville, Colo., Aug. 24. — George Kline, aged thirty, and John Eckstrand, aged twenty-eight, miners at the Stevens shaft of the Iron and Silver Mining company, were instantly killed yesterday. They were in the bottom of the shaft and Eckstrand started for the surface, carrying a long drill on the cage. AMERICAN BUILT BRIDGE IN BURMAH.

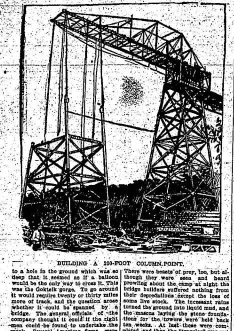
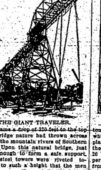
A steamship recently arrived at New York with a little group of men browned to a copper color by exposure to the tropical sun. As they reached the dock a number of people waiting to meet them gave each a hearty handshake and extended congratulations. In the engineering world this group will be long remembered as the men who put up the greatest railroad bridge in the world in a country none of them had ever seen, amid trials and troubles which might be expected to discourage anyone but a Yankee engineer.



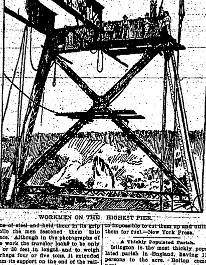
BUILDING A 200-FOOT COLUMN POINT.

Two or three years ago the surveyors of a railroad line in Burmah came to a hole in the ground which was so deep that it seemed as if a balloon would be the only way to cross it. This was the Goktelk gorge. To go around it would require twenty or thirty miles more of track, and the question arose whether it could be spanned by a bridge. The general officials of the company thought it could if the right men could be found to undertake the work. Several American firms were invited to put in bids, and one of them, the Pennsylvania Steel company, secured the job. It was a case of hurry from start to finish, for the work must be done within a year from the time the contract was let. The steel for the towers, girders and other work had to be turned out of the works, shipped to New York, loaded on board vessels, carried to Rangoon, loaded on cars and then transported 450 miles to this hole in the ground. Special machinery had to be built to put the bridge together and to raise the different pieces and hold them in position. In all, about 5,000 tons of metal alone were required for the work, the bridge itself taking 4,852 tons alone.

From one side of the valley to the other was nearly half a mile. For two-thirds of this distance the railroad track had to be laid at heights ranging from 100 to 250 feet above the ground.



THE GIANT TRAVELER.



WORKMEN ON THE HIGHEST PIER.

Then came a drop of 320 feet to the top of a bridge nature had thrown across one of the mountain rivers of Southern Asia. Upon this natural bridge, just wide enough to form a safe support, heavy steel towers were riveted together to such a height that the men working upon them at the top looked like insects to the observer from below.

As soon as the cablegram came from the Burmah railway company accepting the American bid a special force of workmen was selected to turn out the material as rapidly as possible, and the bridge department worked day and night.

The work, particularly in its initial stages, was performed amidst various perils. In the depths of the gorge, matted with underbrush and scattered with huge rocks, lurked the deadly snakes of India. Some of the coolies were bitten and died. Poisonous vegetation also affected the men, and vapors arising from the depths of the ravine bred low fever in American bones. There were beasts of prey, too, but although they were seen and heard prowling about the camp at night the bridge builders suffered nothing from their depredations except the loss of some live stock. The incessant rains turned the ground into liquid mud, and the masons laying the stone foundations for the towers were held back ten weeks. At last these were completed, and then the "traveler" was put in position.

This was a mechanical giant, the largest by far ever used in bridge construction. It lifted and lowered the tons of steel and held them in its grip while the men fastened them into place. Although in the photographs of the work the traveler looks to be only 20 or 30 feet in length and to weigh perhaps four or five tons, it extended from its support on the end of the railroad track a distance of 165 feet over the gorge and contained ninety tons of metal alone. The beams or trusses which formed its lower portion were 219 feet in length, and from its top to the railroad track was 40 feet. To keep this immense weight from toppling over, a counter-weight of seventy-five tons was loaded upon the rear portion, which was mounted on wheeled trucks so that it could be rolled along as the bridge was erected.

The little band of thirty-five Americans put the mammoth bridge together from eight months after the work was commenced. The bridge is so strongly built that it will support a train of loaded freight cars reaching its entire length, in addition to four locomotives weighing fifty-four tons each. Owing to its great height, it must be strongly braced to withstand the force of the gales which sweep down the valley at a velocity of sixty or seventy miles an hour. The engineers had to calculate upon these and other delicate points, but tests made after completion show that they calculated to a nicety. It was expected in building the bridge to have the aid of compressed air in boring holes through the steel and fastening the rivets, but when the 600 natives who were employed as laborers heard the hissing and noted the effect of the unseen force, they believed it to be something supernatural and not one of them could be induced to touch the compressed air tools. As a result, all of the bolts and rivets, nearly two hundred thousand, were fastened in the old-fashioned way by hand hammers. This delayed the work about one month.

The work was done under the supervision of J. C. Turk of New York, as engineer for the Pennsylvania Steel company, under the general direction of Mr. J. V. W. Reynders, general superintendent of the bridge department, who prepared the drawings for the structure. The bridge cost $700,000, or $310 a foot. Of the little band of Americans who went half way around the world to do this work, every man came back alive and hearty, but with the memory of one of the most trying tasks ever completed by Yankee pluck and ingenuity.

Living Stones of South Sea.

The visitor to the Falkland islands sees a number of what appear to be weather-beaten, moss-covered bowlders of various sizes scattered here and there. On attempting to turn one over he is surprised to find that it is anchored to the ground by roots of great strength. These are not bowlders, they are trees! No other place in the world can show such a peculiarity of "forest" growth. The Falkland islands are exposed to a strong polar wind, which renders it impossible for trees to grow in the proper form; nature has consequently adapted herself to the prevailing conditions and produced this strange form of plant life. These "living stones," as they are called, are quite devoid of "grain" and it is next to impossible to cut them up and utilize them for fuel.—New York Press.

PALMS FOR ARID PLAINS.

Trees From the Nile May Solve the Waste Lands Problem.

The department of agriculture seems to entertain the belief that the date palm may solve the problem of what to do with the arid and alkali lands of Arizona, California and other western states. Experiments have been made in the past by the department and experiment stations, but renewed interest is being taken by the section of plant introduction of the department of agriculture, and Professor D. G. Fairchild, agricultural explorer for the department, now traveling in Africa, has procured a number of suckers, or offshoots, from the delta of the Nile, which he has shipped to the department and which will be distributed in the southwestern part of this country. In the United States the date is an article of luxury, but in its native country it is a most important food, many regions in Arabia and the Sahara being uninhabitable but for the date palm. The United States annually imports nearly $1,000,000 worth of dates, but it is possible the department believes, to raise all the dates needed in this country. The date palm, although grown profitably only in arid and semi-arid regions, is not in the proper sense of the word a desert plant. It requires a fairly abundant, and, above all, a constant supply of water at the roots, and at the same time it delights in a perfectly dry and very hot climate. The date palm is able to stand much more cold than an orange tree, but not so much as a peach tree.

A useless life is but a living death.

WORKS IN BIG WORDS

City Official Language He Does Not Understand.

There is a certain city official who, although capable enough in his business, is notorious for his lack of knowledge of the king's English and for his fondness for big words, says the New York Times. He came to his office one misty, muggy day and, noticing that the air was foul, called out to one of his subordinates: "Open that window and putrefy the air!" On another occasion, when called upon to take action for an infraction of one of the city ordinances, he was asked where he got his information. "Oh, I got word through a unanimous letter that this work was being carried on superstitiously." Speaking of his horse, a fine trotter, which he drives almost daily on the speedway, he remarked: "I can't drive out for some time because Jack (the horse) has a spasm on his hind leg. On another occasion, speaking of a severe storm in which he had been caught, he said: "It was a perfect toronto." Once in speaking of his daughter, who, he said, was inclined to be musical, he remarked: "I am going to send her to the Controversy of Music." Once he felt ill and blue, and, to a friend, he remarked: "I am growing feeble and feel as if my working days were about over. I am a poor man and suppose I'll have to pass my last days in some institution for indignant old men."

Wonders of Dying Dolphin.

We were on a sailing ship, seven passengers of us, bound from Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to New York. Our ship was a bark, the Adelaide Pendergast, owned in New York. She had been long out from her home harbor, first to Cadiz, Spain, with merchandise; thence to Rio de Janeiro, for coffee, with which she was now laden. Her crew were Norwegians, her master Capt. John Lawson, as jolly an Irishman as ever sailed the salty waves, says a writer in Forest and Stream. "Hurrah!" cried the captain one day. "Here is something new for you! Come and see a dolphin, the most beautiful fish that lives in water." We made a rush for the bulwarks, and to our delight saw swimming along with us several emerald-hued fish, from three to five feet long, graceful in shape and motion. Their bodies were like satin, of a delicate green shading to a deeper hue at the fins. Darting and whirling, they changed places rapidly, moving from one side of the ship to the other. "I'll give you a sight you never saw before," exclaimed the captain. "You shall see a dying dolphin." He brought his gig, a small harpoon, with its cruel fishhook darts, and fastening a line to its long handle, made it secure around his wrist. "Can't hook these fellows with a hook and line," he said. We had already been regaled with shark and barracuda from the line that hung at the stern. The captain leaned over the rail. With lithe motion the fish darted under the weapon suspended over them. A quick plunge, with sure aim, a green flash through the air, and the struggling, leaping victim was landed on the deck. And now we saw the dying dolphin. Let scientists explain how it changes its colors; we can but make record of its appearance. The glowing green, died away to silver. This became spotted with blue, which gradually spread until the whole fish was a sapphire color. Waves of gold flashed over it, growing deeper until it was golden fish, only to be transformed into a roseate one by spots which came and extended. Thus from color to color changed the gleaming sides of the quivering beauty of the deep, until pity was almost forgotten in admiration, and we exclaimed: "Never have we seen anything more beautiful than a dying dolphin." We were practical enough to enjoy the friend fish, of a delicate golden brown, which was a welcome relief to our salty bill of fare; but that is commonplace recollection compared in the mind's eye with the memory of the fish, which, swanlike, yields its charms in the dying hour.

How Jamie Landed His Big Fish.

A fifty-two pound catfish was taken from a shallow pool formed by the subsidence of the Platte river, a few days ago, says a Fremont, Neb., correspondent of the Nebraska State Journal. Jamie McLean, a boy of about 15 years, was going after some of his father's horses in Saunders county and happened to hear a splashing of the water behind him. He looked around and beheld a fish of huge proportions floundering around in the pool. He at once formed a lasso of the rope he was carrying and proceeded to fasten it round the head of the fish. While he was thus engaged the creature knocked him down once with its tail, but he finally managed to get the rope in place. He then mounted his horse and fastened the end of the rope to the saddle and started for the shore. The fish was so strong that progress was made but slowly, and at one time the horse began to sink in the quicksand, but after considerable pulling and hauling the catch was safely landed.

Women Pharmacists in the United States.

It is a fact not generally known that there are nearly 400 women pharmacists in the United States. One of the largest apothecary establishments in New England employs women almost exclusively, giving them precedence over men, and assigning as the reason therefor that women can be depended on, or, to use the language of the head of the concern: "No big heads, no mistakes, hence no suits for damages as the result of careless reading of prescriptions." Many manufacturing chemists employ women in different capacities.

Queer Sea Gypsies

A People Who Hate the Dry Land.

A strange and almost unknown part of the population (if, they can be called that) of the British Isles are the queer semi-wild folk known as sea gypsies. Real gypsies they are, differing from their fellow gypsies in the fact that they always live on the sea and that, never having mingled much with landsmen, their type is much purer and more nearly resembles the original. There are about 500 sea gypsies in Britain. They cruise along the coast, seldom touching the land, but always close to it, in old and weather-beaten craft that may have carried their grandfathers. When the tide is out the old craft will often drop anchor by a sandbank island far out at sea, and her crew will grub for cockles with their hands, filling a score of baskets, but saying nothing to each other, for they are almost out of the habit of speech. They find fifty shellfish where the ordinary fisherman finds one, but they rarely do the same thing two days running, and in the next hour they may be snaring rabbits on a headland miles away.—The sea gypsies are wild eyed and thick set. Their hair is always either jet black or golden. They are still of almost pure Norse or Danish descent never having used the land and mixed with the shore folk to any extent. Their hands seem to be all thumbs instead of fingers, so powerful and stubby are the digits, because they have done nothing but haul on ropes and dig in the wet sand. There generally is a whole family on each boat, and one of the younger members is sent ashore at times to sell the shellfish. The money he gets he spends at once for flour, meat and twine for net making. The sea gypsies never keep money about them—they do not care for it—but lay it out at once in goods. The cockles fished from the sea by this strange tribe generally find their way to Billingsgate eventually or are eaten in the lodging houses of the seaside town. They detest company of any kind. Sometimes they fall in with an inbound sailing vessel that wants a pilot, and does not care to pay the heavy dues pilots charge. So the oldest son on board the gypsy smack takes her in charge, and the shipmaster is delighted, for the sea gypsy never makes a mistake, and will do the pilot work for very little. The old smack is towed astern; but directly the ship makes her port the sea gypsy demands his money and scuttles off and the smack staggers out to sea again, so strongly does the gypsy hate the haunts of man. He is richer by two or three pounds, which will keep the entire family for as many months. This strange people has really no need for money, except to buy tobacco, for they will live on the fish, sea birds and shellfish they catch for any length of time. There was a gypsy smack once that fell in with the abandoned schooner St. Levan, off Sunderland. The gypsies boarded her and brought her into Shields, being awarded the vast sum of £1,400 for the salvage. That gypsy crew, as many North Country seamen know, lost their heads over the acquirement of so much wealth, and came to live in Shields, in a cottage on the Sunderland road. A fortnight from the date of their moving in the old smack was seen putting to sea again, and the landlord found his tenants' cottage deserted and the sum of £20 left him as a year's rent forfeiture. A sea gypsy, it is said, would die within a month on dry land. He looks awkward as a walrus who has lost his way when not on board this strange old vessel. But there is no healthier or happier race under heaven than the silent sea gypsies.—New York Press.

Officers of the Army of the Cumberland.

Gen. Charles King said in a recent interview: "Three generals of the Army of the Cumberland in the civil war have been president; except Gen. Miles every commanding general of the United States army since the war served in the Army of the Cumberland; 17 members of that body have served in presidential cabinets, 38 have been senators and 300 have been congressmen.

To Abolish Indian Rations.

The government is gradually doing away with the distribution of rations to Indians. In five years the system will be practically abolished. There are now in the United States 268,000 Indians. Of this number 45,250 draw rations regularly, while 12,600 more are provided for at various times when they are unable to work or do not feel like it. In the latter class are included most of the Indians who have grown old and have been deserted by their young relatives.

Drought in Australia

Its Frightful Effects Seen in the Number of Sheep That Perish.

One who has not visited Australia can have no idea of the need of food in time of drouth, writes Frank G. Carpenter. Within the past 10 years millions of sheep have died of hunger and vast numbers of thirst. This state of New South Wales had 62,000,000 sheep in 1891. It has not more than 41,000,000 now. Within 10 years the number has fallen off more than 20,000,000. Estimating each sheep at $2.50, this means a loss of $50,000,000 in the capital stock of the squatters in one state only. There have been large losses in South Australia, Victoria and Queensland. I am told that numbers of sheep die almost every year, and that the losses during the past 10 years have been almost continuous.

You need not go far in Australia to hear of the horrors of the drouth. You can easily meet a man who has lost a fortune by dry weather. Men sometimes go crazy on their stations far off in the interior because the rain fails to come. They have thousands of acres and tens of thousands of sheep, and they have to sit and watch the animals die before their eyes, knowing they cannot feed them. The drouths clear the land of everything green. The pastures become as bare as the roads and the sheep stagger about, nosing in the dust for the seeds of grasses and trees. Sometimes trees are cut down to give them food. One man who had 4,000 acres of land kept 100 men busy cutting off the branches of his apple, oak and other trees to feed the sheep. They eat the leaves and even the small twigs. This same man had another force skinning dead sheep and another whose business it was to lift up the sheep when they fell down and could not rise of their own accord. This is to keep them from the carrion crows, which hover about over them and pick out their eyes if they fall.

During these drouths the rabbits die as well as the sheep. They drop dead outside the rabit fences. You may see kangaroos lying here and there dead upon the plains, and I have been told that even the birds drop dead from the trees.

The Riverina country is one of the best sheep-raising districts of Australia. It produces some of the finest wool, and is noted for its excellent grass. In the drouth of 1895 it looked as though a fire had swept over it. The most of it was as clean as a baseball ground. It could not have been more bare if it had been plowed. There was not a green sprout or any sign of vegetable life to be seen. Last year much the same condition prevailed in parts of Queensland. There were tracts covered with dead sheep, cattle and horses and dead emus and kangaroos were lying here and there over the country. This and other drouths have caused a reduction in one district of 64 per cent of the sheep and other districts even more. It is said that the drouth in 1895 lightened the wool clip almost 13 per cent; and it decreased the lamb crop in New South Wales about 8,000,000 head.

PATRICK HENRY'S EXPLANATION

As the Green Bag has it, Chief Justice Marshall used to narrate with glee the following correspondence on a point of honor between Governor Giles of Virginia and Patrick Henry:

"Sir," wrote the governor, "I understand that you have called me a bobtail politician. I wish to know if it be true, and if true, your meaning.

"W. R. Giles."

Patrick Henry's reply came promptly:

"Sir, I do not recollect calling you a bobtail politician at any time, but think it probable that I have. I can't say what I did mean, but if you will tell me what you think I meant, I will say whether you are correct or not.

Very respectfully,

"Patrick Henry."

This was leaving it to Giles with a vengeance; but as there was no further correspondence, the Governor of Virginia must have read satisfaction somewhere between the lines of Patrick Henry's brilliant equivocal reply.

A Plea for Joe Wheeler's Pants.

"They say that little Gen. Wheeler—'Fighting Joe'—is having great larks at Newport," writes a Washington gossiper. "The papers have notices of gaudy entertainments given in his honor by the swells. He is mingling freely with the aristocracy, it seems—at breakfasts, luncheons, dinners, functions of all sorts, in fact—and doing it as cheerfully as though he were back at Santiago climbing lofty trees and hurling round robins at the yellow fever. I do hope that nothing will induce the little general to have his beard trimmed or his trousers creased. That would obliterate a most unique personality forever. The birds hanker for his whiskers and the expression of those knees in their simple, untutored north Alabama garb, is the most pathetic thing I've gazed upon in years. Do not change him in anything say I. Give us the unmitigated Joe and let Newport educate itself."

WORK FOR PEACE

CIVIC FEDERATION MOVES TO BRING ABOUT A SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE.

PROPOSALS TO TRUST OFFICIALS

Amalgamated Officials Consent to Have Certain Propositions Made to the Officers of the Steel Corporation—Terms Agreed Upon Not Given Out—Contain Concession of Importance.

Pittsburg, Aug. 26.—Some remarkable changes in the situation of the strike-ridden mills of the United States Steel corporation are promised for the present week that will change the aspect of affairs considerably if carried out. It was stated on good authority yesterday that before the end of the week those of the plants that have been operating on single turn would be run with full force and for the usual three full turns each day. Men enough have been secured for this purpose, the officials say, in spite of the claims of the strikers that the companies could not get enough men to operate their plants, and the managers of the various mills say they will be ready with all the skilled men required to start up the machinery and turn out a heavy tonnage. In furtherance of the peace program which is said to have been in the course of preparation for several days, it was given out yesterday by one on the inside, and one who should know, that the Amalgamated executives have consented to have made to the officials of the United States Steel corporation through members of the conciliatory committee of the National Civic Federation, which proposals are expected to bring about a settlement of the great strike. Those interested in the matter were in waiting all day yesterday for word to proceed with the program as outlined at the conference of Amalgamated executives and the conciliatory committee of the Civic Federation last Firday. The propositions which are to be taken to New York carry certain concessions by the Amalgamated officials which it is hoped will pave the way for the reopening of direct negotiations between the association and the company. The proposition carries much of the terms under which President Shaffer and his advisers stand willing to settle. What these terms are and the mode of their presentation are carefully guarded secrets. There is the implication that they contain concessions of such importance that those in interest expect the corporation to drop its adverse attitude to reopen negotiations. The proposal contains nothing looking to arbitration. This mode of settlement was waived on the advice of the Civic Federation men.

Certain Propositions

Philadelphia, Aug. 26. — Reports received in this city state that the heavy rains which have fallen almost incessantly during the past week throughout the state have resulted in the most disastrous flood experienced in many years. At Mauch Chunk the storm was attended by four fatalities. Jesse Struthers, a prominent citizen of Mauch Chunk, and three boys named McCafferty, McGinley and Johnson were standing on a bridge spanning Mauch Chunk creek when the supports collapsed and the four were precipitated into the water and drowned. The stream had become a raging torrent by the bursting of a dam a half mile above the borough line. Bridges, culverts and arches are destroyed and the loss to the borough and to the property holders will be many thousands of dollars. Business is at a standstill.

The two lads were playing on the Central railroad tracks after the heavy rainstorm, making a little dam between the ties to form a lake of the rainwater. Disque was kneeling by the dam and Schweitzer was carrying clay to it when an engine dashed around a sharp curve near them. Schweitzer jumped out of the way, and then, seeing that Disque, with his back to the engine, did not know his danger, he sprang back on the track and with a violent shove rolled Disque clear of the rails. Before he could recover himself the engine was upon him and he was cut to pieces.

TO PREVENT AN UPRISING.

Number of Soldiers in Manila to Be Increased.

Manila, Aug. 26.—In the city of Manila there are now less than 1,000 effective soldiers and it has been decided to increase this number by four companies of infantry. The official reason for the increase is that the guard duty is too heavy for the present force. As a matter of fact, however, there is a feeling that although there is no apparent prospect of trouble, nevertheless in the event of an uprising in the future, such as is always possible among Malays, it would be better to have a sufficient body of troops available for such an emergency. Gen. Chaffee says he considers the city of Manila to be perfectly orderly, and he can see no prospect of an uprising. Commissioner Wright thinks the people "extremely peaceable." He is satisfied that, although among a certain class there is some discontent on account of the land tax which is not yet understood, this class is not likely to foment trouble.

NEITHER RIDE NOR SHOOT.

Some of Kitchener's Soldiers Have Heart Disease—Others Are Cripples.

London, Aug. 26. — Commenting on and airing the scandal of the inefficiency of many of the yeomanry sent to South Africa, which was referred to in a report by Lord Kitchener a few days ago in which he said many of them could neither ride nor shoot, the St. James Gazette says: "Many of these yeomen are street loafers who are physically unfit for service. Some of them have heart disease; some have varicose veins; some are cripples and some are nearly blind. Do the home authorities realize this? Are they going to punish officers who allow disease-ridden rapscallions to join the army?"

BOERS ARE ACTIVE.

Several Sharp Skirmishes Have Occurred Recently.

London, Aug. 26.—South African dispatches show that the Boers continue active in Cape Colony. Sharp skirmishes have occurred near Uniondale, only a day's ride from the sea, while Commandant Schapper's commando is threatening the important town of Oudtshoorn, thirty miles from the Indian ocean.

"BOB" EVANS DEAD

PROMINENT MINNEAPOLIS POLITICIAN PASSES AWAY SUDDENLY.

THE WHOLE STATE IS SHOCKED

Asthmatic and Other Serious Affections From Which He Had Suffered for Years the Cause of His Death—Causes Universal Sorrow—Prominent Leader in the Ranks of the Republicans.

Minneapolis, Aug. 26.—Robert G. Evans, United States district attorney, and a man thoroughly well known and highly esteemed throughout a great commonwealth, died suddenly at the family residence, 2030, Queen avenue south, Minneapolis, yesterday morning. Mr. Evans' death came with a suddenness that was startling. The community in which he has lived for seventeen years was shocked by the information that "Bob" Evans had been summoned by death only four months after his beloved wife had passed to the great beyond. The most intimate friends of Mr. Evans had known of his severe physical troubles, and these were not as greatly surprised as were the many thousands of citizens that knew him only by reputation, but who knew him sufficiently to appreciate what an excellent citizen had passed away.

Suffered for Years.

Mr. Evans was forty-seven years old. He had been troubled for years with asthmatic and other serious affections. Mr. Evans returned only a few days ago from Lake Ida, near Alexandria, Minn., where, with Senator Charles M. Fairbanks, Congressman F. C. Stevens, Congressman Loren Fletcher and others he had spent the greater part of a week in fishing. The outing seemed to do him good, for at a dinner given at the Minneapolis club Thursday he was especially jovial. Then on Saturday evening he was with a company of friends at the same club, and participated in a dinner with his characteristic jollity and good cheer. He went home about 11 o'clock Saturday night. His sleep was not sound, and he a number of times during the night. Shortly after 7 o'clock he was taken seriously ill. With great effort and evidently with great pain Mr. Evans managed to reach the bedchamber of his daughter. Miss Evans realized only too well her father's condition. He could not speak to his child, but the agonized look was sufficient. Anxious for fresh air he made another heroic struggle and managed to reach the front veranda. Mr. Evans had hardly passed through the front doorway when he fell seemingly lifeless. Medical aid was hastily summoned by the neighbors, but there was nothing that medical science could accomplish.

Arose From His Bed

Mr. Evans was born in Troy, Ind., March 18, 1854. He was admitted to the bar in 1876. Later he practiced his profession in Vincennes until 1884, when he Removed to Minneapolis.

His first law copartnership here was with Judge Daniel Fish. For more than a dozen years Mr. Evans was a member of the law firm of Keith, Evans, Thompson & Fairchild. His great and absorbing interest in political affairs, and his energetic and zealous participation in city, state and national campaigns brought him conspicuously to the front. He was appointed United States district attorney about four years ago. He had been talked about as gubernatorial timber for many years, but never saw his way clear to making an effort for the nomination.

Mr. Evans yielded to great pressure last winter when he entered the famous senatorial race that resulted in the selection of Moses E. Clapp.

BIG MOVE PLANNED

LABOR LEADERS HOLD CONFERENCE WITH PRESIDENT SHAFFER.

OTHER ORDERS MAY TAKE HAND

Decided Change in the Strike Promised That Will Tell With Greater Effect Upon the Trust and Aid in Hurrying [illegible] Outcome—Moral and Financial Aid From Other Labor Organizations.

Pittsburg, Aug. 26.—The conference of the labor leaders at the offices of the Amalgamated association yesterday was the leading feature of the strike during the day. The officials of the organization all seemed pleased with the way things were moving, and one of them said somewhat mysteriously: "In another six days you will see a decided change in the strike that will tell with greater effect on the trust and aid in hurrying the final outcome of this struggle."

Just what this change is to be was not said, but it was inferred strongly that the coming event hinged upon the conference that was taking place. Two sessions were held by the conferees behind closed doors. After the adjournment of the first session none of the participants would give out any information of the proceedings further than to say that the leaders had been called together for the purpose of having the situation thoroughly explained to them and to have some action taken looking to the aid of the strikers morally and financially by all of the organizations represented. There were present at the conference beside the Amalgamated officials, John Mitchell, president of the Mineworkers of America; J. W. Jenks, member of the industrial commission; Ralph M. Easley, secretary of the National Civic Federation, and Henry M. White, general secretary of the United Garmentworkers.

Whole Situation Discussed.

When President Shaffer was seen at his home last night he said in reference to the day's meeting that it was not a preconcerted one, but just happened. During the meeting, however, the whole strike situation was discussed. There was nothing of importance accomplished. Mr. Shaffer said no arrangement had been made to submit a new peace proposition to the corporation or a further proposition for arbitration, providing, however, that he did not know what individual act the conferees might take in the future. No mention was made of the miners or other trades taking sympathetic action. It is believed that as a result of the meeting another effort will be made to induce the United States Steel corporation to enter another conference.

The strikers make the claim that very little actual work has been done by the combine in any of its plants since the strike began, and that what product has been turned out has been of inferior character. Notwithstanding this the steel officials declare themselves well pleased with the condition of affairs and say all the mills started are working satisfactorily and turning out good product.

TERRORIZED A TRAIN.

Woman and Two Sons Have a Crazy Fit.

Corning, N. Y., Aug. 25. — Passengers on Erie limited No. 5 had a lively experience between Elmira and Corning last night. After the train left Elmira a woman started running through the train screaming that some one was trying to place her under an anaesthetic. She fought off her imaginary foe with a big jack-knife. With her were her two sons, aged fourteen and seventeen, who were afflicted the same as the mother. The passengers were terrorized and the trainmen had the greatest difficulty in restraining them. When the train reached here the woman made a dash with her hand, smashed a large plate glass in the car vestibule and jumped from the train, followed by the two boys. They ran a block and then rushed into the Corning club, where the woman, bleeding and bruised, screamed for help. The clubmen believed that murder was about to be committed, and scattered in all directions. The woman and her sons were finally caught by the police and a doctor dressed her numerous cuts and bruises. The woman and her sons evidently had taken some strong medicine which crazed them temporarily. They were apparently all right and proceeded to Chicago later.

LIPTON IS HOPEFUL.

Thinks He Has a Good Chance of Lifting the Cup.

New York, Aug. 23—Sir Thomas Lipton, owner of Shamrock II., challenger for the America's cup, arrived in this city at 8 o'clock last night. He met with a most cordial American reception, indeed the steamship Teutonic, on which he was a passenger, received one continuous ovation from Sandy Hook to her dock. Sir Thomas and his party landed at 8 o'clock and were driven to the Waldorf-Astoria for dinner. To-day he will take up his quarters on the steam yacht Erin, now anchored off Stapleton. Sir Thomas comes to America for his second attempt to lift the cup cheerful and resolute. He had this to say to the newspaper correspondents:

"I am thoroughly delighted to be again in America, and should be ungrateful if I did not say that I am thoroughly pleased with the reception that has already been given me. I think I can do better this time for I have in Shamrock II. a boat at least nine minutes faster over a thirty-mile course than Shamrock I., and the old boat during the trials on the other side was certainly five to ten minutes faster than when we raced in America in 1899. At any rate we expect to make a good race against the American defender, whether she be the Constitution or Columbia. I am hoping for a good breeze during the races, for certainly Shamrock II. is something better than a light weather boat. Whatever the outcome, I shall be thoroughly satisfied that the better boat has won, for I have a good opinion of American sportsmanship and the fairness of the New York Yacht club."

SCHLEY TURNED DOWN.

Howison's Pro-Sampson Interview Will Be Passed Over.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The navy department yesterday gave out the latest official correspondence on the Schley-Sampson controversy. It concludes with a letter from Acting Secretary Hackett to Admiral Schley, stating that the "department, having constituted the court, should not, at this stage of the proceedings, undertake to hear and determine questions that may arise respecting the competency of the members of the court. Such a proceeding would be irregular, all questions of this nature being left to the court itself." This is a declination of the request made by Admiral Schley that the attention of Admiral Howison be called by the department to an alleged interview in which he said the credit of the victory at Santiago belonged to Admiral Sampson.

CRASH OF ENGINES.

Freight Train on Siding Moved by Accident to the Main Line.

Jacksonville, Ill., Aug. 23.—In a head-on collision between the Chicago & Alton west-bound "hummer" and a freight train at Prentice early yesterday five men were killed and six badly injured. None of the passengers were injured beyond slight bruises. Just how the accident occurred probably never will be known. The freight train had pulled into a siding from the westward to await the passenger train. It is supposed the train gradually worked out over the switch, and when the passenger came along at a high rate of speed the impact was terrific. Both engines were demolished, while the tender of the passenger telescoped the smoking car, which rolled over.

Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 23. — The steam yacht George Stauber, used as a ferryboat on the St. Clair river, was run down and sunk opposite Fort Gratiot late last night by the big steamer George McDougall. The steam yacht was crowded with passengers bound for this city. It was rammed at full speed by the huge ore carrier, and sank within a few moments. By desperate efforts the passengers clung to the wreckage until rescued by a fleet of rowboats that put out from shore. It is believed that not one life was lost. The George Stauber will be a total loss. It registered forty-two tons and was owned by Capt. Dennis Kerigan of Port Huron.

THRILLING RESCUE

A MAN, WIFE AND CHILD ARE SAVED FROM INSTANT DEATH.

DEATH WAS VERY NEAR TO THEM

Caught in the Meshes of an Entangled Live Wire, They Are Saved by the Timely Arrival of an Electrician—A Mere Touch Would Have Sent Them Into Eternity — Crowds Look Helplessly On.

Baltimore, Aug. 24. — The thrilling rescue of a man and his wife and daughter from sudden death by electrocution was witnessed last evening by a number of residents of Walbrook. The rescued are Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Smith and their twelve-year-old daughter of Wheeling, W. Va. The three were visiting friends in this city and were taking a stroll in the suburbs. They were walking along the car line and in the act of crossing the track when a wire which was stretched across the road suddenly snapped at one end and fell over the wires of the United Electric railway. There was a flash of electric currents, a leap of blinding white light, and the next instant the wire, squirming like a serpent with of electricity imparted by the live wires, darted eastward and fell in a coil around Mr. and Mrs. Smith and their daughter. Instinctively the three in the loop of death clung to each other as the wires swayed and threatened to fall. A mere touch from it would have sent them all into eternity. Several persons who saw the accident were at first stunned by the spectacle. Then there was a babel of screams for help, and a woman shouted for some one to save the child from death. Soon a crowd gathered and stood by with bated breath, not knowing what to do. Just at that moment a car approached. Among the passengers on it was Henry Lowensohn, a well known local electrician. Mr. Lowensohn

The Awful Charge

Grasped the Situation

instantly and leaped from the car. The woman and child within the loop were weeping with terror and the man was trying to keep them from coming into contact with the wire. The first thing Mr. Lowensohn did was to warn them. "Do not move," he said. "Stand as still as death and I will save you if I can." He chanced to have with him a pair of gloves, such as electricians use. Quickly putting these on he climbed the tree and cut the other end of the wire, when the loop, which a moment before was tingling with the bolts of death, was harmless, and three imperilled persons stepped forth free, amid the cheers of the onlookers.

A MOTORMAN'S PERIL.

Mob Would Have Lynched Him Because His Car Killed a Girl on the Track.

New York, Aug. 24. — A determined effort was made by a mob to lynch Julius Seibel, a motorman, because his car killed Annie Amory, nine years old, on Madison avenue. The car was coming down a steep grade when the child tried to cross, became frightened and hesitated, standing in the middle of the track. The motorman threw on the brakes, but too late. The little girl was thrown under the wheels and her head crushed. People immediately swarmed to the place, women and children shrieking. The cry "Lynch him," was raised by the men, and a concerted attack was made on the motorman. He was bruised and badly beaten before a squad of police rescued him, beating the crowd back with their clubs. Seibel was arrested.

GREAT IS CRESCEUS.

Fifteen Thousand People See the Great Trotter Break the World's Record.

Readville, Mass., Aug. 24.—The celebrated Cresceus was the magnet yesterday to draw almost 15,000 people to the Grand Circuit meeting here. As a sort of recognition of the favors shown him in the way of applause when he appeared upon the track the chestnut horse proceeded in the second heat of his winning race with Lord Derby and Charled Herr to lower the track record for the mile by three-quarters of a second and to break the world's record of final quarters by trotting the distance in :29 3-4. By this latter performance Cresceus lowered the record of 30 seconds for the final quarter which he himself made at Detroit about a month ago when he strode the mile in 2:05.

WON'T STAND FOR IT.

Dr. Rodermund Warned Against Trifling With Smallpox.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 25. — "If Dr. Rodermund undertakes to cut any of his capers around St. Paul he will be hustled to the pesthouse and kept on a light diet. We shall not be in any hurry to let him out either. He may defy the law in a small town, but in St. Paul he will have to abide by the accepted theories of common-sense physicians."

This is the way Health Commissioner Ohage looks at the Appleton, Wis., physician who smeared himself with smallpox virus, afterward attending his patients and wound up by eating the pus from a smallpox postule. Dr. Rodermund did this to prove his contention that the entire theory of contagion is at fault.

Dr. Ohage is a firm believer in the virtues of vaccination and, as such, is not disposed to permit any trifling with the law which makes vaccination compulsory with patients that are exposed to smallpox. He said that all he requires in Dr. Rodermund's case is his statement that he has exposed himself to smallpox and that will be sufficient excuse for taking him to the pesthouse.

"Vaccination has been demonstrated, thousands of times over, as an effective means of preventing the spread of the disease," said Dr. Ohage, "and we do not intend that any one shall come into St. Paul and defy the ordinary rules of health."

Dr. M. J. Rodermund addressed the St. Paul Anti-Vaccination society at Central hall, Sixth and Seventh streets, last night. The doctor's talk was informal and followed a written paper by Mrs. Laura Little of Minneapolis on the evils of vaccination.

D., and when he secured employment he would send for her. Thursday afternoon he left the place without saying a word, and that was the last she saw of him. She became uneasy later in the day and made inquiries at the depots. It was there learned that he had purchased a ticket for Devil's Lake, N. D. The woman did not have a cent of money, and in company with a Winona woman she attempted to secure enough to follow him. Failing in this, she told her story to Mayor Stewart and he furnished her with a ticket to La Crosse, where she says she will be able to get the money and will then follow him.

BURNED AT STAKE

SIX THOUSAND PEOPLE WITNESS THE HORRIBLE FATE OF A NEGRO.

DIED AS STOLIDLY AS A STOIC

Negro Who Criminally Assaulted and Shot to Death a White Woman Is Taken From the Officers and Put to Death Near the Scene of His Crime—Fiend Laughs as He Makes a Statement.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 26.—Harry Noles, the negro who criminally assaulted and shot to death Mrs. Charles Williams, wife of a prominent farmer near Winchester, Tenn., last Friday, was captured early yesterday morning at Water Tank, near Cowan, Tenn. He was taken to Winchester by his captors and placed in the county jail. Sheriff Stewart made haste to try to barricade the jail and protect the prisoner. Soon an angry mob of several hundred men gathered but Assistant Attorney General Matt Newhittaker appeared and made a speech to the crowd. He appealed to them to assist him in allaying excitement and upholding the majesty of the law. He promised to reconvene the grand jury to-day to promptly indict the negro and have him speedily tried, assuring them that his conviction and legal execution was a foregone conclusion. This appeal was supplemented by Judge J. J. Lynch, Capt. W. P. Tolley, Joseph M. Littleton, Foster Ramsey and others. No sooner had their appeals been made than several hundred citizens from the neighborhood where the crime had been committed, came up and augmented the crowd to thousands. They swept forward upon the jail, overpowered the sheriff and his deputies, took the prisoner and started for the scene of the crime, twelve miles distant, at 10:15 a. m. The mob was orderly but determined. It seemed that the whole population for miles around had turned out to see the Fate of the Wretch.

A procession three miles in length followed the mob to the Williams home. Arriving at a point near the scene of the crime the negro was placed on a stump and given a chance to make a statement. He mounted the stump stolidly, and laughed as he began his statement. He said:

"Tell all my sisters and brothers to meet me in glory. I am going to make that my home. Tell my mother to meet me where parting will be no more."

He was then asked if any one else was implicated in the crime.

Noles stated emphatically that there was no one else implicated but himself.

"Why did you kill Mrs. Williams?" he was asked.

"I just done it because I had nothing else to do," he said.

He finished his statement at 1:30 p. m. He was taken from the stump, carried to a tree near by, bound with chains and his body saturated with oil. At 1:40 a match was applied and instantly the quivering body was enveloped in flames. Fence rails were pitched about the burning body and soon life was extinct. The negro made no outcry at any time and died as stolidly as a stoic. There were no disorderly scenes about the burning body. At least 5,000 people witnessed the horrible fate of the negro. Many remained until nightfall, augmenting the blaze until the body was entirely consumed. They then departed for their homes quietly.

IS MYSTERIOUS THIBET TO BE OPENED TO THE WORLD?

The presence in St. Petersburg of a mission of four high officials of Thibet, the first representatives of that practically unknown country to visit Europe, and the announcement that the Dalai Llama, ruler of Thibet, has been persuaded to himself visit Russia, is looked upon as indicating that the barriers which have closed the white man out of "The Forbidden Land" will soon be let down to civilization.

A Buria from Transbaigalia, named Akhorambo Atchwan Dorschieff, who has gained the favor of the Dalai Llama of Thibet, came to Livadia last October and was received by the Emperor. He returned to Thibet and succeeded in persuading the Dalai Llama to send a special mission to St. Petersburg to open friendly relations with this country. This mission has arrived under the guidance of Dorshieff, and has been received by Count Lamsdorff. It consists of four persons, one of whom is the Dalai Llama's second secretary. It brings an autograph letter from the Regent of Thibet to the Czar.

The Russian newspapers attach much importance to this journey, and no doubt properly. It marks another step in the extension of Russian influence toward the Indo-Chinese possessions of France. The Russians regard the establishment of a chain of communications across the rear of the Indian Empire and the permanent isolation of India from the Yang-tse-Kiang valley as practically assured.

The present is the first opportunity that Russia has had to make overtures to Thibet—for, although it is a country of 651,500 square miles, with a population estimated at over 6,000,000, it is an unknown land except to the few intrepid adventurers who have explored it at great personal risk. The country is in central Asia, bounded on the north by the Kwenlum Mountains, on the east by China proper, on the south by the almost impassable Himalaya Mountains, and on the west by Kashmir. The mountain range on the south separates Thibet from British India, and Eastern Turkestan separates it from Russia. The country, which became subject to China early in the seventeenth century, contains the sources of the Yang-tse-Kiang, the Indus, and other large rivers, and the country is for the most part a high tableland.

The reasons why Thibet should be called "The Unknown Land" have been reinforced and more vividly impressed upon the Western mind within the last two years by the bloodcurdling narrative of torture which was brought back to his government by Savage Landor in 1899. Mr. Landor's experiences also serve to remind the world at large that, unlike any other country, even in Asia, at the present day, Thibet is under what may be said to correspond in some fashion to the Christian idea of theocracy—a government in which the religious hierarchy also wields despotic temporal power. Such as it is, the religion of the country is the prime motive of all its life, whether for good or evil. "I have lounged through Asia Minor, lived in almost every country in Europe, ransacked India from Comorin to the Himalayas, and become fairly well acquainted with China," said a veteran Scotch traveler, "but nowhere in the world have I seen a people so wrapped up in what they considered to be religion as in Thibet." This religion, with the always necessary Asiatic exception of certain Mohammedans in the western parts, is a highly idolatrous corruption of Buddhism. But, in order to get a reasonably lively conception of the peculiarities and the intensity of Thibetan Buddhism, some idea of the country itself is necessary.

The bulk of Thibet is the Chang, or Great Thibetan Plateau, the highest, as well as the largest, tableland on the earth. As to area, it occupies all the central and northern and most of the western sections of the country. An idea of its elevation may best be obtained from the statement of Captain Hamilton Bower, one of the most highly regarded of recent authorities, "from the end of June until the middle of November the average altitudes of our camps was over 15,000 feet, the lowest being 14,631, and the highest 18,760 feet." Of the climate the same explorer says: "No amount of woolen clothes will keep out the wind on the Chang, so skins must be taken." During the period already referred to the enormous stretch of country crossed by Captain Bower's party did not show a single tree, and only two species of shrubs, and these rarely exceeded six inches in height. They found a large number of flowering plants and grasses, however, while for variety the landscape, both on the Chang and elsewhere, is diversified in many places by gigantic masses of rock and terrific precipices. This is, in fact, what is poetically known in Asia as the "Roof of the World," and at the southwest corner of it, at Gilgit, on the borders of Kashmir, is the place "Where Three Empires Meet," the title of Mr. Knight's work.

The hideousness or sublimity—according to the view one takes—of nature on the Chang, and in other parts of Thibet, is not left to itself. As in the Tyrol and other Catholic countries one sees wayside crosses and picturesque shrines, so in Thibet, only far more frequent, are the huge rock-cut images which are supposed to represent the Buddha, the "chortens" or monuments of a religious character, and inscriptions, large and small, cut in the rocks, of prayers and sacred sentinels. As one tramps along a Thibetan road, it is said, any stone against which the weary foot stumbles may be found on examination to bear the inscription, "Om mani padmi Om" (O! Thou Jewel in the Lotus, O!), a devout aspiration which, in a slightly altered form, will be familiar to readers of Sir Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia."

Ever since the days of Marco Polo, who entered Thibet in the fifteenth century as the envoy of Venice, Thibet has been famed as the nursery of Eastern magic. Marco Polo tells in his book of travels weird stories of magic wrought before his eyes and those of his companions at the table of a personage whom he calls the Kham. It was Marco Polo, too, who told of the "ladder trick" and so earned for himself the reputation of a splendid liar through twenty generations, until, early in the nineteenth century, the same ladder trick was performed again and again in India and was circumstantially recorded by Dr. Norman McLeod. Psychologists of a material bent explain many of these marvels nowadays by hypnotic suggestion, but many Western followers of Buddhist occultism still associate Thibet with the great Mahatmas. How far the sublimely intellectual cult of Gautama's stricter followers corresponds with the religion of the Thibetans may, perhaps, be gathered from Mr. Knight's account of the ceremonies which he was fortunate enough to witness at Himis. One of the most striking features of the whole day's celebration was its remarkable resemblance here and there to the ancient ceremonial of the Catholic Church, a resemblance which has led many pious persons, since Marco Polo's first account, to trace in these proceedings the handiwork of Satan. It is also curious to notice the close parallelism between this and the extant accounts of some of the graver "miracle-plays" of mediæval Europe.

After a long account of the preliminaries Mr. Knight proceeds:

"Under a canopy borne by attendants walked a tall form in beautiful silk robes, wearing a large mark representing a benign and peaceful face. As he advanced men and boys, dressed as abbots and acolytes of the Church of Rome, prostrated themselves before him, and adored him with intoning and pleasing chanting. He was followed by six other marks, who were treated with similar respect. These seven deified beings drew themselves in a line * * * and received the adoration of several processions of masked figures, some of abbots, and others beast headed, or having the faces of devils. * * * Throughout the day, even during the above solemn act of worship, certain Yamas, masked as comic devils, performed all manner of buffoonery, * * * bursting into peals of insane laughter each time that one played some monkey trick on another.

"Again there came a change. The solemn chanting ceased, and then rushed on the scene a crowd of wan shapes, almost naked, with but a few dark rags about them, as if they were shivering with cold. They wrung their hands despairingly and rushed about in a confused way, as if lost, starting from each other in terror when they met, sometimes feeling about them with their outstretched hands like blind men, and all the while whistling in long drawn notes which rose and fell like a strong wind on the hills. * * * The sudden onrushing of these wildly whistling shapes occurred at frequent intervals during the ceremony. The change from one phase of this curious mummery to another was always startling abrupt. One never knew when some peaceful anthem and stately dance of holy figures would be suddenly interrupted by the clashing discord of cymbals and trumpets and the whirling torrent of shrieking fiends * * *.

"At one period of the ceremony a holy man with an Archbishop's miter on his head advanced, to the beautiful chanting of men and boys, the basses, trebles, and tenors taking successive parts in solo and chorus. * * * This holy man blessed a goblet of water by laying his hands on it and intoning some prayer or charm. Then he sprinkled the water in all directions, and the defeated demons staid their shrieking, dancing, and infernal music and gradually crept out of the arena, and no sound was heard for a time but the sweet singing of the holy choir."

BREAKS FORCE OF THE WAVES.

Mattresses are Strung Together to Protect Ocean Beaches.

At many of the favorite seaside summer resorts in this country the beaches are from time to time ravaged by wild storms, and hitherto no adequate method of protecting them against such onslaughts has been discovered. As a result the cottagers may awake any morning and find that the pleasant strand on which they strolled during the previous evening has, during the night, been eaten away by the hungry waves. Now, however, an ingenious inventor has devised a method for the protection of such beaches, a method which, he is confident, will prove effective. It consists of a number of mattresses, which are formed of fibrous material and which are held together by means of warps and bars. The mattresses, thus connected, are laid on the beach, the warps and bars being placed in such a manner that the long, fibrous covering is kept stiff and immovable. As a further safeguard, however, stronger fastenings are placed here and there, and by means of these the mattresses are anchored firmly to the beach. The mattresses are arranged lengthwise in the direction of the current, and the warps and bars are arranged diagonally. The object is to break the force of the waves and prevent them from wreaking their full fury on the beach. Experiments, it is said, prove that a protection of this kind is useful for such a purpose.

A Revered Victualer

Few publicans take as much interest in the welfare of their clients as does Mrs. Mary Lee of the Beehive, White Waltham, near Maidenhead, England, who is the oldest licensed victualer in Berks, and who recently celebrated her jubilee as a dispenser of ale. As long as her strength and eyesight permitted, it was her habit every Sunday evening to carry her ponderous family Bible into the taproom, place it reverently on the table, the visitors making room for it by pushing their beer-jugs to one side, and to read a chapter to the assembled company, who always uncovered while the sacred book was in the apartment. The frequenters of the Beehive greatly respected the old lady for her efforts to give them moral instruction, and although her occasional comments might not commend themselves to the followers of what is called the higher criticism, they were homely and to the point. Mrs. Lee also displays in the taproom a notice intimating that any one using impolite language or singing songs of a risky tendency would be promptly expelled. Altogether, the venerable lady seems to be a model licensed victualer.

Iron Scarce In Philippines.

Iron, we are told, is wanted in the Philippines for the manufacture of tools, farming implements, building trimmings, weapons, and hundreds of other articles. The wheelwrights are looking everywhere for iron with which to repair and construct vehicles. The mining engineers are paying large sums of money for pieces of old iron for use in the various mining enterprises, says Cassier's Magazine. Owners of sugar cane crushing machinery, proprietors of machine shops, and shipbuilder are offering all sorts of prices for iron, steel, and other metals. Yet it is almost an impossibility to buy iron in the islands. Native machine workers produce hundreds of different kinds of metal implements and parts of machinery from old vehicle springs and wagon tires.

Dairy Notes.

Over 300 kinds of bacteria have been found in milk, cream and butter. These bacteria can grow little or none without proper conditions of temperature. It is, therefore, obvious that it is to the advantage of the dairyman to keep his milk cool. Some bacteria will get in, but if the temperature of the milk is so low that the minute plants cannot multiply, the ones that get in will do little harm. This value of cold is not properly appreciated except by creamery operators and the more advanced dairymen. As a proof of this we cite the fact that the storing of ice is not by any means universal among even northern dairymen. Some are fortunate enough to have flowing springs where the temperatures of 58 and 60 degrees are obtainable. But temperatures even lower are desirable. Below 50 is now proving to be a very good temperature at which to ripen cream. This leads up to the idea that the bacteria that give us desirable flavors are able to live, develop and multiply under degrees of cold that will kill other and less desirable bacteria. By properly utilizing the principles of heat and cold the buttermaker can produce an article of butter far superior to the average of that on the market.

Reports from all parts of the world show that the progressive dairyman is abroad. He is found in widely separated localities, and in nations that are antipotal. He is a missionary always, by his example preaching the gospel of cleanliness and right methods. As yet he is not reaping the rewards that are due him. At a meeting of creamery managers in Australia a dairy instructor said: "In every dairying district of Victoria progressive and up-to-date dairymen are to be found. The milk they send to the factories is all that can be desired, and this to a conscientious manager is a constant source of anxiety. He is perforce expected to treat all alike, and the man whose cleanly habits and intelligent methods enable him to supply an excellent milk reaps no reward; in marked contrast to those who exhibit a flagrant disregard for the interests of his fellow suppliers by neglecting to benefit by such good examples. In such cases we find undisguised hostility to inspection and a low grade of milk." The problems to be solved are thus seen to be about the same everywhere.

The Finns are determined that Denmark shall not hold more of the English butter market than they can help. The dairymen of Finland have been copying the Danes in almost everything as to butter, so far as they have been able. They began to send butter to England some time ago, and their shipments have quite steadily increased. They are now copying the Danes in their manner of fostering the foreign market. Denmark has for many years kept two agents in the "island kingdom" to look after Danish butter in the English market. So the Finnish dairymen have sent an agent to England. He is to have the double duty of telling the English consumers and importers how good Finnish butter is and of telling the Finnish dairymen what changes they need to make to please the English consumers and secure the English market.

Summer Care of Horses.

Such spells of hot weather as have recently been experienced throughout the country have taught a number of lessons that will be of the greatest possible value in meeting similar circumstances in the future. The recent heated term has seen the advent of the "horse hat," a hideous straw conception which has come into vogue in the large cities, but which apparently has not found favor in the country. The idea of providing means of protection for the heads of horses working during the hot hours of the day is well enough but it is very questionable whether the straw hat fills the bill, so to speak. The first requisite in such protection is to shade the head and at the same time allow a free circulation of air between the hat and the head. This is not done by the straw hat. Examination has disclosed the fact that under the hat the skin is hot and dry; circulation of air has not taken place, hence many horse-owners have discarded the new pattern hat and devised other means of protection. The older form of protection was better. It consisted of a shade which did not come into contact with the head, being on the order of a parasol. The other common form of shade in the cities is a piece of thick felt, which may be kept saturated with water, but this is open to the same objection as the more modern hat in that it does not allow a free circulation of air. Sponges are still used to cover the poll, it being thought that by keeping them wet that they afford protection and coolness to the head. This is not the case in most instances. They are cool so long as they are wet with cold water, but it is quite impossible to keep them cool all day when most required and they do not allow air to play between the head and the sponge. To sum up then, it has been found that a parasol shade is the best, gives perfect protection and requires no work or water. More important, however, than the fitting of any kind of contraption upon the heads of horses working in the sun is proper management and feeding of the horses. With animals as with men, cases of heat prostration do not as a rule occur when the patient is in perfect health. Man becomes overcome with heat when he is sick from indigestion or has been in the habit of taking intoxicating liquor in large quantities. It has also been found that where people live in unsanitary conditions that they are most liable to suffer from over-heating. Certain kinds of food also tend to render the person eating them susceptible to sunstroke, hence all doctors advise that we should eat light bread, abstain from heavy meals of meat, and drink plain, cool, but not iced drinks during exceptionally hot weather. Turning to the horse we find that in most cases of over-heating there is some cause apart from hard work or exposure to the direct rays of the sun. In the large cities the worst sufferer among the horses is the middle horse in the three-horse team which is used to move vast loads of coal. This poor beast is exposed to the sun's rays and at the same time to the radiation of heat from the bodies of the two other horses between which he is sandwiched. This middle horse is a common victim during hot weather. If he does not go down, overcome with heat, it is only necessary to look at him when at work to determine whether his condition is a pleasant one. His looks tell that he is in misery and invariably he is thin and worn as compared with his companions in harness. This form of hitching should be absolutely forbidden by the Humane Society whenever a hot spell of weather strikes the city. On farms the way to prevent overheating is to shade the head, keep the horse in a well-ventilated, clean stable, the windows and doors of which are screened against the entrance of flies and shaded to keep out direct rays of the sun. The horse should be well groomed twice daily, should not be allowed to stand with his harness on at the noon hour, should not be fed when warm, should have drinking water before feeding and in sips frequently when at work. He should not be fed corn during hot weather; suitable food would consist of sound, old oats, hay at night, but none during the day, and a bran mash two or three times during the week. It is a good practice to sponge him with cold water after the day's work, but do not turn the hose on him.

Past Prices for Hogs.

From the last report of the Bureau of Animal Industry we take the following as to the range of prices for hogs at the Chicago stockyards for the years named:

Heavy packing, 250-500 pound hogs:
1892	$3.70@7.90
1893	3.80@8.75
1894	3.90@6.75
1895	3.20@5.45
1896	3.40@4.45
1897	3.00@4.45
1898	3.10@4.80
1899	3.25@4.95
Mixed packing, 200-250 pound hogs:
1892	$3.60@6.85
1893	4.25@8.65
1894	3.90@6.55
1895	3.25@5.55
1896	2.75@4.45
1897	3.20@4.50
1898	3.10@4.70
1899	3.40@5.00
Light bacon, 150-200 pound hogs:
1892	$3.60@6.95
1893	4.40@8.50
1894	3.50@6.45
1895	3.25@5.70
1896	2.60@4.45
1897	3.20@4.65
1898	3.10@4.65
1899	3.30@5.00

* * *

These figures help us to settle the question of whether the market will pay more for heavy or medium hogs. Taking the averages of all these years we find it for each class of hogs to be:

Heavy packing	$3.43@5.93
Mixed packing	3.43@5.78
Light bacon	3.30@5.78

This shows the difference to be very slight, so far as the years quoted are concerned.

Their Right of Way.

European automobile manufacturers spent prodigious amounts in insuring their entries against delays in the recent Paris-Berlin contest. One firm alone spent upward of $100,000. Mechanics on bicycles were posted along the entire route; small reservoirs of gasoline were established at many villages and towns; duplicate parts were sent to various points on the route, with squads of machinists on hand to make necessary changes quickly. The tire manufacturers established stations in almost every town; spare tires of every size were provided in abundance, not only at the villages and towns, but between them. To guard against accidents, the duke of Mecklenburg had the roads guarded by pickets during the transit of the racers across his domain.

Every Day's Letters.

According to a statistician, the pope receives more letters and newspapers each day than any other ruler, the average number being from 20,000 to 22,000. Of these only a few are ever seen by his holiness, most of them being taken at once to the chancellor's office, where they are distributed among thirty-five secretaries, who duly read them. Next to the pope comes President McKinley, who receives daily about 1,400 letters and between 3,000 and 4,000 newspapers, pamphlets and books. The king of England's mail is not as large as this, 1,000 letters and from 2,000 to 3,000 newspapers being the daily average. The czar receives 650 letters daily, the king of Italy 500 and Queen Wilhelmina of Holland between 100 and 150, all of which she reads herself.

Poultry Notes.

In the presence of the writer one farmer said: "I have the fattest hens in the country, and they lay the smallest eggs of any; they have the run of my corn cribs." Too many hens have the run of the corn cribs, and are not only spoiled for present usefulness, but are likely to transmit the same quality to their offspring.

It is certain that more nitrogenous material should be fed. As one experimenter says: "It is quite probable that no general rule applicable to all cases can be determined, for possibly the ration best suited for the production of broilers, which are forced as rapidly as possible until they reach a suitable market size, may not be best for the production of breeders in which vigor and strength are prime essentials." In other words, it is possible to feed to birds destined as broilers more corn than to a bird destined to produce eggs.

A correspondent asks how roup affects birds. The principal symptoms are fever and watery secretions about the eyes and nose. The fever will not naturally be noticed unless attention is called to it by the other symptoms. In some cases the head swells and the eyes are closed by the swelling of the lids. There are at least two distinct diseases we call roup. One of them is of a catarrhal nature and occurs in the winter, spring and late fall. This disease is successfully doctored, so some poultry men report. The other occurs during any part of the year, but is often most destructive during the hot weather. In this disease few of the birds show a swelled head or little symptoms about the head. In fact many birds we have seen die from this kind of roup, indicated it only by a very high fever and diarrhoea. It is a very contagious disease, and can be fought best by prevention.

Little attention is paid to poultry farming as a business in the West. This may be largely accounted for by the fact that prices in Western cities do not reach the height of those in eastern cities. The farms of the West are generally quite freely supplied with poultry whose keeping costs the farmer next to nothing, at least in the summer, when foraging is the rule. The products of these farms go onto the markets at a low price, and the general buying public is satisfied with the quality enough to buy and use it. During the entire year dressed poultry can be purchased in Chicago at from 3 to 13 cents per pound. At this time (August 3) dressed hens are selling at retail at 10½ cents per pound, and they are of good quality. Poultry farming is increasing in the West and there are now hundreds of establishments scattered through Illinois and adjacent states; but there are near our big cities no such poultry farms as we find around the large cities of the East, where prices for poultry are relatively high. As an illustration of this difference in prices we note that a South Water street (Chicago) firm reships a very large part of its game birds to Philadelphia, because they can pay the freight to that city and get enough for their birds to return a handsome profit over the price they would get in Chicago.

Alleged Process of Preserving Butter.

In the endeavor to find something that will save time, be cheap, and neutralize the effect of dirt in the milk, many milk men are hoping and wishing for a preservative that will be cheap, chemist proof and sure death to bacteria—a most impossible combination. If every handler of milk would tack up in the northeast corner of his memory the fact that any compound that will poison bacteria will also poison man, there would be more pure milk, less court fines, and a general improvement all around. The following is an official report on a much lauded and wonderful compound that was going to revolutionize the dairy business, a few months since:

Consul Freeman, Copenhagen, under date of April 22, 1901, says:

"I am in receipt of so many inquiries from the United States in regard to the reported discovery of a new and successful process for preserving butter, meat, eggs, etc., that I am led to suggest that notice be given in the Consular Reports that the so-called discovery is a failure. The alleged inventor applied for a patent, but his application was rejected. The sealed package of butter which was presented as a test of the process bore a notary's certificate as having been sealed up in 1900, but it was proved that the butter had been preserved only a few weeks—the date, February, 1901, having been surreptitiously changed to read February, 1900."—Hoard's Dairyman.

The Pennsylvania Fight on Oleo.

The battle over oleomargarine in Pennsylvania seems to be going in favor of honest goods, at least in the domain of legislation. The oleo bill recently passed is about as stringent as the New York law. Whether or not it will be enforced is another question. In the past the State officials entrusted with the enforcement of the law neglected it to such an extent that they were accused of being in the employ of the oleo makers. The scandal growing out of this alleged connection resulted in a change of officials, and it may be that the effect of the agitation on the new ones will prove salutary.

It is pretty well accepted now among horticulturists that in replanting transplanted plants the earth should be packed as hard as possible over and about the roots. This packing brings the earth into close contact with the feeding roots and the air spaces are obliterated. With a little moisture the plant can soon get into growing condition again.

A SONG TO NATURE

Out for a walk with Nature,
  Out to the hills and streams,
Out where the sunshine drifts and sifts
  Through the leaves and tints your dreams,
Out where the airs of the mountains
  A breath of the snow brings down,
Out where the pine trees scent the breeze,
  Out of the sweltering town!

Into thy arms, O Nature,
  Take me again, I pray,
And fill my heart with the old delight
  I knew when a boy at play.
Lean over me cool and tender,
  And quiet me with thy calm;
My passions quell with thy magic spell
  And heal my wounds with thy balm.

For I am thy child, O Nature,
  Born, nurtured and reared with thee;
And the crush and heat of the throbbing street
  To me are an agony.
In the crowd of my kind I'm lonely,
  But a voice in my spirit sings
A song of glee when I dwell with thee
  And talk with the soul of things.

I'm sick to death, O Nature,
  I'm sick of the sordid strife,
I'm sick of the greed and the grinding need,
  The cheats and the deceits of life;
And I come as child to its mother,
  To renew my faith again,
To regain the good in the solitude
  I've lost in the haunts of men.

As a man athirst, O Nature,
  By thy cooling springs I kneel;
And a deep soul-draught by my lips is quaffed,
  A water whose touch will heal.
As a man who is weary of doubting
  From the world's unfaith I flee,
To grasp thy hand and to understand
  The God that's revealed in thee.

The End

Love and the Law.

BY F. H. LANCASTER.

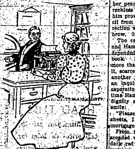
(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

For the twentieth time that afternoon, Tom Hamilton snapped his watch and returned it to his pocket. He was not interested in the passage of time—that pile of copying must be finished whether it took him until midnight; but those brief intermissions gave him an opportunity to look at a shy thought that had haunted him since daylight. And the oftener he looked at it the better he liked it. In the morning, it is true, he had laughed at it; during the forenoon shrugged his shoulders impatiently; but in the afternoon—he took out his watch and stared at the dial.

That a man of his staid, prosaic make-up should have dreamed at all, was absurd; but that the dream should have upset all his waking thoughts and come between his attention and his business affairs was worse than absurd—it was serious.

And what was the dream? Only a waste of wild white waters, storm-swept but glorious! In the foreground a towering wave curving inward, grandly crested, an ogre of the sea. And he upon the cliff dashed with spray and beaten by the wind. A delicious dream for a hot summer night; small wonder that he liked to recall it again and again through the stifling day.

Hamlin snapped the watch for the twenty-first time and took up his pen.



"Shove me those mortgages."

"Dash this weather!"

If his typewriter had been on hand, he would have knocked off work long ago. He would have been driving in the park enjoying the breeze instead of sweltering here. He paused to pass his damp handkerchief over his beaded brow and glanced at the vacant chair. "Sick," he muttered. "Good Lord. Sick such weather as this!"

Almost as he spoke the door opened and a woman in gray linen with emaculate collar and cuffs and lean jaws moved quietly toward the seat opposite.

Hamlin raised his head and greeted her with his customary bow. She returned the salutation silently, as she always did, and sat down to the typewriter. It struck Hamlin that her eyes and jaws looked more tired and lean than usual, but this was natural since she had been ill.

With the silence that always reigned between them, unless broken by an imperative necessity, he shoved the batch of copying across to her and leaned back. What a good thing it was to be able to pay somebody else to do one's drudgery. The thought brought a qualm of conscience. She was not well and it was so dashed hot.

"Shove me those mortgages, a pen copy will do."

"I intend to work after hours to make up for lost time. I will be able to finish it all," the typewriter responded quietly.

Tom Hamlin got up impatiently and began moving about. He had a sneaking sensation of being somewhat in awe of this silent, absolutely upright assistant. It was after office hours and he was free to enjoy the drive he had been longing for. She had a key. But Hamlin lounged against the window idly watching the swift fingers flashing over the keys and fell to reviewing his dream again. So vivid had it been that even now he could almost feel the dashing of the spray. As for that other sensation—that slight pressure against his sleeve, it had been with him ever since he awoke. Oh, well dreams are fantastic things. Hamlin looked for a long moment at the clear-cut profile turned toward him and then abruptly took down a book.

Were her eyes always like that, he wondered, tired as though she had looked upon death and the dreariness of it? Was it over-work or something worse than work? If she should look in reality upon that glorious bit of wild waters, would that jaded light pass or would it deepen? Dash it all, why couldn't he have dreamed a moment longer?

"Excuse me. Is this correct?"

Hamlin's quick glance met the tired eyes then dropped to paper on which her pencil rested. There in his bold, reckless hand her name smiled up at him provokingly. He caught the pencil from her and made a hurried correction while a dark flush warmed his brow. He detested a mistake.

The ceaseless clicking began again and Hamlin read on as though his life depended upon the contents of the book. Had he done that fool thing more than once? As fate would have it, scarcely ten minutes passed before another sheet was at his elbow and an inquiring pencil point rested exasperatingly impassive upon. This time Hamlin made the correction with dignity and added with a desperate smile:

"Please pass me the rest of those sheets. I seem to be determined to mortgage all you possess."

From time to time his pencil descended with a vicious dash and the dark red on his brow deepened. At last, when he felt cooler, he shoved the sheets across to her and glanced carelessly at the thin face bent over the machine. A moment later he was standing in the hall waiting impatiently for his order.

"I wonder if she would die rather than admit to me that she was a human being! This heat is killing her and yet the only way to make her rest would be to take her by the shoulders and put her out of the office." Then his order came and he went back to her. She was still rather white about the mouth.

"Won't you try some?" he asked placing a dewy glass at her elbow.

"Thank you."

"It is so hot," he commented.

"It is indeed," she assented rather absently.

Hamlin tried hard to think of something else. Her tea was vanishing with a speed that bespoke more than natural thirst.

"Like as not she has had fever on her all the afternoon," he reflected.

"I had a pleasant dream last night," he remarked as she put aside her glass.

"Yes?" she returned politely.

"Dreamt we were standing on a cliff watching a storm at sea, the spray, and all that. It was delicious. We were standing together."

"A strange dream for such a warm night," the typewriter remarked evidently oblivious of his last words and his ensuing consternation.

He got up and moved away to bow a blind and resume his restless walk. What the dickens had he been thinking about all this time! What an impossible position it was anyway. In real life when a man puts his arm around a woman she can't lean her cheek against his sleeve. But his arm had not been around her. His hands were in his pockets. It was as though she had come to him like a tired child, certain of support. Why had he waked before he could look into her eyes? Common sense jarred him; there was not much of the tired child in that alert figure with its weary eyes and preoccupied smile, but he set it impatiently aside. Great Ned! What had he been thinking of for the last two years! Why, there were times when he had barely been civil. And now—now it might be too late.

"See here, I can't get that idea of the sea out of my head. Let's knock off work and make a dash for fresh air. I can have my horse around in a moment. It's only ten or fifteen miles."

"Why, it would kill the horse," the typewriter ejaculated, struck aghast at the idea of taking a pampered animal on such an expedition with the thermometer at one hundred in the shade.

"Oh, no," Hamlin insisted, "it is getting cooler. We could take it easy going out, watch the sun set in the water and drive back by twilight. Doesn't it sound pleasant?"

"Very pleasant."

"Does that mean you will go?"

"No, thank you. I had better finish this work."

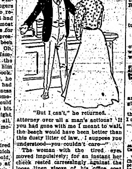
"Oh, hang the work," he exclaimed impatiently. "Haven't I devoted myself to work body and soul, for the last thirty years. Am I to have nothing in this world but grind and grime."

Hamlin thrust his hands into his pocket and clenched them slowly.

"I had meant to wait," he began abruptly, "to make myself wait until I could see you in some proper place—or write, but it is no use now. We were together, you were leaning against me. If I could realize that dream I would be the happiest—"

"Oh, wait," she pleaded.

"But I can't," he returned. "Don't you know that love holds a power of attorney over all a man's actions? If you had gone with me I meant to wait, the beach would have been better than this dusty litter of law. I suppose you understood—you couldn't care—"



"But I can't," he returned.

The woman with the tired eyes moved impulsively; for an instant her cheek rested caressingly against the loose linen sleeve of his office coat then she started up and went quickly to the door.

"Just one moment," Hamlin pleaded, folding his arms and standing determinedly where she had left him. "Please—dear, I'll bring the horse around?"

The typewriter turned at the open door. "Well," she agreed hurriedly.

Hamlin's heart broke into glad song. The eyes he loved were no longer tired.

A SHIP'S NEGRO CAPTAIN.

Colored Man Who Is Successful on the Ocean.

A colored man has been made captain of the British schooner Sarah E. Douglass, now in port with a cargo of pineapples from the West Indies. He is Captain Robert G. Sawyer, of Savannah Sound, Eleuthera Island, Bahamas. Captain Sawyer was born in the West Indies. In boyhood he followed the life of most colored boys in the Bahamas, which consists in diving for conch shells, sponges and fishes, and owing to the geography of the country, they spend the best part of their lives in small boats, crossing the rivers, bays and sounds which honeycombed the island. Eighteen years ago the captain went to sea in deep-sea vessels. He educated himself and mastered mathematics so that he could solve the intricate problems of navigation. He then became a navigator, and was seen here in the West Indian schooners Brothers and Sarah E. Douglass as navigator of these vessels between the West Indies and Baltimore in the pineapple season. When the Douglass entered the pineapple trade this season Captain Sawyer was appointed master by J. W. Culmer of Nassau, who owns the vessel. Captain Sawyer is a man of powerful physique. He is about 6 feet 6 inches tall and weighs 214 pounds, every ounce of which seems to be muscle and bone. He is built like a Roman wrestler, speaks English fluently and has excellent manners. He has a dark brown skin. He wears a natty blue yachting suit and cap.—Baltimore American.

POLISHED SHIRT-BOSOM.

How One That John Drew Wore Almost Broke Up an Act.

John Drew, as is well known, is most particular regarding his dress, both on and off the stage. He was playing in "The Liars" two seasons ago on the road, and his itinerary included nearly two weeks of successive one-night stands. His man attendant always looked after the clothing he wore at the theater, bringing to the actor's dressing room shortly before Mr. Drew appeared to dress. In one of the smaller cities the valet had sent Mr. Drew's linen to a laundry, and the actor found, when about to don it, that the bosom of his dress shirt contained a polish which disgusted him. He said things. But there was nothing to do but wear it, polish and all. Mr. Drew had a long speech in a scene with Arthur Byron. The latter at once observed the unusual polish on Mr. Drew's shirt front, and while he was delivering the lengthy dialogue, Mr. Byron, though it was not noticed by the audience, began to adjust his hair, straighten his tie, and otherwise complete his toilet by the aid of the polish on Mr. Drew's shirt. A roar went up from behind the scenes, and Mr. Byron's joke nearly spoiled the scene.—New York Times.

Point of Superiority.

"How is your daughter getting on with her piano lessons?"

"Splendidly!" answered Mrs. Cumrox. "We are very proud of her. She is so very classical and accomplished that she never thinks of playing anything that anybody wants to hear."—Washington Star.

A Son's Devotion.

Here is an interesting piece of gossip from the Minneapolis Journal.

"If Halvor Steenerson of Crookston has congressional ambitions, the recent utterances of A. D. Stephens, his fellow townsman, must give him some uneasiness. There is no love lost between Steenerson and Stephens, and their careers have crossed each other in a most provoking way at various times. Since the Steenerson boom for congress started, Stephens has concluded that he has just as good a right to represent the republicans of Polk County and the new ninth district as his rival. He has given it out among his friends that he is quite likely to be a candidate.

This may have the effect of keeping Steenerson out of the race, and it may force him in. Polk county may have two candidates for the republican nomination, or it may not have any at all.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XVIII. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1901. NUMBER 35.

GOOD YIELD.

Over 1200 Bushels of Potatoes from Four Acres.

The profit realized from four acres of land on the Langseth farm this year will be as great as some farmers will make off of a quarter section. This land was planted to potatoes this spring, and although little care was given them, they will yield over 1200 bushels. As the price of potatoes will be between 50 cents and $1 in this city this fall, Mr. Langseth will make a handsome profit.

Another Opinion.

To the Editor: It has been questioned whether this city could support or needed two English churches. It might be questioned also whether the Sand Ridge school house needs two English services. "O, consistiency, thou art a Jewel!" A THINKER.

To the Editor: We clip the above from the NEWS of August 22. The writer of the article must be very ignorant of the circumstances under which we had two English services here, and also very careless of other peole's feelings.

We feel at perfect liberty to invite any minister we wish to hold English services here, so long as we do not interfere with other appointments made earlier, and ask for no money which should be given to them. Furthermore, have we not a right to choose a minister before we are asked to support him? No, Thinker, it is not a question of two English services here, but might we not have one good one?

Oh, Thinker, thou art very thoughtless!

The fraction ½ placed after certain subjects indicates that the subject is studied one-half year. A subject studied one whole year receives a full credit and a subject studied a half year receives a half credit. These credits are such as are required by the University of Minnesota, twelve year credits being required for admission thereto. Any of the three courses offered will admit to any normal school, college or university.

As a matter of economy of room and means it has been deemed the part of wisdom to groupe the 7th and 8th grades of the entire city. Gentlemen:—Early in February of the present year I contracted a severe attack of rheumatism which finally concentrated itself in my left leg. I tried several so-called remedies but all to no avail. A friend recommended me to give 6088 a trial. I received almost immediate relief. Within a week I was able to resume work and before I had completed the first bottle I was entirely cured. I can highly recommend 6088 to all sufferers of rheumatism. Yours very sincerly, WM. D. HUFF.

Don't Be a Knocker.

Every community—and this is no exception—has its knocker club, made up of a certain class of individuals who are always finding fault with everything done by anyone else, but who never seem to be willing to do anything themselves. If a lot of young fellows start anything for the interest of the city, the knocker's club get out their hammers and belt away and make as much noise as a boiler factory; if a man succeeds in business their tongues start wagging and a lot of talk is set in motion calculated to hurt him as much as possible. Young people are slandered, imaginary evils are reported, and the knockers are supremely happy when they are smirching the character of another or injuring the business enterprises of a neighbor. The knocker has no well defined business of his own, or, if he has, he finds more pleasure in attending to that of other people. He never looks for good in anybody, hence doesn't find it. A community with much of this element is most unfortunate. They retard the growth of a city, hinder prosperity, and make things profanely unpleasant for everybody else. It is just as easy to push and pull with the crowd as against it. It is as easy to find good in humanity as bad. When the people of a community prosper, your show to get on is better. It is a hundred times better to be one of a crowd of hustlers than a fault finding, gossiping knocker. Don't be a knocker.—St. Peter Herald.

A thief lately arrested in Madrid carried a concealed electric battery in his right hand. He would approach a man offering his hand in friendly fashion. If the man responded by clasping the outstretched hand an overpowering shock was the result and the thief would get through his work and away before the victim recovered.

Baron Nathaniel Rothschild has leased for five years a piece of ground at the highest point of the Ampezzo road, between Toblack and Ampezzo, in the Austrian Tyrol. The frontier defense of the Roman Empire between the Danube and the Rhine has been under examination by a royal commission for eight years, and the work is nearly completed. Of all the young men in the country, only five per cent. are members of churches; of college young men, fifty-two per cent are members of churches, so says Dean Hulbert of the University of Chicago. College life has its peculiar temptations, of course, but it abounds in opportunities also. A young man must grow. If he aims to grow upward, his college will help grandly. But he may prefer to grow downward, and that the college cannot always hinder.

A fire recently broke out at Hermannsreuth, an Austrian village near the Bavarian frontier. A Bavarian fire brigade, which was stationed only three miles away, hastened to the rescue, but the Austrian customs authorities refused to allow the fire engines to pass the frontier without paying the usual tax on imported machinery. The Bavarian firemen naturally turned back and half the village was burned down before the nearest Austrian fire brigade could reach the scene.

"The sound of a kiss is not so loud as that of a cannon," remarked the Professor at the breakfast table, "but its echo lasts a deal longer." Latterly it seems to last before it begins. Nearly a year before his coronation King Edward has announced that the ceremony of kissing by the peers be omitted. "Imagine me compelling Devonshire to kiss me!" he is said to have exclaimed. "He would never survive the ordeal." William IV, who objected to this part of the ceremony, submitted to it, but declared he would renounce the kingship rather than repeat the experience.

The humor of the locomotive that "struck a cow and cut it into calves" is due to an oversight of the proofreader. The work of elevating railway-tracks about street crossings, now being pushed in half a dozen cities of the middle West, is due to a different oversight, that of "reform" mayors and aldermen, who believe that pedestrians and occupants of carriages have rights which corporations are bound to respect. Even the ruminating cow may yet find her safest promenade along the city street.

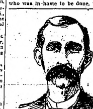
Red Wing, Minn., Aug. 29. — F. V. Hubbard, superintendent of the Red Wing schools, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon in his own dooryard.

He had been remodeling the house and was directing August Nelson's work with a horse scraper on the lawn. It is an affair that dumps its load by unhooking a lever. The driver had some trouble with it, and Mr. Hubbard, who was in haste to be done, tried to help him. He unhooked it, the load of dirt threw the scraper over suddenly and the end of the lever hit him in the back of the head, breaking his neck. He died instantly.



F. V. Hubbard, Superintendent Red Wing Schools.

He had been superintendent here six years; before that nine years in Waseca and six years in Redwood Falls. He stood high among the school men of the state, was one of the vice presidents of the state teachers' association, an officer of the National Association of Superintendents, and was a leading candidate for state superintendent of Minnesota last winter.

He was forty-six years old and a graduate of Whitewater normal. His wife and four sons survive him.

Gettysburg, S. D., Aug. 29.—At Forest City, eighteen miles west of here, A. B. Daly was shot and instantly killed. Rome G. Glover, formerly a saloonkeeper at that place, is charged with the crime. The killing seems to have been the result of a feud of some standing with dark hints of a woman at the bottom of it. Glover and Daly had had frequent differences and each had threatened to kill the other. One day last week they had a fight and Glover was badly whipped by Daly, who is much the larger man. Immediately after the killing Glover came to Gettysburg and surrendered himself to the sheriff.

"President Kruger said he could not tell definitely whether he would come to the United States in September; he would be guided by circumstances. I urged him to make St. Paul his headquarters. He made no definite answer, but evidently he did not look upon the proposition with disfavor. The reception of Delegates Fischer and Wessels in Minnesota impressed him greatly. If he comes to the United States it is almost certain he will visit St. Paul."

LITTLE ONES UNITE.

Southern Minnesota Millers Combine to Handle Export Trade.

Southern Minnesota millers have formed a combination to compete with the big milling concerns of the world, and especially the big mills of the West, for foreign trade. The combination is to be known as the Export Transportation company, with headquarters in Minneapolis and a resident manager in Chicago.

The smaller mills have been forced to be content, as a general thing, with what trade they were able to find in their immediate territory. Now and then there has been a mill that by persistence and advertising has been able to push its brands beyond its immediate district. Wherever the small mill could secure enough home trade to keep the plant profitably employed, it has been content to allow conditions to remain as they were. But the big mills have been cutting into the local trade more and competition has grown keener at home as a result of the increase in the number of mills, which has had the immediate result of reducing the territory in which any one mill could solicit trade profitably. If the small mills are to keep on the dividend list they must find more trade and to secure that they must become exporters of flour.

In soliciting export business, the small miller complains of two obstacles. One is that he has been unable to secure a rate that will allow him to compete with the large manufacturer, and again he is unable to furnish the big quantities sometimes desired. To overcome this a combination of the small manufacturers has been necessary.

The new company includes some of the best mills in Southern Minnesota. It is also the intention of the promoters to include other lines of manufacture in time, among which will be some of the independent manufacturers of linseed oil and oil cake in the Northwest. L. E. Townsley, formerly with the Southern Pacific, will be in charge of the Chicago office. H. H. King is one of the Minneapolis men interested in the enterprise.

BETTER THAN EXPECTED.

Threshing Returns According to Weather Bureau Reports.

The Minnesota climate and crop service bulletin of the weather bureau for the past week contains the following summary:

A moderately warm week, with high temperature in the southern portion the first of the week and on the 24th. Scattered light to heavy local showers occurred on the 20th and 21st, and more widely distributed moderate local showers on the 24th. The showers delayed harvesting in the extreme northern counties, and also stacking and threshing, but were beneficial to late potatoes and corn. A severe storm of wind, rain and hail occurred at Minneapolis on the evening of the 25th, and much damage was done by the wind and hail, especially in breaking glass.

Considerable progress was made in harvesting in Polk, Marshall and Kittson counties, and the greater portion has been completed in that section. Threshing has continued, except where hindered by rains. The yields seem to be somewhat above expectations in the northern portion. In the northern portion of the middle section the corn and potato crops have improved in many localities, and in other sections they are generally light except in a few localities. Corn is being cut for fodder in the southern half of the state, and in many localities the pastures are almost dried up, though the rains of the 24th should improve all growing crops and pastures in the favored localities.

Plowing has been in progress during the week except where it has been too dry in some portions of the southern and middle sections, and where too wet in a few localities of the northern section. In central portions a large crop of hay has been secured, but the second crops of hay do not promise well. The cutting of flax has advanced into the northern section of the state, and threshing is in progress in the southern. The crop is generally poor.

DELAYED BY STEEL STRIKE.

Bids for Iron Work for the Capitol Will Probably Be Too High for Acceptance.

"It is out of the question that the new capitol can be completed to be used by the new legislature as planned, a year from this winter," said Channing Seabury of the capitol commission.

Bids for the steam heating plant, electric lighting, boiler house and tunnel to the capitol, and skylights and copper work are to be opened Sept. 24. Mr. Seabury says the commission is almost sure to reject these bids because they will be forced out of reasonable figures by the steel strike. No contractor who has to use steel in any form will make a bid, in view of the strike, without estimating a margin of profit which will make acceptance impossible.

"This means work will be delayed a good year," said Mr. Seabury. "We planned to put in the heating plant this fall so as to work all winter, but it now seems impossible."

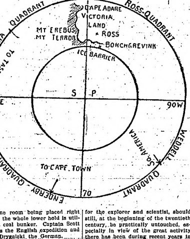
LIVE STOCK AT THE FAIR.

The Exhibition Will Be the Greatest Ever Seen in the Wide World.

In 1900 the Minnesota State fair secured the national exhibit of the American Hereford Breeders' association, and with the other animals shown set forth the largest livestock display ever made. In Chicago last fall the Minnesota exhibit was eclipsed, but the Minnesota men have now secured a joint exhibition by the American Shorthorn Breeders' association and the Hereford people, with large accessions from many other classes of breeders. The result will be such a gathering together of four-footed beasts as was never seen on the face of the earth. It will be a great occasion for farmers who wish to study breeds and for every one who likes to see a fine animal or who may be interested in bettering the condition of the farming districts.

SEEKING THE SOUTH POLE.

The two most important exploring expeditions which have ever been fitted out for the South Polar seas will start from England and Germany this month—the English in the Discovery and the German in the Gauss, both of them new ships especially constructed for an Antarctic exploration and equipped with everything needful for the most complete and varied scientific observation, even including a captive balloon and an electrical plant. The two vessels are about the same size—170 feet in length and 35 feet in breadth and have displacements of about 1,600 tons. They are strongly built of oak and sheathed with greenheart. The bows are steel-plated, and made with a great sheer, so that they will tend to ride up on the ice and break it with their weight. They are rigged for sailing, but carry auxiliary steam engines of about 400 horse power, and the screws and rudders are so arranged that they can be hoisted out of the water in case of danger from ice. The living rooms in both vessels are amidships, the stoke hole and engine room being placed right aft, while the whole lower hold is utilized as a coal bunker. Captain Scott commands the English expedition and Dr. von Drygalski the German.



It is expected that the commanders of the two expeditions will work together and follow a system suggested by Sir Clements Markham, president of the Royal Geographical Society, which divides the region into four quadrants, two on the Australasian side and two on the Cape Horn and Cape of Good Hope side. The first quadrant, from 90 degrees east to 180 degrees, he names Victoria; the second, from 180 degrees to 90 degrees west, in which the only known land is Peter Island, is called the Ross Quadrant; the third, from 90 degrees west to the meridian of Greenwich, is Weddell, and the fourth, extending from the Greenwich meridian to 90 degrees east, about which the least is known, is called the Enderby Quadrant. The English expedition will confine its operations to the Victoria and Ross Quadrants, the Germans taking Weddell and Enderby.

The great unknown region comprised in these four quadrants covers millions of square miles, extending over practically thirty degrees of latitude. It is continually modifying the atmosphere of the whole southern hemisphere, and yet we know almost nothing about its meteorology. It is one of the most interesting volcanic regions on the face of the globe; recent volcanic rocks are present everywhere and active volcanoes are quite numerous, and we are entirely ignorant of its geology. It is one of the two great world centers of magnetic phenomena, and yet we know scarcely anything regarding the magnetic conditions which prevail, not even with any certainty where the southern magnetic pole is located. It is by all odds the grandest field for ice study now existent, and yet no one has studied the ice there. The mysterious ice barrier rising out of 250 fathoms of water and stretching its perpendicular face for hundreds of miles through the frozen seas like a gigantic wall—perhaps the sea face of the greatest glacier in the world; perhaps the edge of an enormous island of ice anchored over the pole; perhaps, indeed, something still more remarkable than either of these—is certainly one of the greatest natural curiosities in the world.

The region has a fauna and flora of its own apparently very similar to that of the Arctic world. The few fossils which have been picked up indicate that there was a time when it was crowded with plants and animals. The life of the Antarctic seas is very varied and numerous. The tropical oceans which now separate the two poles seem to present an effectual barrier to any communication, and it is a matter of much interest to discover what the Arctic and Antarctic identity of life forms is due to. Various speculations have been put forward; one of these is that deep, cold currents traverse the warmer waters of the ocean and form hidden roadways, as it were, by which the two polar faunas are connected. Another theory is that there was originally a uniform fauna throughout all the seas of the globe, which is now surviving only at the poles, having been superseded in the warmer regions of the ocean by newly developed forms.

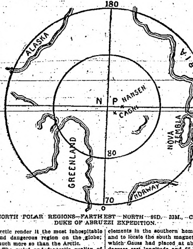
The North pole, chiefly for geographical reasons, has been much more successfully and continuously attacked than its southern counterpart. The cause of this is plainly shown by the two diagrammatic maps.

The North pole is closely surrounded by large land masses, all of them inhabited and fairly accessible. The Antarctic continent (if it is a continent) lies in the midst of a great ocean, the nearest land being the narrow extremity of South America, many hundreds of miles away. So that while the North pole has been approached to within about 225 miles, no human being has ever been nearer than about 700 miles to the South Polar axis.

It seems at first rather surprising, notwithstanding the many geographical difficulties, that an enormous region of this sort, full of fresh material for the explorer and scientist, should still, at the beginning of the twentieth century, be practically untouched, especially in view of the great activity there has been during recent years in North Polar explorations, expedition after expedition going out every year—nine, for instance, being planned for 1901. But, apart from the purely geographical reasons, in the absence of closely surrounding populations and large land masses, the climate and temperature conditions of the Antarctic render it the most inhospitable and dangerous region on the globe; much more so than the Arctic.

The weird and fantastic quality of the whole region is well described by Henryk Arctowski, a member of the Belgica expedition. He says:

"The silence which broods at times over this unknown world is singularly impressive, but occasionally a mountain of ice collapses with a thundering crash. One could hardly believe one's eyes when these changes in the fairy-like scenes occurred were it not for the dull rumbling growl of the disrupted glaciers. In fact, this realm of eternal ice is so different from anything one has seen that it appears another world altogether. In sober truth, I do not believe that in any fable the human imagination has described what we have seen here." In view of the great interest which attaches to the expedition of 1901, and the very radical changes which their explorations may bring about in Antarctic geography, it will be of interest perhaps to go over briefly the history of the region and our present knowledge regarding it.



NORTH POLAR REGIONS—FARTHEST NORTH—86D. 33M., CAGNI, DUKE OF ABRUZZI EXPEDITION.

When the belief in the roundness of the earth began to gain ground the old geographers decided that an antarctic continent would be necessary to preserve the symmetry of the earth. According to Pomponius Mela, between the "real world" which he knew and his hypothetical Antarctica there lay an intensely torrid zone, scorched by the sun and enveloped in mist, over which it was impossible for man to sail. And he accounted for the volume of the Nile by supposing it to rise in this southern continent, pass under the waters of the torrid zone, and again come to the surface in South Africa. As commerce was gradually extended in all directions these fantastic notions were one by one dispelled, and although during the middle ages the idea of an antipodes, or antichthone, as it was also called, was considered heretical and rejected by the church, geography was being gradually perfected on the basis of Ptolemy's great work. Through the perseverance of Prince Henry the Navigator, who sent out vessel after vessel, the southern limit of Africa was fixed, and it was clearly shown that whatever land lay to the south had no connection with it. An antarctic continent appeared on Schoner's globes in 1515.

Portuguese, Spanish and Dutch explorers worked away at the islands just south of the known continents, and many of them were named as portions of a great antarctic land. Cook, in his second voyage, 1772-5, sailed around the globe between 40 degrees and 60 degrees south latitude, discovered the great ice barrier, and finally settled the much discussed question of land connection between the continents and Antarctica. Cook reached a south latitude of 71 degrees 10 minutes, the highest then attained. Here he found immense fields of ice, which extended, unbroken, for miles. Whales, blue, brown, and white petrels, and a few sooty albatrosses were the only animals seen. The Russian expedition, commanded by F. G. von Bellinghausen, 1819-21, reached 69 degrees 53 minutes in longitude 93 degrees 19 minutes. James Weddell, in 1823, sailed with two vessels on a sealing expedition. He reached a south latitude of 74 degrees 15 minutes in longitude 34 degrees 16 minutes west. At this high latitude, exceeding Cook's by three degrees, he found the sea open and only three icebergs visible. Many minor expeditions followed these, and a number of new islands were discovered and named. Among those minor expeditions may be mentioned those of Lieut. Wilkes of the United States navy, and a French expedition in charge of M. D'Urville. The next expedition of leading importance was that of Sir James Clark Ross, 1840-3, and, indeed, the only one, up to the two which will start this month, with anything like a satisfactory equipment which has ever attacked the Antarctic seas. This was a purely scientific expedition, its chief purpose being to study the magnetic elements in the southern hemisphere, and to locate the south magnetic pole, which Gauss had placed at about 146 degrees east longitude and 66 degrees south latitude. (As determined by the Borchgrevink expedition, the south magnetic pole is 73 degrees 20 minutes south latitude and 146 degrees east longitude.) Sir Joseph Hooker, the famous botanist, then plain Dr. Hooker, accompanied the expedition. Its ships were the Erebus and Terror. Victoria Land was discovered and named; Mounts Erebus and Terror, the former an active volcano, 12,400 feet in height, were discovered. The ice barrier from 150 to 200 feet in height, was followed for 250 miles, but no opening could be found. Ross subsequently reached 78 degrees 9 minutes and 30 seconds south latitude in longitude 161 degrees 27 minutes west. Since this expedition until the voyages of the Belgica, 1898-9, and the Southern Cross, 1898-1900, the Southern Arctic was left almost exclusively to sealers. Borchgrevink, of the latter expedition, reached a south latitude of 78 degrees 50 minutes, exceeding Ross by about 40 minutes.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

A Swiss Condensing Factory.

Some interesting particulars are given by Mr. F. C. Harrison, bacteriologist to the Guelph Experiment Station, in a description published by him of the great condensed milk business of Henri Nestle and Co., carried on by them at Vevey, Switzerland, and elsewhere. The article says: The milk supply is drawn from over 250 villages, but the firm does not buy from individual farmers. When the peasants wish to do business with the company they form into a co-operative society, and appoint one of their number as manager. They then sign an agreement which binds them to feed certain foods to their cattle, to keep their sheds and utensils clean, and to do many other things for the good of the milk. The manager arranges the terms, settles difficulties between the community and the company, and exercises a general surveillance over his society. The Nestle company have twenty-five inspectors, each with a horse and rig, whose duty is to drive continually from village to village, seeing that all is right and in good order. The inspector is always drawn from a remote village, has no association with the villages he calls at, and is selected for his vigilance and experience. The company also have their own veterinary surgeons, whose duty is to examine all milking utensils, and see that they are scrupulously clean, also that the byres are clean, well ventilated, and drained. The cows' diet is confined to hay and grass, and the inspector must see that no forcing foods, like oil cake, are used. Milk is transported in cans to the factory, and is there carefully weighed, sampled, and tested every day, to ensure that all cream is present.

The contents of all cans are then turned into a huge vat, where the milk remains until required for boiling. It is then run into a copper boiler and carefully scalded. Syrup cooked in another boiler to the right temperature and consistency is added, and the two are then mixed together. Next the milk is pumped into the condensers, and there condensed within a vacuum. The condition of the contents is ascertained by means of a tube attachment, which is rotated into the interior of the chamber near the bottom and drawn out with a sample for examination. Condensation completed, the hot fluid is run out into cans to cool. To give an idea of the immense size of the Nestle factories it is sufficient to say that they daily handle 26,000 gallons of fresh milk, the production of 15,000 cows.

Methods of Preserving Eggs.

Doubtless some of our readers are interested in the question of preserving eggs. For such we publish the following from the London Rural World:

The method most commonly in use is as follows: The eggs are placed in a large vessel or tub, holding large or small quantities, as the case may be, and these are all piled up, one on the top of the other. A preparation composed of a mixture of five gallons of water with one gallon of fine slaked lime, to which about a gallon of salt has been added, is made, and when the water has dissolved as much lime as it can, it is poured over the eggs until they are entirely covered, keeping back any lime that may be at the bottom which has not been dissolved. The eggs may be kept in this manner for a very long period, but one drawback to this system is that the shells of the eggs become so brittle that they break with the slightest touch. It is necessary to keep adding a little lime from time to time, otherwise the preparation will lose its effect, and the eggs will not be in a very good state when the time comes for them to be taken out. When the eggs are wanted for use, they are taken out of the solution and wiped dry, but they should be used as soon after as possible, as they do not keep very long. It may here be said, and this applies to all methods of preserving eggs, that it is absolutely essential that the eggs shall be put down quite fresh—if possible, the same day as laid—otherwise they will not preserve nearly as well.

Another method adopted is that of placing the eggs in salt. This keeps the eggs in splendid condition, but there is a slight taste given to them, but it is not by any means disagreeable. The salt absorbs a little moisture from the interior of the egg, hence the inside becomes rather loose, and as there is a rattle when shaken, it gives one the idea that the egg is stale. Another method in common use in some parts of the country is that of making a mixture of sulphur and lampblack. The eggs are placed into a box with a small hole in one side, and the mixture referred to is put upon a saucer and lit inside the box. The eggs are by this means entirely covered over, with a covering of black; and it is claimed for this system that the eggs can be kept for any length of time, and always be quite fresh and sweet. Whether this is a good method or not, can best be judged by the readers. Personally, we do not recommend it, as the eggs being quite black would not increase their market value—rather the reverse.

There are other systems adopted in various parts, but the ones that we have given are the chief English ones. There is another by which it is claimed eggs can be kept fresh for a long time, and that is by dipping them into wax or paraffine; but this is a tedious method, and one that involves much time and labor.

The very best way of preserving eggs is by freezing them, and this is the only way, we think, by which eggs can be kept quite fresh and good. Of course there are very few poultry keepers who are able to do this as very few possess a freezing chamber, and are thus able to freeze their eggs. For this reason we have put it last, as to the ordinary poultry keeper it is quite useless.

Too much importance cannot be attached to having the eggs perfectly fresh when they are put down, and unless they are in this state they will never keep. No egg should be put down that is more than twenty-four hours old, and even less than this is advisable.

As to whether fertile or infertile eggs are the better for preserving, it is a difficult matter to determine. We think—and several experiments that have been made go to prove it—that the infertile ones are the most suitable.

Records of Holstein-Friesians.

(From July 6 to 27, 1901.)

During this period thirty-four reports have been received, of which five were of full-age cows, averaging: Age, 6 years, 9 months, 17 days; tested 49 days after calving; milk, 442.8 lbs.; butter fat, 14.185 lbs.; equivalent butter, 80 per cent fat, 17 lbs., 11.7 oz., or 16 lbs. 8.8 oz., 85 per cent fat. Three were of the four-year-old class, averaging: Age, 4 years, 2 months, 23 days; tested 46 days after calving; milk, 418.8 lbs.; butter fat, 12.855 lbs.; equivalent butter, 80 per cent fat, 16 lbs., 1.1 oz., or 15 lbs., 85 per cent fat. Six were of the three-year-old class, averaging: Age, 3 years, 6 months, 24 days; tested 46 days after calving; milk, 369.5 lbs.; butter fat, 11.197 lbs.; equivalent butter, 80 per cent fat, 13 lbs., 15.9 oz., or 13 lbs. 1 oz., 85.7 per cent fat. Twenty classed as two-year-olds, averaging: Age, 2 years, 1 month, 28 days; tested 42 days after calving; milk, 283.5 lbs.; butter fat, 8.699 lbs.; equivalent butter, 80 per cent fat, 10 lbs., 14 oz., or 10 lbs., 2.4 oz., 85.7 per cent fat. These records, nearly all, were made during the intense summer heat. Practical dairymen recognize the danger of testing during the summer months. The least danger is in testing two-year-old heifers and hence the great preponderance of this class.

Sheep in Orchards.

I agree that when a pig gets an apple containing a worm there is no danger that the worm will cause any damage to the future apple crop. But as an insect destroyer the pig is nowhere with the sheep. The trouble with the pig is that it is too much like a man; when it lies down and goes to sleep it is oblivious of all its surroundings. It sleeps just as soundly and snores just as loud as its human cousin, and when an apple drops it doesn't hear it or go for it until its sleep is out. The instinct of the worm teaches it to get out of the apple as quickly as possible after it drops. I have stood and watched an apple after it struck the ground, and seen the worm come hustling out in a hurry and go for some secure place, and before the pig gets the apple the worm is in some safe hiding place. Not so with the sheep; they never sleep so soundly but they will hear an apple falling rods away, and they are up and there before the worm can get out, and that worm is traveling to the bourn whence no worm ever comes back to curse the apple grower. Yes, pigs are good, but sheep are a hundred times better.—Rural New Yorker.

—To what extent does feed affect the individuality of a cow? This is a question that has yet to be answered, so far as conclusive experiments are concerned. It is doubtless true that feed is constantly changing the characteristics of animals, but we do not know how rapidly the changes take place, nor do we know just the effect each food has. To a certain extent we are feeding in the dark. The Maryland experiment station has been feeding a herd of common cows for several years and noting the effect of proper feeding on individuality. C. F. Doane, who reports on the results, says: "No very material results could be noticed the first year from the extra feed and care the herd received, but through subsequent years there seems to be a steady improvement. Judging from the records of these cows, it is a question if the quality of a dairy cow does not depend almost as much on the feeding as on the breeding. It is also a question if cows that have a more or less pronounced beef tendency, or, at least, would not be called good material from which to build up a dairy herd, cannot, with proper management, be developed into profitable dairy cows." This is a view of the matter that will not strike some of our investigators very favorably. It has against it the generally accepted truth that we have now so many good dairy cows that it will hardly pay to spend time, feed and effort in an attempt to reverse a tendency already strongly developed in a direction opposite to that of milk production.

Harvey Johnson of Iowa says: When our litters are of sufficient age to turn out we usually put two and sometimes three litters together in a pasture where there is a good warm and dry building and plenty of good grass. Near where the sows feed is a small enclosure with a low trough in it, and by a little persuasion and some tempting bits of food we expect to have the pigs feeding nicely at three to four weeks of age. The feed is increased as their capacity for handling it is increased, but we are careful to underfeed rather than overfeed—feeding no more at any time than they will eat clean. We allow them to run with the dams till they wean them, unless we wish to breed the sows again.

Fake Horse Dealers.

The increased demand for good horses and the improvement in prices for choice horse stock has seemed to inspire the fake dealers in this vicinity with renewed courage, says American Horse Breeder. They are patronizing such of the daily and Sunday papers as will take their advertisements more liberally of late than they have for several years past.

Following is a copy of an advertisement which appeared in a Boston Sunday paper a few weeks since:

FOR SALE.

PRIVATE FAMILY wishes to sell their family road and trotting horse, 7 years old, 15.3 hands high, weighs 1,050 pounds, road 9 miles an hour and trots a mile better than 3 minutes, safe for lady to drive with perfect safety; also rubber-tired Goddard buggy, collar and hames harness, fur robes, street and stable blankets, all for $125; sell horse alone for $85; worth $150 for family use; 3 weeks' trial given; also would like to board my daughter's pony team 4 or 5 months with responsible parties; will pay $20 month. Call at the Cedars estate, 2 Guild street, second big house on left hand side, Roxbury, Mass.; take any Forest Hills car at Subway, 10 minutes' ride. Boston, Mass.

Sud5t'my5

A farmer living some distance from Boston sent us the clipping and intimated that he would like to board the pony at the price named. This called to mind an incident that came under our observation a few years ago. We went down to the wharf to ship a horse to the provinces and there saw an elderly gentleman holding a mare by the halter. We walked around the animal carelessly and the man who held her queried, "How much is she worth?"

"Oh, somewhere from $3.50 to $3,500. Been buying?"

"Well, you see it was this way. My son-in-law, who is a clergyman in the provinces, recently buried his wife. He has a daughter who is fond of ponies. Coming to Boston on the boat he picked up a paper in which was an advertisement of a very valuable mare that would be sold cheap to go into the country, but the party offering the mare had a pony outfit which he wished to send to be kept with the mare. The pony could be used for driving and $20 per month would be paid for his board.

"My son-in-law thought the pony might help divert his daughter's mind from her bereavement, so called at the place mentioned in the advertisement. He did not want to buy this mare, as he has no use for her, but in order to get the pony he did buy her and paid for her. They sent the mare here by a negro sometime ago, but the pony has not come, and the boat is about ready to start. We don't know what to do."

"Well, my friends, your son-in-law has evidently bought a horse. Now I would not worry about that pony team. It is probably safe. The man who sold the horse will look out for the pony. Put your mare on board the boat, and tell your son-in-law to sell the mare as she is for what he can just as soon as possible after getting her to her destination."

It was a very shrewd way of getting a few dollars from an honest, unsuspecting, well-meaning man for an animal that looked fairly well, but was probably worth more to convert into fertilizer than for any other purpose. Men who advertise to pay from $20 upwards per month for having ponies and horses boarded in the country have very strong strings hitched to those animals. They use them as enticing bait for hooks thrown out to catch country suckers. They find plenty of suckers who eagerly swallow the bait and part with their hard-earned dollars. The countrymen generally pay from four to ten times as much as a horse is worth, and invariably fail to secure the pony or horse as boarders, for which the party advertising offers to pay so liberally.

Poultry Briefs.

Ground or cut bone is so useful to poultry raisers that it is something of a marvel that more bone cutters and grinders are not in use. The attempt to use commercial meals for freshly prepared bone can hardly be called a success; for the very obvious reason that the more useful of the products do not keep well in anything but the coldest weather. At some seasons of the year it is impossible to get beef meal, as the dealers will not handle it when it is likely to spoil on their hands. But the man that has a machine for reducing bone to edible size is independent. He can nearly always obtain bones that have on them much meat and these furnish a bone for supplying a little nitrogen and a good deal of lime and phosphorus. Around most homes bones have no use. Yet they can be made a source of valuable food supply.

The question is now being raised as to whether richness can be fed into eggs, and the amateurs are trying to demonstrate that it can be done. One man asserts very positively that his eggs are richer when he feeds very rich foods than when he feds foods not so rich. The trouble with this kind of evidence is that it is not exact. A man reports a thing as being so because he believes it is so, relying on his sense of taste. But, as with the question of feeding fat into milk, so here, appearances are not to be relied on.

Weather reports from Idaho state that on the high mountain ranges the grass is more abundant than usual, but on low ranges it is exceptionally scarce. The condition of stock varies with the grass on the range. On the high ranges the stock is fat and ready for shipment direct to market, but on low ranges its condition is poor. In some southeastern sections the scarcity of water has contributed to the poor condition of stock.

The potash content of ashes varies with the kind of wood, the method of burning, and the care taken of the ashes to protect them from the rain.

SWEPT BY A FLOOD

UNPARALLELED DEVASTATION AND DESTRUCTION CAUSED AT CLEVELAND.

VAST VOLUME OF RAGING WATER

Appalling Overflow Caused by a Rain That Turned Into a Cloudburst—Miraculous That No Lives Were Lost—Whole Families Relieved From Perilous Positions by Life-Saving Crews.

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 2. — With the breaking of dawn yesterday morning the citizens of Cleveland awoke to look upon a scene of unparalleled devastation and destruction caused by a raging flood. While the entire city was more or less affected, the great volume of raging water vented its anger over miles of the eastern portion of the city and caused an amount of damages approximated at $1,000,000.

The appalling overflow was caused by a terrific rain that commenced to fall shortly after 2 o'clock, turned into a perfect cloudburst between the hours of 3 and 5, and then continued with great force until nearly 10 o'clock. The storm, according to the weather officials, was the heaviest that ever swept over Cleveland since the establishment of the government bureau in this city over forty years ago. That no lives were lost is nothing short of a miracle, as many stories of thrilling escapes from the water on several of the principal residence streets of the city are told.

Covered a Vast Area.

The surging waters spread over an area in the West end, nearly eight miles long and a mile and a half wide. Over a large share of this exclusive residence territory the water rushed with terrific force, varying in depth from one to six feet. Culverts, trestles and bridges were torn down and for hours nothing seemed capable of stemming the tide of destruction.

Hundreds of residents who were imprisoned in their beautiful homes, like stranded islanders, were almost panic-stricken, expecting to be called upon to wade out into the swirling waters at almost any minute. Danger signals were flashed about the city as speedily as the disabled telephone would allow, and the work of rescue commenced. Rowboats plied back and forth, assisting whole families from perilous positions, but these proved pitifully inadequate, and it was soon found necessary to go to the extraordinary precaution of calling on the life saving crew from the river, a distance of seven miles. The life boats were quickly loaded on wagons and hurried to the scene of destruction.

With Awful Force.

The torrent surged with awful force for hours in Deering street from Fairmount to the Boulevard, and over a dozen families were penned in like rats in a trap with water five and six feet deep surrounding their homes. At this point the life saving crew worked valiantly, and assisted by squads of firemen and policemen finally succeeded in landing the terror-stricken people in places of safety. The fear was greatly enhanced by the momentary expectation that the great Shaker Heights dam would break loose and belch forth terrible destruction.

Shortly before noon the torrent succeeded in undermining a score of graves in St. Joseph cemetery at the corner of East Madison and Woodland and the bodies were soon being tossed about in the waters. Fully a dozen of the corpses were washed into gutters and had not been recovered late last night. The great flood boiled over the banks of Dean brook all along the Boulevard and caused damage that it will take months to repair. Great jagged holes are torn in the beautiful driveway and the look of ruin stretches in every direction.

CARRIE ARRESTED.

Joint Smasher Gets Into Trouble in New York.

New York, Sept. 2.—Mrs. Carrie Nation, who arrived in this city yesterday was arrested at Twenty-eighth street and Eighth avenue, charged with "raising a crowd and creating a riot." She was released, however, upon the assurance of her escort that she would go directly to her hotel. Before being arrested Mrs. Nation had entered three saloons and two concert halls and in strong language lectured the bartenders and the persons gathered in the different resorts. A crowd followed her from place to place, constantly growing larger and more boisterous, and finally the police interfered and arrested Mrs. Nation.

SHIP FOUND UNDER A STREET.

Ancient Treasure Caravel Excavated by Workmen in Santiago de Cuba.

Santiago, Sept. 2. — Workmen while excavating for a sewer on Christina street, 100 yards from shore of the bay, in made land, discovered the wreck of a schooner ten feet below the surface. Silver coins bearing date of 1648 were found in the wreck. Several interesting relics and old silver plate of the seventeenth century were also found.

EARN THEIR MONEY.

Burglars Break Into Workhouse and Secure $10.

Faribault, Minn., Sept. 2.—Burglars broke into the Hager warehouse and made their way through a trap door into the office. They smashed the safe with a crowbar, got into the cash drawer and secured about $10 in cash.

BLOWN UP BY BOERS.

Train Wrecked and a Lieutenant Colonel Killed.

London, Sept. 2. — A dispatch from Lord Kitchener, dated Pretoria, says: A train was blown up between Waterval and Maman's Kraal by 250 Boers, who at once fired on the train, setting it on fire. Lieut. Col. Vandaleur, of the Irish guards, a most promising officer, was killed. The other casualties have not yet been reported. Garratt has captured Piet Delarey, brother of the assistant commandant general.

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Shaw Says It Is Too Early for Presidential Talk.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 3. — Gov. L. M. Shaw arrived in this city at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon. With regard to the interview with Senator Dolliver, in which it was stated that Gov. Shaw was a candidate for the presidency, he said: "No, I am not a candidate for presidential honors. The Senator Dolliver interview was as unexpected as it was kind. I like business better than politics, and the two will not mix. I shall be slow to break away from my previous intention of keeping out of politics. It is too early to decide and too early to talk about it. The one thing to be considered is the campaign upon which we are entering."

CREAM TRUST.

La Crosse Men Would Consolidate All Wisconsin Creameries.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 3.—Announcement was made here that a trust is being formulated to consolidate all the creameries in Western Wisconsin, headed by La Crosse capital. S. Y. Hyde of this city is said to be at the head of the deal, also L. C. Sander and W. W. Leet of West Salem are interested in the deal. The combination will be capitalized in a large amount. It is proposed to erect a large plant in La Crosse to be supplied with cream by the surrounding country.

BURGLARS ESCAPED.

Exchange Shots With Posse of Citizens.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 3.—Four men who had been camping in the corn field near the village of Mindora, this county, made an attempt to enter Jostad's general store last night, but were scared away without plunder. After being discovered they fled, followed by a number of citizens and several shots were exchanged. Several times before men have made attempts to enter residences in the village. Sheriff Barber has been notified, and has sent a deputy after the men.

CHINAMAN ROBBED.

Holding Farewell Reception to Friends and Loses $800.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 3. — Yung Un, a Chinaman who has been employed for the past two years on a poultry farm near this city drew $800 from the bank preparatory to returning to China. He placed the money in a trunk which he took, to the cabin of some friends. Late in the evening while farewell festivities were in progress eight masked men entered the cabin, abstracted the $800 from the trunk and quietly departed. There is no clew to the robbers.

MILLS WILL CLOSE.

Price of Shingles in Washington State Is Too Low.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 3.—The Washington Red Car Shingle association held a session in this city to discuss a method of solution for the present low price of the product. It was decided to shut down all the mills under the association's control, which includes the largest concerns in the state, until such time as a stronger market would justify a reopening of the works.

GOV. VAN SANT CELEBRATES.

Forty Years Ago He Enlisted for the Civil War.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 3. — Gov. Van Sant came down Saturday to spend Sunday in his home city. Yesterday was the fortieth anniversary of the governor's enlistment in Company A, Ninth Illinois cavalry, with which he served during the Civil war. He celebrated the occasion quietly at his home, over which the Stars and Stripes waved all day.

Changes in Dominican Schools.

Kenosha, Wis., Sept. 3.—Mother General Sister Emily of the Order of Dominican Sisters has ordered Sister Calixta, who has been in charge of the school of the Sisters in this city for the last ten years, to go to Edgewood academy at Madison, to take charge of the department of music in the academy there. Sister Lucia of the academy at Faribault, Minn., will take the place of Sister Calixta in this city.

War on Slot Machines.

Wahpeton, N. D., Sept. 3.—The mayor of this city has ordered all slot machines to be closed, and in accordance with the order the chief of police has made the rounds of the city and closed them all up. A local paper complains of the action, saying that such an action drives all to Breckenridge, on the Minnesota side.

FIFTY LIVES LOST

GREAT NORTHERN WRECK ONE OF THE WORST IN RAILROAD ANNALS.

MANY VICTIMS BURNED TO DEATH

Runaway Section of Freight Train Was Going at a Terrific Rate When the Crash Came—No Time for Escape. Many Were Instantly Killed — Supt. Downs Meets Instant Death—Wreck Takes Fire.

Spokane, Wash., Sept. 2. — Great Northern train No. 3, which left St. Paul Thursday morning and was wrecked Friday night near Nyack, Mont., passed through here yesterday. Passengers claim that there were sixty laborers in one of the cars that was wrecked, every seat being filled and three standing up. Only thirteen escaped from the car. This would make the number of dead fifty. All reports show that the wreck was the worst in the road's history and one of the most terrible in the annals of American railroading.

At least thirty-four lives were lost and ten persons were injured. Three of the injured will surely die and the others were seriously hurt. By strenuous and heroic efforts fifteen of the bodies were taken from the wrecked cars. All the other victims were cremated, including Division Superintendent P. L. Downs and his son, T. Kirk Downs.

Frightful Scenes.

There is a heavy grade near the scene of the wreck. Two engines had taken a train of twenty-eight cars up this grade and drawn off to take water. While doing this all the twenty-eight cars started down the grade and crashed into the rear of a passenger train near the siding at Nyack. Supt. Downs' private car was attached to a passenger, and next to it was a day coach filled with railroad laborers, mostly scandinavians from Duluth. As the runaway train sped by the switch it struck a caboose and day coach on the siding, wrecking them. Fire immediately started from the oil lamps in the caboose. The point where the wild train crashed into the passenger was several hundred feet away, and it was two and a half hours before the flames reached the main wreck. Meanwhile frantic efforts were made to take out

The Dead and Injured.

The wreck was piled high and wedged into almost hopeless confusion, and in spite of superhuman efforts the flames burst through the wrecked cars before the work was completed. J. H. Blair, colored cook in Mr. Downs' car, was taken out alive, but died in a few minutes. It was impossible to get at the bodies of Supt. Downs and son. Mr. Downs' car and that of the laborers was smashed into kindling wood. The occupants of the private car met with instant death. The debris and shingles and lumber of the freight burned like tinder. The train crew was forced back from its work of rescue by the flames.

The injured were given every attention and as soon as possible the train, with its gruesome burden of dead, dying and injured, was taken to Kalispell.

EXPERT SWIMMER DROWNED.

Loses His Life While Giving an Exhibition of Life Saving.

New York, Sept. 3.—George Belcher of Brooklyn, well known as an expert and fancy swimmer, was drowned at Broad Channel, Rockaway Beach yesterday. He was giving an exhibition in deep water of how a swimmer could carry a person on his back, and his daughter Eva, eighteen years of age, was the one he carried. Hundreds of people were intently watching the two when Belcher and his daughter began to flounder in the water. The crowd thought this was part of the exhibition and no one made a move to help until Belcher's wife, who was among the spectators, began to scream that something must be wrong. Both swimmers sank. Finally a man in the crowd rushed into the water and after diving brought the girl's body to the surface. She was revived, but when her father's body was recovered life was extinct.

ENDS LIFE AT AGE OF 122.

Record in Suicide Made by a Colored Woman in Indiana.

Kokomo, Ind., Sept. 3.—Suicide at the age of 122 years is the record of a colored woman of this city. Last spring Mrs. Lucy Washington, who was seventy-six years a slave and part of the time a servant in the family of President Madison, was taken to the county house here. "I hope to die before fly-time," she said. "I have had more than 120 fly times now, and that is more than my share." A month ago the old woman flung herself down a stairway, breaking three ribs and her left arm. The broken bones knit speedily and she adopted another method of self-destruction, that of voluntary starvation. Two weeks ago she quit eating, and since then has not tasted a morsel of food, even refusing to moisten her mouth with water.

CHARGES AGAINST SCHROEDER.

Military Governor Guam Said to Be Severe.

Oakland, Cal., Sept. 3.—W. B. Smith, a brother of Police Judge Mortimer Smith has returned from Guam, where he went to serve as private secretary to Military Governor Schroeder. He was forced to resign after three months' service owing to ill health and the treatment he received from the governor. "Gov. Schroeder's acts as military governor of Guam," said Mr. Smith, "will be investigated by congress. Schroeder is a South Carolinan of German extraction. In his opinion a soldier is a cur whom every officer should abuse. In three months there were seventy summary court-martials of enlisted men and twelve court-martials of a general nature, making a total of eighty-two men out of 150 marines who were confined, starved and overworked in the fierce heat of the tropical island. To escape the persecutions and merciless treatment the men are forced to flee to the hills, without food or shelter, and they return only when starvation drives them from the barren tops.

ROOSEVELT IN THE PULPIT.

Vice President Preaches in Chicago —Very Busy Day.

Chicago, Sept. 3.—Two lay sermons, a luncheon with several Illinois politicians and a visit to Hull house were the events that occupied Vice President Roosevelt in Chicago yesterday. After breakfasting at the Chicago club with Paul Morton of the Santa Fe road, the vice president was driven to the Trinity Dutch Reformed church on Marshfield avenue. This is the church Mr. Roosevelt usually attends when in Chicago, and he is known personally to many members of the congregation. After the sermon the pastor invited him to the platform and the vice president, as has been his custom when visiting this church, made a short informal address, telling the worshippers that true happiness could be found only by trusting in God and being faithful to the country. When he had finished he stepped down from the platform and mingled with the congregation for half an hour, after which he drove to the First Methodist church and addressed the congregation there.

CHUN IS SULKING.

Would Rather Die Than Comply With the Kaiser's Exactions.

Berlin, Sept. 3.—It is now very doubtful, according to a dispatch to the Lokal Anzeiger from Basle, Switzerland, whether Prince Chun will come to Berlin to make formal apology for the murder of Baron von Ketteler. Members of the expiatory mission say:

"Under present conditions we can never go to Berlin. We would rather die than accept them."

It appears that they object particularly to Prince Chun's attendants prostrating themselves before Emperor William, inasmuch as this is a special honor reserved for the emperor of China and would involve a recognition of the kaiser's equality. Prince Chun intended to say to the kaiser: "The Chinese government regrets that Baron von Ketteler was killed," but the German government dictated the following form: "The Chinese government begs pardon for the murder of the German minister, Baron von Ketteler."

HORRIBLE MURDER.

Bodies of Two Men Found Frightfully Butchered.

New York, Sept. 3. — The bodies of David Scott and John Stevens, the one the steward and the other the head waiter of the Siwaney Golf club, were found yesterday in a room which the men occupied in the attic of the clubhouse which is located on the outskirts of Yonkers. They had been murdered with a butcher knife, which was found on the floor of the room, and this had been repeatedly plunged into them as many as a dozen times, that many cuts being located by the physicians who were summoned. The men were negroes and Warner Sims, a colored waiter, is held on suspicion of knowing something of the murder, while Frank Dunnington, another negro who called at the club looking for work, is under detention.

COLOMBIA TROUBLE ABOUT OVER.

Battleship Iowa May Be Ordered Back to San Francisco.

Washington, Sept. 2. — Commander Sargent's report on the conditions in Panama and Colon, along the line of the Panama railroad, which was cabled to the navy department, was so reassuring that the battleship Iowa may be ordered back to San Francisco from Acapulco. Officials of the navy department believe that the presence of the Ranger at Panama will be sufficient to protect American interests and prevent the interruption of traffic on the isthmus, but inasmuch as the state department asked to have the Iowa sent, she will not be ordered back without the consent of that department.

This course was decided upon because so many governments had invited the royal couple to visit. They were unable to do so, and in order not to give offense will confine their trip to British dependencies.

BLAMES SHAFFER

FORMER OFFICER CHARGES THAT THE SITUATION WAS MISREPRESENTED.

STRIKE IS PRACTICALLY LOST

Bay View Man Sent East to Investigate Affairs Reports That the Amalgamated Officials Misrepresented the Attitude of the Steel Magnates—Morgan's Offer Should Have Been Accepted.

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 3. — Charges that the national officers of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Tin and Steel Workers had misrepresented the attitude of the United States Steel corporation toward organized labor in order to get members of the association out on strike were made by Former Vice President J. D. Hickey at the meeting of the Bay View lodge yesterday. In a cool, unpassioned manner Mr. Hickey gave the members of the lodge the result of his recent trip to Pittsburg, where he went for the purpose of investigating the situation in regard to the steel strike and the situation as summed up by Mr. Hickey was that the strike appears to be lost and it may take years to repair the damage to the association which has already been done. Mr. Hickey's report was listened to by all the men with respectful attention. Mr. Hickey made no recommendation to the lodge as to their future action, but it is believed that his speech may cause a change in sentiment not only at Bay View, but in other places in the fourth district. Mr. Hickey went into details for the purpose of showing that Secretary Tighe and president Shaffer had misrepresented the facts when they appealed to the members of the association to strike on the ground that the steel corporation was determined to crush organized labor and ruin the Amalgamated association. He maintained that the proposition offered by Mr. Morgan had been eminently satisfactory and should have been accepted right there by President Shaffer if he had had the interests of his fellow workers at heart. Mr. Hickey reported that 72 per cent of the mills were now working, and in his opinion the strike is practically lost.

SITUATION IS CRITICAL.

Principal Interest Centers in the Duquesne Plant.

Pittsburg, Sept. 3.—The principal interest in strike matters yesterday was centered in the Duquesne plant, where it was expected the strikers would make a decided move toward closing down the entire works. The report from there says the situation is critical. The two boss melters and all the first helpers went to work as usual yesterday morning and all twelve furnaces were charged. Only one second helper went in and all ladle men stayed out. The strikers made a thorough house to house canvass of open hearth men all day. At 4 o'clock, time for helpers and ladle men to go on, pickets were on duty on the streets and turned back three ladle men. The night turn is badly crippled, but men were brought from the Bessemer department to help out and the mill is running full. Sixty of the day turn men are off and the strikers say not a man will report today. If the open hearth is shut down the forty-inch mill must also shut down.

LIFE SAVED BY A CORSET.

Mrs. Bert E. Tilden of Chicago Miraculously Escapes With Slight Wound.

Chicago, Sept. 3. — Surprised at his work of plundering the apartments of Burt E. Tilden of 3020 Lake Park avenue, a negro burglar resolved to fight his way to freedom with a knife, and after a desperate struggle, in which both Mr. and Mrs. Tilden were severely cut, jumped from a second-story window and escaped. Mr. and Mrs. Tilden are now under the care of a physician, and although their wounds are considered dangerous, both will recover. It was while going to the assistance of her husband that Mrs. Tilden was attacked by the desperado, and before she could reach a place of safety the infuriated man had directed a blow at her heart with a knife. The blade, however, struck one of the steels of her corset, but the point entered her breast, causing a wound half an inch deep.

CROWDED TRAIN JUMPS TRACK

Train Load of 150 Passengers Thrown Into the Ditch and the Engine and All the Cars Wrecked—Nearly All the Injured Were Badly Scalded — Two of Them Cannot Recover—Cause Not Known.

Newark, N. Y., Aug. 31.—The accommodation train leaving Sodus Point over the Northern Central Railroad and which arrives in this village at 8 o'clock was derailed last night at the station at Fairville, about ten miles north of here. Engineer William Mosher of Sodus Point was killed, twenty-eight persons were injured, two of whom, Howard Tubs, ticket agent at Lake Shore, and Libbie Ford, will probably die. The train was made up at Sodus Point and consisted of four coaches, a baggage car and engine with William Mosher at the throttle.

The train was running at nearly forty miles an hour. Approaching the station at Fairville there is a curve and gravel pit. For some unknown reason the engine jumped the track while passing the gravel pit. The force of the accident turned the engine completely around, throwing the five cars on their sides. The trainload of 150 passengers was thrown into the ditch and the engine and

All the Cars Were Wrecked.

Help was quickly summoned from the neighboring houses and all the assistance possible was rendered. Word was sent to Sodus and Newark for physicians and a special containing five doctors left Newark at 6:45 o'clock. Upon its arrival the Newark passengers were placed aboard and hastened to Newark. Five were sent to Rochester hospitals. Coroner E. P. Thatcher took charge of Mosher's body and will hold an inquest. The cause of the wreck is not known exactly, but it is thought the rails spread. There have been heavy rains recently and probably in this way the tracks were loosened. The country near the scene of the wreck is thickly populated and it was not long before farmers were driving from all directions. The injured and dying were quickly pulled from the debris and improvised couches were made on the grass. Medical aid was summoned and within a short hour several physicians were on the scene. Nearly all the injured were badly scalded and this was caused by the bursting of the steam pipes running under the cars.

CHUN WAS MISLED

BELIEVED THAT HIS RECEPTION BY THE KAISER WOULD NOT BE HUMILIATING.

EXPECTED A FRIENDLY GREETING

Has Only Awakened to a Full Consciousness of the Serious Expiatory Value of His Errand —Abjectness Asked for by the Kaiser Does Not Fit Their Dignity, Say the Members of the Mission.

Berlin, Aug. 31.—That Prince Chun still remains at Basle and has not made up his mind when he will leave for Berlin to make amends for the murder of Baron von Ketteler, is due to the fact that Germany and the prince himself have only now awakened to a full consciousness of the serious expiatory nature of his errand.

Germany, acting apart from, but in the interests of the offended powers, made alterations in the ceremony of reception, while Prince Chun, misled by the honors he received before reaching Europe, believed that his reception by the kaiser would at least be not humiliating and might possibly be friendly. The situation is not acute, but no date has been fixed for the resumption of the journey of the Chinese mission.

The report is confirmed that the obstacle to Prince Chun's coming to Berlin is Emperor William's insistence that the humble, expiatory character of the prince and mission be emphasized. The members of the mission consider that the abjectness asked for by the emperor does not fit their dignity. It is semi-officially announced that Russia, France and Germany are now in complete agreement regarding Asiatic affairs, including Chinese questions.

Considered a Joke in England.

London, Aug. 31. — Germany's difficulty with Prince Chun is regarded here with ill-concealed amusement. There has been throughout antagonism to Germany's overbearing demeanor in China and to her rudeness to her allies. This was confirmed by the deprecatory speeches made by Count von Waldersee since his return from Pekin. The hope is expressed here that Prince Chun will remain master of the situation. Nobody can compel him to proceed from Basle to Potsdam. In any case, it is seen that the ceremony of prostration performed in Europe would be devoid of serious significance.

DOLLAR FOR DAMNS.

New Jersey Mayor Is Arrested and Fined for Saying "Damn."

Washington, N. J., Aug. 31.—Former Mayor Johnson was fined $1 and costs for having twice uttered the word "damn" on the street. A summons was issued but Mr. Johnson had started on his vacation when the policeman went to serve it, and it was not possible to bring him before the court until yesterday. He pleaded guilty to the charge, and waiving the legality of the action, paid the fine. Justice of the Peace W. G. Creving, who imposed the fine, gave Johnson a severe lecture. Johnson says he proposes to see that the law against swearing is observed to the letter by everybody in Washington hereafter.

GROWS IN HORROR.

Twenty-Eight Victims of the Boiler Explosion at Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Sept. 1. — It is now reasonably certain that at least twenty-eight persons perished as a result of the explosion of one of the boilers of the steamer City of Trenton on the Delaware river above this city on Wednesday afternoon. This conclusion is reached by the police authorities through the fact that seventeen persons who are reported by their relatives or friends to have been on the steamer have not yet been found. These missing persons, with eleven bodies already recovered, makes a total of 28. Ten persons are still in a serious condition as a result of the disaster, of whom four are in a critical condition and may die. The work of searching for the victims has been kept up incessantly since the explosion occurred. Two bodies were recovered from the river yesterday and were taken to the morgue. Up to a late hour they had not been identified. Presuming that these two bodies, along with the two others in the morgue that are charred beyond recognition, are four of the missing persons, it would reduce the missing list to seventeen. The city and federal boiler inspectors are rigidly pursuing their investigation but they cannot accomplish much until the exploded boiler, which was blown clean out of the vessel into the middle of the river, has been recovered.

ROOT MAY RESIGN.

Again Afflicted With a Carbuncle on the Leg.

Washington, Sept. 1.—Secretary Root is again ill from the effects of a carbuncle on his leg and has gone to New York to have an operation performed. Last year when he was ill there were rumors of his resignation, but he recovered and resumed his work, apparently as strong as ever. His physician at that time warned him against the great amount of work he had been doing, and told him that a carbuncle in a man of his age should be regarded as a signboard pointing to less work and less worry. Secretary Root's friends and official associates are considerable worried over this return of the conditions of a year ago, and they would not be surprised if Mr. Root's physician now insisted upon his retirement from the war department, where he has had so much work thrust upon him in the control of the insular possessions.

THE SOUL

What is a soul? I asked. Time answered me:
A splash of spray, dashed from the shore to sea;
A moment in the vastness of All-Time;
Of Melody's full store, one lesser rhyme;
A leaf in the full forest, tremblingly,
That waits the wailing wind to set it free;
A sigh breathed on the tempest of Distress;
A smile from all the joy of Happiness;
An image from Sleep's wilderness of dreams;
The echo on the hills, that only seems
The substance of the cry; a sob, a tear
A hope, a thought, a misery, a fear;
A question and an answer, interwrought;
A life and death, to wedded union brought;
A storm; a silence; and a sullen thing
That looks aloft in terror, wondering;
That which is Ruler, while 'tis but a Slave;
That welcomes death but shudders at a grave;
A part of life that is from life apart;
A little essence that survives the heart;
That comes, unwitting; and unwilling goes;
That trembles, questions, hopes, doubts, fears—and knows!

The City of Silence.

BY HENRY BERNARD WEEKS.

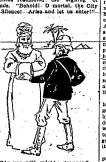
(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Night was upon us and we were met by the fact that we were lost—lost in the desert. My guides, both experts, were filled with terror, and swore that it was an omen of evil. I laughed at their fears, and told them we would have to make the best of it, and that the morning light would probably lead us out of our difficulty; we finally sank to rest. Just how long we slept I know not, but suddenly, as if at some given signal, we sprang to our feet, to be confronted by an immense figure—an ancient man—in complexion, features and costume an Egyptian. At sight of him, my guides, uttering a cry of terror, fled, and I, smitten with a nameless apprehension, would have followed, when the gentle voice of the stranger, bidding me remain and fear naught, stayed my steps.

"You have come to look upon the temples and pyramids of the desert, but, give to me your faith and courage, and I will acquaint you with wonders of which you have not dreamed."

"As you will, mighty stranger," I replied, for his noble mien and countenance had won my trust and reverence. Then blackness swept over me, and on recovering I found myself lying before a city so glorious and uncommon that the remembrance of it will never be obliterated from my mind. It shone in the pale moonlight like semi-transparent pearl, and I could see that it was composed wholly of alabaster; its architecture was beautiful and sublime. Pyramids rose like gigantic guards around the city, and battlemented walls, strengthened by towers, whose heads seemed pouring into Heaven, enclosed a multitude of temples, obelisks and mansions whose whiteness I perceived gleaming from amidst delightful groves of luxuriantly foliaged trees. But a silence more strange and solemn than was ever yet born of night reigned within. I felt it to be that of the grave, and recognized the gruesome fact that my companion who stood beside me was the spirit of one dead.

"Behold!" said he in a tone whose sadness resembled the sighing of winds, "Behold! O mortal, the City of Silence! Arise and let us enter!"



"As you will, mighty stranger."

The gigantic portals of brass rolled back on our approach, emitting as they recoiled on their hinges a melodious sound; and, terrified at what I beheld and heard, I followed my mysterious guide into the city. And there I looked upon things which caused my heart to quail and my knees to smite each other—looked upon monstrous representations of things which have no place in Heaven or earth—forms so unnatural and horrible that it seemed beyond belief that they were the work of mortals. I needed not to be told that they were gods, and I shivered as I gazed upon them. But that which, in addition to these, overwhelmed me with awe and astonishment was my observation that the spacious streets were filled with tremendous figures resembling human beings apparently prosecuting their various professions, pursuits and pleasures; but all transformed, as if by a miracle, into stone.

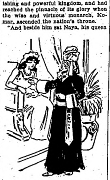
Following my conductor, I now entered a spacious quadrangle wherein the waters of fountains shone and sparkled in the moonlight, but 'twas not the grand beauty of the spot that transfixed my attention but the appearance of numerous ranks of soldiers all turned—in the very act of exercising—to stone.

"Behold!" said my conductor, "yon tower; that was mine own private sanctum, for study, and now seat thyself on this column and thou shalt hear the story of the City of Silence!

"Know that thou," he continued, "art in the very heart of Africa, into which the enterprising sons of all civilized nations have so often but vainly endeavored to penetrate.

"Shor, the original name of the City of Silence, was the capital of a flourishing and powerful kingdom, and had reached the pinnacle of its glory when the wise and virtuous monarch, Komar, ascended the nation's throne.

"And beside him sat Naya, his queen who was beloved by all for her beauty, intelligence and gracious manner.



"O, foolish Naya!"

"Both king and queen labored sedulously in acts of piety and in arts of peace, expending the public money in beautifying the city with noble works and in encouraging sublime sciences.

"But alas! it came to pass that one day to the queen appeared a venerable man, who said to her: 'O foolish Naya, you think you possess all the joys ever known, but there is one that you have not, and that is life eternal.'

"The queen was silent; then, arousing herself as if from a dream, she asked of the stranger: 'And if I desired this life eternal?'

"'Tis in my power to give it to thee,' responded the man, 'but upon certain conditions: First, you must swear to administer to every creature in this city the potion I give you; secondly you must swear to keep closed forever the Gates of Shor; thirdly,' continued the ancient, 'thirdly, your deities (of whom I, Ator, am one,) have decreed that should you weary of your bargain you must not seek the aid of the God called Almighty, with whom we are at war, but the aid of your gods, for they alone can answer your prayers.' And then he vanished.

"But the seed was sown, and the queen began to covet the prize which she had not; and, like poor Eve, she fell a prey to the wiles of a demon, and, falling, dragged the king down with her, for he could not bear to see the idol of his heart yearn for a pleasure within his power to purchase and not grant it; and so, the deed was done—the gates of the city were forever closed, and the inhabitants rejoiced as they partook of the immortal elixir.

"But ere long the evil effects of the dreadful contract were sensibly felt, and the king beheld with inward terror and contrition that in depriving men of the salutary fear of death he had trampled under foot the only effectual barrier against immorality. And he beheld much more, and the sight filled his honest bosom with astonishment and regret. He could not prevent the natural increase of his people, but alas! the limits to which he and they were confined did not become enlarged in proportion to the accumulation of the populace. To these horrors were added a thousand loathsome diseases, and whilst we suffered all the agonies of mortality death relieved us not.

"At last, driven to desperation, some bold spirits attempted to unbar the gates of the city, to find them held fast by some supernatural power, and the dreadful lightnings which flashed from wall and tower when they attempted to scale them proved that the city was guarded and a vigilant watch kept over its inmates by beings not of this world.

"Recognizing this terrible fact, a public council was called, in which it was decided to beseech the gods to grant the promised relief. On the appointed day the wretched people assembled in the streets and squares, imploring the deities to spare them further misery. About noon a darkness, darker than the deepest night, overspread the city, and, suddenly, in the very midst of it, the high walls, towers and ponderous gates appeared alive with blue and livid flames. Upon the summit of these were seated, in solemn conclave, the living forms of our hideous gods. Many fled, and many fainted, while others cried for mercy, and praises and confessions and curses were strangely mingled.

"'And so,' cried a terrific being whom we recognized as Ator, the tempter, 'ye are wearied of life eternal?'

"'No!' exclaimed a man, bolder than the rest; 'not of life eternal, but of eternal suffering.'

"Thereupon the demon-gods raised a ghastly peal of laughter which rolled like a mighty thunder through the city.

"'Relief!' continued the monster, Ator; 'ye shall have it, all but your king, who hath defied us by uttering prayers to the God called Almighty.'

"'Yes,' I answered, 'and I call upon Him again'" (for know you, O mortal, that I am the spirit of Komar). "A frightful yell of terror and despair followed my confession of faith, and the vision vanished from our walls.

"I tried to prevail upon Naya to accept the God called Almighty, but though I entreated her with tears, she remained firm to the faith of her ancestors. Alas! that she did.

"Early next morning, while we were beholding a review of the troops, the terrible darkness again enveloped the land, and a wonderful voice came from Heaven, saying, 'Peace to the soul of Komar, for the Lord God Almighty loveth him.' An awful death-like silence followed, and an intense cold diffused itself throughout our doomed and guilty land. And as my soul sped upward I realized that the stone images of the inhabitants of Shor must burden the world—forever and ever—and that Naya was among them."

IT WAS A RARE BIRD.

Frank Played by Mark Twain Upon His Father and Ornithologists.

Even in his youth Mark Twain was prone to an indulgence in joking. His father was greatly interested at one time in ornithology and constantly on the lookout for rare specimens of the bird creation. He had several friends who were also enthusiasts on the subject of birds. Whenever any one of them discovered a rara avis it was the custom to have a consultation. Mark had been a witness of several of these bird inquests and had noted the delight the old men took in discussing a new-found specimen. One day it occurred to him to provide the Hannibal ornithologists with a real circus in the form of a bird. He killed a crow and also a barnyard rooster. Plucking out the tail feathers of both the crow and the rooster he substituted the rooster's tail feathers for those of the crow, producing a unique effect. When he had the specimen nicely prepared he went to his father and, handing it to him, said:

"Here, father, is a very curious bird I shot. I thought you would be interested in it."

The old gentleman gazed upon the specimen with amazement. That evening the ornithologists of Hannibal were assembled in Mr. Clemens' parlor. The rare specimen was put before them. The opinions expressed were various. One thought the bird was an offshoot of the bird of paradise family; others had equally ridiculous notions as to its ancestry. But there was one who refused to be swerved by the peculiarity of the bird's tail from the judgment that it was of the crow family. "Why, just look here," he said, lifting the bird by its tail feathers. He got no further. There was a quick closing of a door. Mr. Clemens started to leave the room. "Gentlemen," he said, "please excuse me for a few moments. I will see Samuel first and explain later."

TEACHES INDIANS TO WORK.

Redskin Boy Laborers Brave the Jeers and Scorn of Elders.

Indians are not easily persuaded to abandon old customs and the work of the government agents when they try to teach them the white man's way is often arduous and the results discouraging. An experiment of much value was attempted among the Cheyennes in Oklahoma not long ago. An Indian agent wished the schoolboys to milk cows for him and agreed to give to each one who milked for three months a nice calf. Fifteen boys started, but they were so ridiculed by the older men of the tribe that twelve of them gave it up. Three won the calves and the pride of being owners of cattle served as quite an assistance in getting other Indian children to try. After a year twelve boys had won calves and the agent asked them to plow corn for him, agreeing to give them all the corn they could grow. The boys volunteered to grow corn and they actually raised 3,000 bushels, which was sold and afterward converted into thirty-five head of steers. Each steer was branded with an individual brand chosen by the boy owner. This made them prouder than ever and more industrious. Every boy at the agency wanted to go to work at once and as a result of that experiment the Cheyennes are the most industrious farmers of any tribe so recently on the warpath.—Chicago Chronicle.

A Ready Definition.

Prof. Lawson of the university of California, is not only an eminent geologist, but a man of ready wit. The students often attempt to play pranks on him, but usually with little success. Not long ago one of them slipped into the tray of minerals which the professor intended to use in his lecture a piece of ordinary red brick. The word passed around and great fun was anticipated over his attempt to classify the substance. He did not notice it when he commenced his lecture. "This," he said, picking out a small stone, "is a piece of granite," and he proceeded with a learned talk on its characteristics. "This is a piece of agate," he informed them on picking up the next fragment. He got hold of the brick next, looked at it for a few seconds, and said calmly: "This is a piece of impudence."—San Francisco News Letter.

ONLY TO HEAR HER VOICE AGAIN

Only to hear her voice again,
Its sweet tones soft and low!
It charmed me when I heard it then
A little while ago,
And still I feel it o'er me steal—
It will not let me go,

'Tis but the echo of her song,
The shadow of the sound
Of that dear voice for which I long
That follows me around,
Yet find it well in that sweet spell
To know my heart is bound.

Only to hear her voice again,
Beside me fondly near,
In tones of tenderness as when
She held my love as dear.
When joys have left the heart bereft
How precious they appear!

My heart is now a harp held mute
Till her voice touch the strings;
If to her ear response be clear
True harmony it brings,
For, as she will, the harp is still
For, as she will, the harp is still.

Folly's Fire.

BY ELIZABETH CHERRY WALTZ.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

The old grandmother was dead and the baby, Angela, had followed her, as if the loving creature had beckoned to her from heaven. The winter had been long; the debts heavy and work scarce. Aurelia, with feverish eyes and scarlet lips, had sewed and toiled. Lawrence, her husband, was sullen and discouraged. His tasks were irksome and to him there seemed little comfort at home. His trembling hands and shifting glances begged pitifully for a change, a relief of mind and body.

In the spring news came to Aurelia of the death of her grandmother's brother, a wealthy bachelor. He had willed the grandmother some money, and it fell to Aurelia as her heir. When she heard of it she went to Lawrence at the forge and sat down on the bench near him. It was a long time since she had sat there—almost a year.

"That money is coming to me, Lawrence."

"Well?"

"I have been counting on what I'd do. I'm going to give you five hundred dollars for granny's keep."

"I grudged her nothing," he said doggedly.

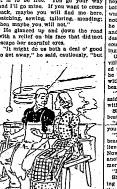
"Oh, I know, but you felt the burden. I'm going to raise it a little. I want you to rent the shop and get away. I want you to be free and to see life 'thout so much hardness. That's what I'm going to do."

"Oh, but it's your money!"

"I'm going away, too—and see how it is to be free. You go your way and I'll go mine. If you want to come back, maybe you will find me here, patching, sewing, tailoring, mending; then maybe you will not."

He glanced up and down the road with a relief on his face that did not escape her scornful eyes.

"It might do us both a deal o' good to get away," he said, cautiously, "but



"That money is comin' to me."

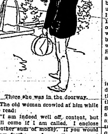
I did not like to propose it. Since you say so, I'll be off as soon as I can find a man to take the shop. We can come back in a year."

"In a year and a day," she said more lightly; "if I am not here, I will send a letter and so must you. Now you are free."

In a year and a day he was at the forge again. He was stalwart and merry. Life had gone well with him. The old postmistress shook her head as she handed him a letter.

"So the times have gone good with you, Lawrence?"

"And gayly," he replied. "I am yet in my youth and can enjoy. The towns are full of sport for a man who loves a light heart and good company. But I promised Aurelia. She is, doubtless, well amused somewhere. Aurelia was handsome and can take care of herself."



There she was in the doorway.

The old woman scowled at him while he read:

"I am indeed well off, content, but will come if I am called. I enclose another sum of money. If you would roam farther go for another year and a day."

Adversity came upon him in the next year, adversity and sickness. His bold and gay friends fell away and he was near to beggary. But he would not return until the time was up lest he not be able to hear from Aurelia and not be bidden home as he now desired. He went to and fro over the county selling nostrums and wondering what had become of Aurelia.

On the day set he came into the village. A great coach and four blocked the street and at his old shop door he met Aurelia in gorgeous array and with the scorn of a princess in her bearing.

"You see I keep my promises," she said, gayly, "and how goes the world with you?"

She was so splendid that his heart beat madly.

"Aurelia! What luck has come to you?"

"The favors of the rich. And I am beautiful, they tell me. I do not believe you knew it in those old days. Now here is money and you shall have another year's freedom. Go and be merry, also."

"But, Aurelia, I——" he stammered.

She mounted into the coach laughing gayly and was soon away. Only the old postmistress was left to cackle at him as he stood like a man in a dream.

"Burned by Folly's Fire—always the wages of the foolish."

The year went by slowly enough. Now Lawrence was not content with the inns and taverns or cottages, but haunted the houses and castles of the rich. He saw wealth and splendor, but he nowhere saw Aurelia—nor any one who was so lovely. The old life came back to him with its industry, its simplicity, its stern duties. He saw it in a new light. How pure, how innocent, how lovely was his child wife! How long she had gone about her duty uncomplainingly, while he rebelled! Now that he had seen the world he knew all that other life meant. But what of Aurelia?

A year and a day! It seemed an eternity. Once more he walked into the hamlet. The cottage looked familiar, its dooryard bright with the gay flowers the traveler admired, the windows open and white-curtained. And—could he believe his eyes?—Aurelia in her old print gown; there she was in the doorway!

He could not speak from excess of emotion. He leaned against the great tree in front of the gate and waited for her to come out to him.

"I see you have discarded your fine array," he said coldly.

She smiled rather sadly.

"I left it all at the castle of my godmother."

"And now?"

"Here is money for your wanderings again."

"I do not want it."

"What will you, then?"

"The old life, if—I can, the old thought, the old work—and the old love."

She smiled brightly.

"So you have roamed enough. Well, it is a good thing to come home after being long away."

"And you—where have you been and how long since your return? What of the coach and the splendid gowns?"

"They were my godmother's loan for a short time."

He looked at her perplexed.

"A short time? How long were you away?"

"Foolish one! Not at all. Why should I go? I have spun and brewed and baked. I have seen the world from my window and door here. Women are not so varying, Lawrence. I did not care to follow fool's fire—not I, sir."

"And now?"

"Your place is ready. I fancy you will rove no more—at least, not soon. Is it not so?"

RECORD OF EARLY BOOKS.

First English Book Was Not Printed in England.

The first book printed in the English language was not printed in England. William Caxton, the English mercer, carried on business in Bruges. In 1469, he began to translate into English the "Recueil des Histoires de Troye," and to supply the great demand for copies of the book he set himself to learn the art of printing. The "Recueil," the first printed English book, probably appeared in 1474, and may have been printed either at Cologne or in Bruges. In 1475 Caxton printed another work translated from the French. Its title was "The Game and the Playe of the Chesse." This was the second printed English book. Caxton left Bruges in 1476 and set up his press in Westminster, England. Such is one account but other authorities hold that the book on chess was printed at Westminster and was the first book printed in England. The Encyclopaedia Britannica says: "At what date Caxton brought his press to England and set it up at Westminster is quite uncertain. It was probably between 1471 and 1477; 1474 is the date of the Game and Playe of Chesse; but the tradition that this work was printed in England may not be correct." However that may be, it was the second book printed in the English language.—Montreal Herald and Star.

A Remarkable Story.

An article in La Science pour Tout, informs us that a Chilian botanist has discovered a plant that coughs when the slightest particle of dust alights on the surface of one of its leaves. Strange as this may seem, it is not at all, for upon sufficient provocation it appears the leaf of this same plant turns red and spasmodic tremors pass over it in succession, while it gives out a sound precisely like sneezing. The so-called respiration of plants is well known to botanists, but when it comes to coughing, blushing and sneezing it would seem that a special examination should be made both of the plant and the botanist reporting the phenomena.

From Standing Grain to Loaf.

A Great Bend (Kan.) correspondent of the Kansas City Journal writes: "Standing wheat, in the field at noon today, harvested, threshed, ground into flour, baked into bread in large quantities by a bakery and sold around town for 6 o'clock supper was a record-breaker in this county this afternoon, in quickness of conversion of standing wheat in the field to the bread plate. A combined harvester and thresher is doing work in California style near town. Several bushels were taken to the Moses Mill and Elevator company, ground into flour, thence the flour went to the Moore bakery, was made into bread, baked and offered for sale in quantities.

Tanning Leather.

The slowness of the process of tanning is largely due to the difficulty with which the tannin penetrates into the hide. As the penetration progresses the outer part of the hide becomes converted into leather and is thereby made impervious, consequently the rate of penetration decreases. Months of soaking in the tanpit are therefore necessary for thick hides.

Loyalty to His Employer.

That young man who consented to have a portion of his blood let out to save his employer set a remarkable example of heroism. The incident shows what power there is in good blood. There is only one natural way to get good blood, and that is from the stomach. If the stomach needs assistance, try Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This wonderful medicine cures dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, and makes rich red blood.

There Is Something in Luck.

While most successful men are inclined to credit their achievements wholly to industry, frugality and determination, leaving out chance or luck altogether, there can be no doubt that some men are more favorable in opportunities than others. At any rate, there is some consolation in this view of the earnest man who has not made what the world calls a success. It should lead him to take life more contentedly and be satisfied to accept the issue, after having done his best.—Indianapolis Journal.

"Yes, my son."

"And it's puffickly right to follow the Golden Rule, isn't it, papa?"

"Yes, indeed."

Tommyrose, went to the cupboard, and returned with a knife and a large apple pie. The latter he placed before his astonished sire with great solemnity.

"Eat it, papa," he said.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A Happy Boy.

Oldenburg, Ill., Sept. 2d:—The doctors all failed in the case of little thirteen-year-old Willie Kell, who suffered with acute Rheumatism.

For over three months the poor little fellow suffered excruciating torture. His father, who had done everything he could think of, saw a new Rheumatism Remedy advertised—Dodd's Kidney Pills. He bought some, and soon his little son showed signs of improvement. Three boxes cured him completely, and he has not a symptom of Rheumatism left.

This miraculous cure of a case which had been given up by the physicians has electrified Madison County, and Dodd's Kidney Pills are a much-talked-of medicine.

An Alibi.

"Has my Willie been swimming here to-day?" asked Willie's angry father.

"No, sir," replied the biggest boy in the water.

"Are you sure?"

"Sure. Why, it was as much as we could do to keep him from drownin', but we got him out, all right. He's restin' over there in the bushes now."—Philadelphia Press.

Tact in the Court Room.

The court room was hotter than the Soudan in a sandstorm. The judge was a wreck, the jury had wilted.

"Your honor and gentlemen," said the attorney for the defense, "I will indulge in no heated argument, but proceed at once to marshal the cold facts."

And he won his case.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

GOOD LUCK FOR THE GIRLS.

When the subject of bulldogs was reached, the "Major" took a hand, or rather, he monopolized the conversation. The "Major" was Sam E. Little of near Newburg, Ind., and he gained his sobriquet as an Indian fighter and frontiersman.

"You can talk about your fighters and your fierce beasts, but I had a couple of genuine English bulls that beat them all. Why, when I came to figure it down those dogs cost me a fortune in incidentals alone. They were so mean that they wouldn't let anybody come in the yard. Every time I wanted a pound of coffee, I'd have to go after it or hire somebody on the place to make the trip. Those dogs wouldn't allow the grocer to come in the neighborhood. And as for the baker and butcher, they avoided my place as if it was a pesthouse.

"But that wasn't a circumstance to what they did to the young fellows who came to see my girls, or, rather, the ones that wanted to come. I had five girls. They were all pretty and attractive, but somehow there weren't any fellows hanging around my place. I believe that one fellow did come once, but one of the dogs got him as he went over the fence on the return trip and he did the mantel act three times a day for two weeks. But to see those girls at a party or a dance you would think from the way the fellows took on that there wasn't another girl in the state.

"One day the two dogs got in a fight. Both of them had these kind of teeth that project over their jaws, and when once they got a hold it took thunder to part them. Well they both got a hold that day, and as the sky was clear the hired hand took an ax. We buried them together. And don't you know that the next night there were half a dozen buggies hitched in front of the gate. And it kept on that way until about six months ago, when the last of the quintet was married. And I'm thanking Providence that it didn't thunder."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

JUSTICE IN DISREPUTE.

From the Philadelphia North American: A judge who had not been on the bench long enough to have worn Holes in it was attempting to do the Learned Decision stunt, when a Bad Break provoked a Laugh from an impetuous young Lawyer.

"Young man," roared His Honor, ruffling his Judicial Ermine, "you are fined $1 for contempt of Court."

As the Poor Unfortunate stepped up to The Captain's Office, an Old Farmer was observed to leave the Back Seat and hobble into the Foreground waving a ten Dollar bill in his hand.

"What brings you to the bar of this Honorable Court, interrupting the Course of Justice?" cried out His Honor with great severity, fixing his Supreme Court gaze upon the White-Haired Figure before him.

"Only trying to Settle up," was the old fellow's Cheerful Reply; "same as that young feller yander. Reckon he ain't got any more Contempt for this 'ere Court than I hev."

SUSPICIOUS CHARACTER.

"Let me tell the story," pleaded the detective. "The truth is bad enough without having it exaggerated. It happened a good many years ago, and I supposed it had been forgotten. I have certainly bought enough cigars to bury it ten feet deep. Soon after I was taken off a beat and put in plain clothes a rather bold burglary was committed. The dragnet was thrown out and orders were issued to the police to arrest every suspicious character in sight. I was young and ambitious, and it looked like my chance. I struck a clew at once and was hot on the scent when I suddenly found myself in the hands of a green cop who had joined the force only the week before.

"'Aisy, now,' said he, tightening his clutch on my collar; 'yez come along with me.'

"In vain did I tell him who I was and show my star to prove it. All he said was:

"'I'm too old a bur-rd to be caught with thot kind of chaff. Me orders are to arrist all suspicious char-acters. Yez have crime stamped on your face. Come along, now, or Oi'll be after clubbin' yez.'

COMING TO AN UNDERSTANDING.

Mr. Frank R. Stockton, the novelist, was at a southern resort recently and there met a Baptist clergyman. In the course of their conversation the minister called Mr. Stockton "doctor," at which the novelist was much annoyed.

"I'm not a doctor," said Mr. Stockton.

"No?" questioningly. "But doctor, I'm told the women of the smart set, or so-called 400, in New York drink a great deal."

"I don't know," said Mr. Stockton. "But I do know that I'm not a doctor."

"No?" again, questioningly. "But—a—doctor, I'm informed that drunkenness is on the increase among those ladies."

"I don't care," replied the novelist, "so long as you don't call me 'doctor,' because I'm not one."

"No?" queried the clergyman for a third time. "But I have been told that when they can't get liquor they drink their cologne, doctor."

"Oh," sighed Stockton, "you refer, of course, to the Colonial Dames."—New York Sun.

BEHAVING LIKE A LADY.

A little girl from an East End slum was invited with others to a charity West End of London. In the course of the meal the little maiden startled her hostess by propounding the query:

"Does your husband drink?"

"Why, no," replied the astonished lady of the house.

After a moment's pause the miniature querist proceeded with the equally bewildering questions:

"How much coal do you burn? What is your husband's salary? Has he any bad habits?"

By this time the presiding genius of the table felt called upon to ask her humble guest what made her ask such strange questions.

"Well," was the innocent reply, "mother told me to behave like a lady, and when ladies call at our house they always ask mother those questions."—Spare Moments.

FORGOT HER PART.

From the London Spare Moments: A well-known countess was announced to speak at a costers' gathering in the East End recently, so the little daughter of one of the costers—a flower seller—was deputed to present the countess on her arrival with a beautiful bouquet.

The evening arrived, with an enthusiastic audience in the hall, and presently the countess was announced.

The little girl, who had been coached as to what to say, walked along the platform to where her ladyship stood, and in her confusion convulsed everyone with laughter by shouting out:

"'Ere yer are, mum. Only a penny a bunch—market bunch for a penny!"

The countess smiled, accepted the flowers, and the child got the penny.

DEEP SEA REASONING.

MISS BESSIE KELLOG.

Miss Bessie Kellog, President of the Young Woman's Club, of Valley City, North Dakota, writes the following from First street, South, Valley City, North Dakota:

"Ever since I matured I suffered with severe monthly pains. The doctor did not seem to understand what the trouble was and the medicine he prescribed from time to time did not help me. He finally suggested that I have an operation. One of my friends who had been cured of a similar affliction through the use of Peruna, advised me to give it a trial first, and so I used it for three weeks faithfully. My pains dimished very soon and within two months I had none at all.

"This is six months ago, and during that time I have not had an ache nor pain. I give highest praise to Peruna. Every woman ought to use it, and I feel sure that it would bring perfect health."—BESSIE KELLOG.

The experience of Miss Bessie Kellog, of North Dakota, ought to be read by every girl in the land. It is a critical period in a woman's life when she ceases to be a girl and becomes a woman. Very few pass through this period without some trouble. The doctor is called and he generally advises an operation. Perhaps he will subject the patient to a long series of experiments with nervines and tonics. The reason he does not often make a cure is because he does not recognize the trouble.

In a large majority of the cases catarrh of the female organs is the cause. Peruna relieves these cases promptly because it cures the catarrh. Peruna is not a palliative or a sedative or a nervine or a stimulant. It is a specific for catarrh and cures catarrh wherever it may lurk in the system.

This girl was lucky enough to find Peruna at last. As she says, the doctors did not seem to understand what the trouble was and the medicine he prescribed from time to time did not help her. Peruna hit the mark at once and she is now recommending this wonderful remedy to all the other girls in the United States.

Thousands of the girls who look at her beautiful face and read her sincere testimonial, will be led to try Peruna in their times of trouble and critical periods. Peruna will not fail them. Every one of them will be glad and it is to be hoped that their enthusiasm will lead them to do as this girl did—proclaim the fact to the world so that others may read it and do likewise.

Mrs. Christopher Fliehmann, Amsterdam, N. Y., writes:

"I have been sick with catarrh of the stomach and pelvic organs for about five years, and had many a doctor, but none could help me. Some said I would never get over it. One day when I read you almanac I saw those who had been cured by Peruna; then I thought I would try it. I did, and found relief with the first bottle I took, and after two more bottles I was as well and strong as I was before."—Mrs. Christopher Fliehmann.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Congressman Eddy has ideas of his own in regard to the national park question, and in a recent interview regarding the opening of the Leech Lake reservation he said: "In regard to the park provision, any portion of the public domain that contains natural wonders and is unfit for agricultural purposes and contains timber of comparatively little value, I am willing should be set aside as a national park; but I further believe that God Almighty could not devise betteruse for 160 acres of agricultural land than to make a home of it, and of a pine tree than to have it cut down, sawed into lumber and built into a house. I can assure you, if I can help it as long as I remain in congress, no more agricultural lands or lumber lands that can be utilized for the purposes above mentioned will be set aside as parks to form recreation places for that class of our citizens who have money enough to go where they please and enjoy themselves at the expense of the home builders of America and I am conceited enough to believe that I possess sufficient influence to stop any legislation of the kind."

"Bumper" wheat crops cannot long prevail if farmers disregard the simple rules for the scientific cultivation of farms in the great wheat areas in Minnesota and the Dakotas. This is a statement made by Professor Harry Snyder, chemist of the experiment station at the state agricultural college at St. Anthony Park, in a pamphlet on "The Influence of Wheat Farming on Soil Fertility," just issued. Professor Snyder has made an exhaustive study of the effect of continuous wheat culture and the rotation of crops upon the composition of the soil, extending over a period of several years. His conclusions are that wheat is not an exhaustive crop when it is grown in rotation, but when it is grown continuously the fertility of the soil is impaired. It is not the crop itself that reduces the fertility, he finds, but the lack of systematic methods of farming. By the rotation of crops, the use of farm manures and the cultivation of clover, the heavy losses of the rich chemical properties of the soil, so essential to the healthy growth of crops is checked, and larger yields and a better quality of wheat secured.

About Wheat.

As careful an analysis as can well be made of the conflicting reports about the wheat yield forces the conclusion that this will be a good season to go rather slow in marketing that grain. There is a great difference in the character of reports from professional "estimators" and farmers, and as threshing returns come in, they seem to indicate that the farmers have the best of it as guessers. But if the most sanguine estimates prove true, and this country has the largest crop of its history, there is still sound reason for beleiving that the world's crop is not above normal, not more than last year, even when the price averaged not far from 10 cents a bushel higher than it is now. The European crop is short and the latest reports indicate that it will be smaller than was predicted a few weeks earlier.

In portions of Russia failures were so disastrous that famine resulted and in all Europe, and Italy there are comparatively light yield of both wheat and rye. In addition to this, the short crop of corn in the United States, estimated not less than 500,000,000 bushels short must have an important influence on the price of wheat, an influence that will not be felt, however, until later. From the view point of the writer of this no loss will come from marketing wheat slowly while possible even probable gain may resulted.—Farm, Stock and Home.

HE'S WITH US.

Congressmen Morris In Favor of Opening the Reservation.

Congressman Page Morris expressed himself as very much in favor of seeing the land in the Red Lake Indian reservation adjoining this city thrown open to settlement while here the first of the week, and said that he would do all in his power to aid us when congress meets. The impression in Washington seems to be that this land is more valuable for the timber it contains than for agricultural purposes, and when Commissioner Jones visits this section the latter part of this month; Mr. Morris thinks that the citizens here should make him thoroughly acquainted with the land. The department of the interior is in favor of having agricultural land opened to settlement

For the first time in its history Minnesota will this year head the list as the largest potato producing state in the union. Heretofore it has stood no better than fifth, being outstripped by New York Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa. The bulk of the Minnesota crop is raised along the Eastern Minnesota and the St. Paul & Duluth division of the Northern Pacific, and reports sent out by farmers who make a specialty of raising potatoes in these districts, say that the crop this year will easily surpass that of any other year both in quality and quantity.

PERTINENT POINTERS.

John Patterson—There will not be muck live stock shipped out of this section this fall. The farmers all have a large amount of hay and are not in need of cash—in fact most of them are in the market to buy a few "feeders."

Louis Hanson—All the wheat received thus far at the O. K. mill has been of an excellent quality, and none of it has graded lower than No. 1 Northern.

A. C. Baker—It is almost impossible to hire brick masons. We have telegraphed for men to Minneapolis and St. Paul, but have not yet received a full crew.

Bert Walker—The settlers up around Germantown want it distinctly understood that they will not allow any dudes from Thief River Falls to hunt up there in the future. Life is too valuable.

O. J. Rollis—The people of Rollis want a blacksmith. A good man can make money up there.

A Farmer—Good roads mean big loads and big loads mean just so much more profit foa the farmers, and also for for the business men of Thief River Falls.

GERMANTOWN.

The farmers in this vicinity have about finished stacking grain and are doing fall plowing.

SANS SHOES

Hunting Under Difficult Circumstances.

The report comes from Germantown that Isedor Lewin is exterminating the prairie chickens in that section, although he is badly handicaped, being obliged to go about barefooted. He stopped at a farmer's the other evening, and his feet being wet he took off his shoes and placed them in a stove oven to dry. While telling the family of his wonderful experiences of the day he forgot about his shoes, and when they were taken out it was found that they were dry—very dry—in fact so dry that he has not worn them since. Isedor is due to arrive here this evening and although he may come foot-sore and without shoes, we predict that he will have the biggest bag of game brought to this city this year.

IN LITIGATION

Cause Celebre May Again Bob Up in Courts.

The heirs of old Chief Moose Dung, by their attorney, Halver Steenerson, of Crookston, have commenced a suit against those who purchased property of the present Chief Moose Dung for five-sixths of the section just north of the city. The complaint was filed in the office of the clerk of court for Red Lake county last Friday, although none of the parties to the suit have been served with notice.

The parties interested do not think the case will ever come to trial, and that the suit was commenced for the purpose of putting a cloud upon the title and prevent the sale of the property. They argue that the decision of the United States Supreme court shows conclusively that the present Chief Moose Dung was the sole owner of the property and that he had a right to dispose of it.

The British war office is said to be considering the training of dogs to carry water and provisions to sick and wounded in time of war.

Atmospheric sharps say that even at the equator the average temperature of the sea at the depth of a mile is but four degrees above freezing point.

Dispatches from Siberia say that the crops, owing to the two months' drouth, are almost a total loss. Measures have been taken to avert famine.

In a London case just tried a messenger boy was sent to the office of a leading paper with an order for a large advertisement. He did not arrive with it till the next day, when it was too late. The paper sued the company for lack of quickness in their agent and got nominal damages.

The majority of ladies would be surprised if they were informed that a bottle of lavender water contains but about a thimbleful of pure oil, for a larger proportion would not only render the water too strong for use, but would burn holes through the handkerchief wherever the scent touched it.

A novel way of administering justice and bestowing impartial punishment on juvenile offenders was shown in a Chicago court the other day. Two boys were on trial for fighting, accompanied by their respective mothers. The justice simply had the mothers swap sons and then administer spankings. The punishment the urchins received was vigorous.

The population of Norway is about 2,200,000 souls. It was 2,110,000 in 1891, with a probability that 15,000 seamen and fishermen were absent from home on the day that the census was taken, and that there has been a net increase of 75,000 since. This is an average of 16.80 inhabitants to the square mile, showing Norway to be the most thinly settled of all European countries.

Fiber pipes and conduits, made from wood pulp and treated with a preservative, are now being put in use. After the usual grinding the pulp is washed, screened, passed through a beating engine, then screened again. These operations completed, a thin sheet of the pulp is wound on a core until the desired thickness is secured. After drying the tube is aerated with a preservative. Its ends are then finished in a lathe to any desired form.

The United States has not yet ceased to pay stamp duties to Great Britain, and that "without representation" in her parliament. Revenue stamps to the value of twenty-five thousand dollars were required to make legal the ten-million-dollar deed of gift by which Mr. Carnegie endows the Scottish universities. So large a stamp duty was never before paid into the British treasury. Yet the Patrick Henrys and Sam Adamses of today merely smile.

"If there is an idle man in the Northwest, he is so from choice," said the superintendent of one of the great railroads, at the beginning of the harvest season. He needed two hundred men for construction work, and had sought them all the way from Chicago to Vancouver. About that time press dispatches told how tramps who customarily wander over the west were making a frantic exodus eastward. This fact proves that the demand for labor was urgent. Perhaps it proves also that the west has begun to act upon St. Paul's wise command that if any will not work, neither shall he eat.

The chief of the Good-Roads train, which made a spring tour through the South, declares that people will flock to see the actual construction and operation of a model road who would never go to a convention to hear the subject discussed by the highest authorities. Acting on this principle that a dozen of observation is worth a gross of hearsay, a firm of Scotch publishers has sent twelve representative British workmen to the Buffalo Exposition to inspect American machinery and industrial methods, and to form in themselves a nucleus of future progression in their various trades.

One-fourth of the sea-carrying power is in the hands of thirty large companies of various nationalities. Only one of these is American, and it controls only 81,000 tons out of the total of 8,616,000 tons controlled by the thirty companies. In the last decade England has built 4,638 steel steamers, with a capacity of 9,793,000 tons. In the same time America has built only 465 steel steamers, with a capacity of 743,000 tons, and 198 of these steamers, representing 450,000 tons, were for the inland commerce of the great lakes.

THE PRESIDENT AT BUFFALO.

Warmly Greeted by an Enthusiastic Throng.

Berlin, Sept. 6.—Emperor William's in whose honor Thursday, Sept. 5, has been set aside on the Pan-American exposition calendar, entered Buffalo last night through the portals of the Rainbow City. A few of the party left the presidential train at Central station, but the president and Mrs. McKinley, the Misses Barber and Miss Sarah Duncan, the president's nieces, and the members of the reception committee were taken at once to the northern gate of the exposition grounds. The screeching of whistles and the booming of guns greeted the president's train as it passed along the lake and river fronts, over the Belt line tracks to the grounds. As the train flashed past the front a salute of twenty-one guns boomed forth from Fort Porter. An immense crowd had assembled at the railroad terminus at the exposition grounds to await the arrival of the president. From the electric tower down the west side of the court of fountains as far as the triumphal bridge people were packed so closely together that there was scarcely room to move. When the president emerged from the train he was enthusiastically cheered by the waiting throng. The presidential party was driven to the residence of Mr. Milburn, whose guest they will be during the stay in the city.

RENEGADE IS CAPTURED.

American Deserter Who Has Been Fighting Against His Countrymen.

Manila, Sept. 6.—Lieut. Hazzard of the Third cavalry has brought in Arthur Howard, the American deserter who was recently captured by the lieutenant while in command of some Macabebe scouts in the island of Mindoro. He was placed in jail and will shortly be court-martialed. Howard denies that he ever was an American soldier. He claims he was born in Spain, that his father was English and his mother Spanish; but that he espoused the cause of the Filipinos. In 1899 after peace was declared he says he went to Hongkong and returned in 1898 as Aguinaldo's chief of artillery. While in that position he says he made friends with many Americans before the insurrection, including Gen. Greene. He cast his lot with Aguinaldo at the time of the rupture with the Americans, and he says that he brought in sixteen American prisoners under a flag of truce at Angeles in September, 1899. Howard denies that he commanded the force at San Mateo which killed Gen. Lawton. He speaks like an educated Englishman. Lieut. Hazzard says he, himself, saw Howard at Angeles in 1899. Two former California volunteers yesterday identified Howard as a deserter from their regiment, named Wiley, of Company A, who deserted in 1899.

READY FOR CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

Several Philippine Provinces That Have Been Behaving Well.

Washington, Sept. 6.—The following provinces in the Philippines have been designated by the Philippine commission as in such a satisfactory state of pacification and sufficiently well advanced in all the details of civil administration as to warrant their passing under the jurisdiction of a civil governor:

By the direction of Gen. Chaffee the senior military officers in these provinces are directed to render all needful assistance of the civil authorities when disturbances arise beyond the control of the local municipal police.

FIGHT IN JAIL.

Convicted Goebel Murder Conspirators in a Row.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 6.—James Howard and ex-Secretary of State Caleb Powers, convicted as Goebel murder conspirators, quarreled in jail here yesterday afternoon. Howard threw a heavy inkstand at Powers, striking him in the head. Powers was knocked down and bled profusely. Doctors Demoree and Crutcher dressed the wound. They remained with Powers over an hour. The only witnesses were ex-Adjt. Gen. J. K. Dixon, who was in conference with the two men. Powers was too ill to be seen. Howard, on the advice of his attorneys, refused to talk. Howard's new trial will begin here next Monday, and his attorneys have been in conference here.

May Settle Down in a Country House and Become a British Citizen.

New York, Sept. 6.—A London dispatch says: In the current issue of the Week End, a contributor gives an account of a conversation he recently had with Richard Croker. "Mr. Croker tells me," says the correspondent, "that he is passionately fond of rural England and that some day he hopes to settle down at a little country house in one of our most picturesque counties. I hope I am betraying no confidence when I remark that he is trying to prove himself fit for citizenship with us by an applied study of our manners and customs."

BURNED BY A MOB

NEGRO ACCUSED OF AN AWFUL CRIME IS SUMMARILY DEALT WITH.

HIS VICTIM IS LIKELY TO DIE

The Brute Attempted to Commit an Assault on a Young Schoolgirl Who Was Afterwards Found Unconscious and Terribly Bruised—Posse Captures the Negro, Shoots Him and Burns His Body.

Troy, Ala., Sept. 5.—Bill Fourney, alias Bill Hilliard, a negro charged with assaulting Miss Wilson at Chestnut Grove, was shot and his body burned by a mob near the scene of his crime yesterday.

Miss Wilson, who is 16 or 17 years of age, and the daughter of Dr. Carroll, about 12 years of age, were on their way to school at Chestnut Grove, just across the line in Coffey county, when they were overtaken by the negro. He seized Miss Wilson and the little girl ran off. As she did the negro fired a pistol at her, but missed. The little girl raised the alarm and soon a posse was in pursuit of the negro. When they reached the scene of the crime they found Miss Wilson unconscious and terribly bruised on the face and about the head.

The posse tracked the negro to his home, where he was found in bed, saying he was sick. The little girl identified him, and he was then taken out and shot and his body burned. Miss Wilson is in a precarious condition. The sheriff with three deputies left last night for the scene of the crime.

ANNEXATION OR NO SETTLEMENT.

Cuban Planters Anxious for Closer Relations With United States.

Washington, Sept. 6.—Gov. Gen. Wood, who has left here on his way back to Havana, has so presented the situation in the island as to convince war department officials that there will be no settlement of the Cuban question until Cuba is annexed to the United States, either as a territory or as Porto Rico is annexed. Cuban planters see no hope for prosperity without these closer relations, for it is said that they realize that the government to follow that of Gen. Wood will not be as economical as the present one. Gen. Wood says that Cuba will not be completely evacuated by the military forces of the United States until next April at the earliest.

GREATEST BET IN HISTORY.

$400,000 Put Up on the Race for America's Cup.

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 5.—The great international yacht bet of $400,000 between an English syndicate, represented by Walter J. Kingsley of England and a group of patriotic Pittsburgers represented by William R. Mustin, was finally arranged yesterday afternoon. The entire sum was deposited in the hands of the stakeholders, Mr. Kingsley turning over $150,000 in British bank notes and Mr. Mustin giving a certified check for $250,000. What is said to be the greatest bet in history was thus safely consummated. The wager is simply $150,000 to $250,000 that Shamrock lifts the cup. There are no conditions as to accidents.

CHUN WILL KNEEL.

Instead of Kotowing, the Chinese Will Fall Upon Their Knees.

Cologne, Sept. 5.—The Berlin correspondent of the Gazette sends a dispatch, which was evidently inspired, in regard to the change in the arrangements for the reception of Prince Chun and the members of the expiatory mission. The correspondent says that after it had been decided to dispense with the kotowing another form of ceremonial was suggested, such as kneeling or making a genuflection, which, being a European custom, is considered of less importance by the Chinese.

PATRIOTIC OCCASION.

Unveiling of Memorial Marking Spot Where Old Glory Was Unveiled.

Wilmington, Del., Sept. 5.—A granite memorial marking the spot near Cooch's bridge, where the American flag was first unfurled, was unveiled yesterday with interesting ceremonies. The exercises included addresses by prominent representatives of the Sons of the American Revolution and other patriotic societies.

WAR CLOUD VANISHES.

Trouble in South America Soon to Be Settled.

Washington, Sept. 5.—Telegraphic advices have been received at the state department stating that steps have been taken to adjust the differences between Colombia and Venezuela in a practical fashion. Communications of an explanatory character are passing between Bogota and Caracas. All danger of war, it is stated, has passed.

Big Strike Threatened.

Chicago, Sept. 5.—A strike of 17,000 skilled workingmen in the packing trades throughout the country is threatened. The last day for the packing firms to give an answer to the recent demands of the butchers and meat dressers for an increase of 10 per cent in the present scale of wages expired last night. In the labor circles affected there is consequently much uneasiness. The ignoring of their demand was regarded by the butchers of the local packing firms as forecasting the possibility of a struggle if the demand is to be urged.

Indians Refuse to Be Pacified.

Phoenix, Ariz., Sept. 5.—The war dance of the Apache Indians at San Carlos reservation threatens to take an alarming turn. The Indians refuse to be pacified and swear they will make things warm for the whites.

WANTS ANOTHER DIVORCE.

Mrs. Snell Coffin Walker, Who Left Mr. Coffin, Now Wants to Quit Mr. Walker.

Kenosha, Wis., Sept. 5.—Mrs. Grace Snell-Coffin-Walker, one of the daughters of the late Amos Snell of Chicago, whose murder at the hands of Willie Tascott has long been a stock mystery for the police of the world, seems to have a liking for Kenosha county divorces. Yesterday she withdrew from the quiet seclusion of her beautiful summer home on the banks of Crowley's lake in the town of Salem and came to Kenosha to file a divorce suit against her husband, James C. Walker of Waukesha. Mrs. Walker alleges cruel and inhuman treatment. The filing of the papers in this county recalls the other divorce, which was granted to Mrs. Walker here some two years ago, when she gained her freedom from Frank N. Coffin of Milwaukee on the grounds of drunkenness and non-support.

FOUND BY SECTION MEN.

Unknown Old Lady Found Unconscious Beside Track.

Royalton, Minn., Sept. 6.—An unknown woman was found by the side of the railroad track two miles west of Rice yesterday morning by the section crew. She was well dressed and about sixty years of age, and appeared to be asleep, but it was found that she was unconscious. She was taken to town and examined by Dr. Rothbun, who found several bad bruises about her head and body. Her right arm was broken in two places. The left arm was also broken and her lower limbs badly bruised. There was nothing about her person by which she could be identified. She cannot live. It is believed that she fell from one of the night trains.

DREDGE BLOWS UP.

One Killed and Four Others Seriously Injured.

Dillon, Mont., Sept. 6.—The Pacific dredge boat on Moore creek, near Salmon City, Idaho, was blown up by the bursting of a boiler. Supt. Dunlap was killed instantly and four others were seriously injured. The boat is owned by W. F. Joliette of Chicago.

BIG FIRE RAGING.

Loss Will Reach Into Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars.

West Superior, Wis., Sept. 6.—At 2 o'clock this morning a fire is raging on the Lehigh coal and coke dock. It now looks like the destruction of the entire dock and a large quantity of coal. The loss will reach into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Jokers Almost Killed a Man.

Cedar Falls, Iowa, Sept. 6.—Several days ago some practical jokers "doctored" some buttermilk with croton oil and invited Louis Larson to the barber shop of James Markussen, where he drunk three glasses. It was done as a joke, as he had been tapping the can at the shop. Too much of the drug was used, however, and Larson is confined to his bed with badly swollen hands, feet and face. His blood is affected, and the physician says a few more drops would have ended his life.

Wreck in a Tunnel.

Missoula, Mont., Sept. 6.—Throughbound Northern Pacific Passenger Train No. 3 was wrecked in Mullen tunnel by the spreading of the rails on which laborers have been working several weeks. The engine, mail, baggage and express cars left the track and were badly smashed by being thrown against the rock walls of the tunnel, but none of the passengers or train crew was hurt beyond a shaking up.

Railroad Official Killed.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 6.—E. C. Duchesny, forty-seven years of age, assistant general superintendent of the Pacific division of the Canadian Pacific railroad, was killed yesterday by a falling rock at Tunnel No. 11. The tunnel timber had caught fire and Duchesny was superintending the work of putting out the flames.

Fatally Injured.

Elma, Iowa, Sept. 6.—Swen Pelson of Minneapolis, a pit man working with Winston Bros., the railroad contractors, was struck by a heavily loaded gravel train a mile south of here. The car struck him squarely in the back, breaking it. The probabilities are his injuries will prove fatal. He was sent to a hospital in St. Paul.

Can Raise Corn.

Morris, Minn., Sept. 6.—Corn cutting has begun in Stevens county, thus settling the question whether or not corn can be raised this far north in Minnesota because of frost catching it before it ripens.

Minneapolis Men in Trouble.

Blue Earth, Minn., Sept. 6.—James Britt and Charley Johnson, members of the national guard of Minneapolis, are in jail here, charged with having robbed Secor of Huntley of $650 last week.

Dread of Insane Asylum.

Waterloo, Iowa, Sept. 6.—Anton Nellson, a wealthy retired farmer, committed suicide at Cedar Falls by hanging himself to a rafter in a barn. He feared being sent to an insane asylum.

Restaurant Burned.

Blue Earth, Minn., Sept. 6.—The restaurant owned by Alleman, built in 1858, the stock owned by Charles Freer and Howard Hamlin, was destroyed by fire. Total loss, $1,000.

Instantly Killed.

Mora, Minn., Sept. 6.—Louis Graves, aged twenty-five years, was instantly killed yesterday by being caught under a threshing separator.

Potato Crop a Failure.

Kasson, Minn., Sept. 6.—The potato crop in this section is a total failure. The crop will be the lightest ever known. The large number of bugs and the long drouth are supposed to be the cause.

Arm Amputated.

Choklo, Minn., Sept. 6.—John Heur, a farmer boy living four miles north, while hunting chickens accidentally shot his arm nearly off. Amputation at the shoulder will be necessary it is said.

RED GLORY ON THE HILLS

Red glory on the hills,
  But lengthening shadows here;
And in the secret of my soul
  A longing—and a fear!

The flaming fire grows pale
  Beneath the deepening haze,
And in my soul a mist of pain
  Enshrouds the golden days.

The solemn night descends,
  The distant flame is gone,
And now—beside a grave—I stand
  In darkness—and alone!

Alone, yet not alone!—
  For, lo, there shines afar,
Upon my head, bowed down by grief,
  The splendor of a star!

A star whose light is love—
  Love wonderful and great;
And, lifted by its power, behold,
  I am not desolate!

The Mermaid.

BY E. JACK APPLETON.

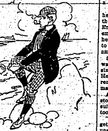
(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

He sat on a gray, wave-scarred rock and gazed thoughtfully out to sea. It was early morning and a tiny salt breeze was blowing inland, of which Van Holden was pleasantly but indolently conscious. His straight, aristocratic nose was tilted at the proper angle to catch this odor so keenly appreciated by those who live far from the ocean, and his soft hat was tilted the other way, over his keen blue eyes.

Van Holden was not in love. He was not even contemplating suicide. He had merely arisen early to enjoy the novelty of such a thing and had wandered half a mile from the summer hotel to this protected little cove. As his digestion was excellent he took from his pocket now a briar pipe, filled it and struck a match.

"If it were not so beautiful," he remarked aloud, looking out to the sea as the match burned up, "if it were not a real sacrifice to disturb the absolute harmony of this scene—and if other people did not go in so much and muss the water up—I believe I would take a dip right here and now." The match having gone out, Van Holden struck another and lighted his pipe. Then he clasped his hands about his knees and rocked gently back and forward. "I ought really to be in love," he went on, "so that I might spout poetry this very minute. Poor old ocean! How much you have borne from love-sick individuals who insist on murdering good verse, with you as an audience! It is really too bad. But I cannot improvise, and I never could quote, so you'll be saved this morning. I ought to be in love, but as no modern Venus is apt to rise from the waves—by all the gods, I'm not so sure! What's that?"

His eyes opened widely as his soliloquy was interrupted by the appearance of a rapidly moving, graceful figure, swimming easily toward him from around the little promitory at his right, and Van Holden held his breath for a moment as he gazed at it. It was assuredly what he had thought at first glance—a girl, or a young woman, swimming toward shore, her rosy face turned to one side, her white arms gleaming through the little whirl of foam that she made with long, graceful, overhand strokes.



"Poor old ocean!"

But before Van Holden had decided that a noiseless retreat was his cue, she caught sight of him; and then, with a little scream, seemingly more of fright than surprise, she turned quickly and started seaward again. But something seemed to retard her progress, and in a moment more the golden head, with masses of soft hair piled high upon it, had disappeared beneath the water.

Van Holden sprang to his feet, and threw off his coat. Waiting only to see that she was indeed in need of assistance, he tossed his pipe and hat beside his coat, and plunged into the cool waves, and struck out for the spot where she had gone under. Accustomed as he was to fresh water swimming, he found it easy enough to make speed here, and by the time she had come to the surface again, he was beside her. Slipping one arm beneath hers, he turned upon his back and swam back to the beach, in that matter-of-fact way in which he was wont to do everything. Once there, he carried the dripping little figure to a dry spot and laid her down. The girl was unconscious and Van Holden turned to pick up his coat to throw over her, when a sight met his gaze that took away what breath he had had left.

"Heavens—alive!" he muttered, "I have rescued a mermaid, not a mortal. Either that, or I am clear crazy!" She lay on her side, her hair, shimmering with water, her eyes closed, the upper part of her trim body clothed in a regulation bathing suit; but at the waist line reality stopped and romance began. A delicately shaped, tapering extremity like that of a great mountain trout, dotted with spangles of gold and red, finished the uncanny picture that Van Holden beheld. For a moment he could only stare; then, recovering himself somewhat, he picked up his coat and spread it gently over her. Recovering his pipe also, he walked dazedly to the rock from which he had first seen her.

So rapidly had the remarkable incident occurred that he found the tobacco still alight, and for the space of a minute he smoked fast and furiously, trying to think what he could say or do. At the end of that time he turned and looked at the pathetic little heap—and saw her stir.

"What an idiot I am," he cried, springing to his feet. "Mermaid or girl, she needs attention, instead of foolish gazing at—where's my flask?"

He found it, still uninjured in his hip pocket, and stooping, he gently forced the pretty lips apart and poured a few drops of brandy into her mouth.

"Where am I?" she said, pressing her hands to her ears, and making that time honored remark in excellent English. "Did I go under again?" An embarrassed expression came across her face, as she added, "And you had to go after me? It is too bad—but I am very grateful, sir."

Sir? Van Holden looked again. She was a mere child, not over fifteen or sixteen at the most, and—Gracious Heaven! she was stripping off that remarkable extremity, as if it were made of rubber!

As she shook herself free from it and stood up in a very fetching bathing suit and stockings, he smiled—and took a swallow of the brandy himself.

"If you'll excuse me," he said apologetically, "I—your appearance rather upset me." A rare, but strangely pathetic smile answered him.

"I don't wonder," she said; "you must be colder than I." Shaking herself free of the sand which clung to her dress, she gathered up the remarkable covering and rolled it into a bundle which she tucked under one arm. "I am very grateful to you," she said again, "and I hope you have not worn yourself out——"

"No," he interrupted, "but before you go will you kindly tell me why you are out so early in the morning, alone, and with that most peculiar—peculiar costume on?"

The girl's pretty face grew seriously wistful. "My father," she said, and then went on in a lower tone, "You must not breathe a word of this, for he would punish me if you did; but he makes me learn to swim so. My mother died last winter. Then my father, whom I had never seen before, came and took me away, and I am learning to swim with that tail. It is like swimming without your feet—and that wouldn't be very easy; would it?"

"I should imagine not," answered Van Holden gravely. "I think your father should be thrashed himself for making you do this. How old are you, my little siren?"

"Fifteen," she answered. "He wants me to be a mermaid in the show this summer. You wouldn't make me do that—if you were my father, would you?" she added suddenly, as if struck by a happy thought.

"Assuredly not," answered Van Holden, taking one of her cold little hands in his; "what is your father's name?"

"Frank Moran," she answered. "It is Moran's Great Three Ring Circus, you know."

"Yes," said Van Holden, a curious light coming into his eyes, "I do know." The child came closer to him and looked up at him for a moment without speaking. Then:

"You are good," she said slowly, "you are strong, too. I think I like you very much." Ere he could stop her, she stood on tiptoe, pressed her pretty lips to his, and turned and ran fleetly away toward the hotel in the far distance. Van Holden smiled and called after her, "Good-bye, little mermaid!"

She paused a moment to wave her hand to him, and answer, "Good-bye, good man!" Then she was gone again.

"Frank Moran, indeed," said Van Holden, the determined lines about his mouth showing plainly. "He is adding kidnapping to his other fine arts. Well, Mr. Moran, I have stopped some of your smaller games; I'll see if I can put an end to this. Poor little mermaid!"

By five o'clock that afternoon Van Holden was back in New York, and a day later there was a brief but intense scene in the room which Mr. Moran occupied at the seaside hotel. At the end of that scene, in which Van Holden, Moran, an old but determined lawyer from New York, and a frightened, shabbily dressed little woman, who proved to be the small mermaid's aunt, took part, Van Holden showed the circus owner the door, with the admonition: "I give you two hours to get away; at the end of that time if you are still here, or if you try to take this child again by pretending to be her father, or any other relative into the penitentiary you go!"

And that evening the little mermaid, whom her delighted aunt called Marian, was placed in the motherly care of Mrs. Hargrave, the manager of the hotel. A few days later Van Holden's mother came, looked at the child, looked at her son—and took the former to her heart, for all time.

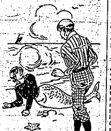
That was five years ago. Today Van Holden is no longer a careless, irresponsible bachelor. If you care to look him up, you will find him ensconced in a delightful little flat, deeply and increasingly in love with his wife—graceful and beautiful in every way—and calling her, at times, "mermaid dear."



"Where am I?"

Battle of Tel-el-kebir.

On September 9 the British under Sir Garnet Wolseley was attacked by Arabi Pasha's forces at Kassassin and the latter were repulsed and fell back to the intrenchments at Tel-el-Kebir. On the night of September 12 the British broke camp at Kassassin, removed their baggage to the railway and with an army of 14,000 marched silently and in the dark toward Tel-el-Kebir. The army halted before dawn within 1,000 yards of the fortification without having been discovered. There the lines were formed and the battle began. The English carried the intrenchments and completely routed the Egyptians. Thousands of the latter were killed and about 3,000 taken prisoners. Arabi Pasha was taken prisoner two days later at Cairo and his power completely crushed. In the negotiations which followed Great Britain practically gained control of Egypt.

Our Flag and the Sun.

During the summer months it is said that the sun always shines on some portion of the territory of the United States, but at other times during the year there are periods of the day when the United States with its possessions is in darkness. It is stated that Great Britain, France and Holland are the only countries having colonies so located that the sun always shines on some portion of them.

The Planet Neptune.

Neptune is the farthest off or outside planet of the solar system, known to science. It is invisible to the naked eye and in the telescope appears as a star of the eighth magnitude. Discovered in 1846. Revolves about the sun at a near distance of about 2,790,000,000 miles. Its year is equal to 165 of ours. In diameter about 37,000 miles. Its volume is about 100 times that of the earth and its density a little less than that of water.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Soil Analysis as a Guide.

The Ohio Experiment station receives many such requests as the following: "Will you make a chemical analysis of my soil to determine whether I need nitrogen, potash or phosphoric acid, and, if so, what will be the charge?"

To this request we make the uniform answer that such an analysis would be very expensive, and when made would usually have very little value as a guide to the use of fertilizers for the reason that the chemist has as yet discovered no reagent which possesses the same capacity for extracting plant food from the soil as that of the living tissues of the plant. To illustrate: Potash is a characteristic constituent of granite rocks, and a soil formed from such rocks may appear rich in potash under the chemist's analysis, and yet if that potash be still in the form of granite sand it will be yielded up very slowly to the feeble solvents of the plant.

Again: In some of the southern states are immense beds of rocks containing large percentages of phosphoric acid; but if these rocks are merely ground and mixed with the soil their phosphoric acid, which has resisted the solvent action of soil water for ages, will continue insoluble, and hence the necessity for treating these ground rocks with sulphuric acid, in order to make their phosphoric acid available. Still further: When a piece of marshy land has been drained it is often found that the crops planted upon it fail to thrive, although it seems to be very rich in nitrogen. The remedy here is to add barnyard manure, something which savors strongly of carrying coals to Newcastle; but the explanation is that the semi-aquatic vegetation which formerly occupied the land decays so slowly that cultivated crops cannot get nitrogen rapidly enough for their needs. When the manure is added, however, it sets up a fermentation, which converts the nitrogen bearing materials into a more soluble and hence available form.

For these reasons the only practical way of learning the needs of a particular soil is to make experiments on that soil, after the general plan of those described in the bulletins of the Experiment station on the maintenance of fertility, and thus learn which combination of fertilizing materials will produce the greatest effect.—Chas. E. Thorne, director Ohio Experiment Station.

Irrigation in Siberia.

From Farmers' Review: The agricultural possibilities of Siberia are vast and but indifferently understood. The banishment of Russian political prisoners to severe and rigorous stations has created the impression that all Siberia is frigid and incapable of agricultural development. There are in the czar's Asiatic dominion millions of acres of fertile lands splendidly adapted to the growth of grains, and large areas are even now being farmed. Siberia, however, is a vast country and in many sections which have shown some agricultural development the winters are long and cold while the summers on the other hand are very warm and dry. Many of the small streams which are used for irrigation dry up during this season, the ground bakes and agriculture suffers much. To remedy this evil the farmers of certain districts construct each year storage reservoirs, and in the summers use the contents, reservoirs and all, for the support of their crops. They do it in this manner:

During the winter they collect great drifts of snow in the bottoms of deep, shaded valleys, rolling it down the sides in immense snow balls and there pressing and compacting it so that it will be more resistant to thawing. At the end of the winter they cover the enormous piles thus formed with branches, straw or trash, in order to protect the snow against the sun's heat. All during the spring this mass of snow melts a little during the days, but freezes at night until it becomes a great solid cake of ice. Then, when the temperature rises to summer heat and the streams begin to dry up from lack of rain, the snow-ice commences to melt away, and by means of a ditch leading from it, the water which runs down supplies the river until the recurrence of rainfall.—Guy E. Mitchell.

Fall Seeding of Alfalfa.

In some sections this summer tame grass pastures were eaten to the roots and then the cattle were turned on the meadows and these were grazed as closely as the pastures. Where this is the case, it is probable that with usual conditions during the coming fall and winter a large part of these pastures and meadows will next spring be either dead or so badly killed that they will have to be plowed up. This means a severe shortage next year in hay, and farmers should prepare to meet this shortage now. It can be met by sowing alfalfa between August 15 and September 15. Alfalfa sowed at this time, under favorable conditions will furnish a good cutting of hay next May, and with ordinary conditions will yield three to four cuttings of hay next summer.

The ground for alfalfa should be well settled before seeding and only the surface made loose. Alfalfa will usually fail if seeded in the fall on freshly plowed ground. Well cultivated corn fields, with the stalks cut and drawn off, give ideal conditions. Such fields should not be plowed but harrowed only before seeding. Wheat, oats, flax and millet stubble ground plowed shallow, harrowed thoroughly and allowed to settle before seeding, furnish good conditions for alfalfa. If such ground is mellow, plowing may not be necessary, as the land will only need to be disced and cross-disced.

The best time to sow is in the last half of August. It is safe to sow as late as September 15 if conditions are good. The ground must be well settled, with a loose mulch on top and well saturated with moisture so as to bring up the seed quickly and force the fall growth. If either of these conditions are lacking it will not pay to sow.

The best way to sow is with a press drill, using 20 pounds of seed per acre. Mix the seed with equal parts, by measure, of coarse, cornchop or bran. Drill half the seed one way and cross-drill the other half. If necessary to sow broadcast, use 25 to 30 pounds of seed per acre, cover with a harrow and roll unless there is danger from blowing. It is much better to seed with a drill. Alfalfa should be sown alone.

The best quality of seed will give the best stand and the most vigorous growth and is always the most profitable to use, although it costs the most.

Alfalfa will grow on any well drained soil that will produce corn. It does best on well-drained bottom lands that do not overflow, but in the eastern half of Kansas, when properly handled, is a profitable crop on upland. Alfalfa seeded last fall on upland in Shawnee and Riley counties gave two good cuttings this summer before July 5, while tame meadows and prairie grass on adjoining lands yielded only half a ton of hay per acre.—H. M. Cottrell, Agriculturalist Kansas Experiment Station.

The Pickle Worm.

In the accompanying illustration is shown a pickle worm, natural size. These worms vary much in appearance, some being of a yellow-ash-white and very much resembling the inside of an unripe melon, while others are tinged more or less with green. They are quite soft and translucent, and there is a transverse row of eight shiny, slightly elevated spots on each of the segments.

The worms appear about the middle of July and continue their destructive work till the 1st of October. They attack the little cucumbers just when they are of right size for pickles, bore round holes in them and feed on the tender fruit. They are great feeders, and as many as three or four will sometimes be found in a single cucumber. They develop rapidly and reach full growth in three to four weeks.

When about to transform, they forsake the fruit in which they had burrowed, and drawing together portions of some leaf that lies on or near the ground, spin a light cocoon of white silk. In this cocoon, if it is not too late in the season, they change to moths like the one here shown, emerging in about ten days. The late ones pass the winters in the cocoons. The moth is very strikingly marked. It is of a yellowish brown color, with an iris-purple reflection.

Mary Treat, in her book on "Injurious Insects," says of it: The pickle worm is indigenous and has, doubtless, existed in some part or other of the country from time immemorial. The French entomologist, Guenee, gives as its food-plant a species of potato, and it is just possible it may not always have fed upon the same plants upon which it was first found in this country. The best remedy is hand picking, feeding the infested fruit to stock.

B. S. Hoxie of Wisconsin, in a note to the Farmers' Review, finds fault with a recent article on forest preservation. The sentence that most arouses his resentment is: "Careful estimates on the growth of the spruce show that the trees now having a diameter of 18 inches cannot be replaced by trees of the same size in less than 150 years." In commenting on this Mr. Hoxie says: "While it is true that the spruce, as well as nearly all the other coniferous trees, make slow growth during the first four or five years from seedlings, they are not slow-growing trees, as anyone can satisfy himself by counting the grains or rings in almost any packing case of second-growth timber, if he has not a section of the tree. I have visited several groves of spruce and pine—white and Norway—of from 20 to 30 years' planting from the nursery, and find these trees from 8 to 14 inches in diameter, and from 20 to 40 feet tall. I have a cross section of a spruce that measured 13 inches in diameter one foot from the ground, and I count 24 rings. When cut down the tree was 42 feet long. This tree grew on a neighbor's lawn, and I knew the date of its transplanting from the nursery."

W. J. Stillman, who died recently in England, was a man of varied talents—an artist, art critic, author, journalist, diplomatist, and archaeologist. He was an intimate of Ruskin, Millais, Hunt and other members of the pre-Raphaelite group.

Small Irrigation Plants.

From the 1900 report of the New Jersey Experiment Station we take the following:

The irrigation practiced in the state has thus far been on a small scale. Plants capable of irrigating 6 to 8 acres are the rule. They have, however, clearly demonstrated two points—first, an irrigation plant is a desirable adjunct to a farm; and second, that it pays. In most cases the water has been applied by pumping, either from a stream or from wells. The cost of these small plants is relatively large per acre, yet in all cases they have proved profitable, because the water has been used for such crops as are liable to suffer seriously in case of short drouths. Of the eight small plants of which full data have been obtained, the initial cost per acre for them ranges from $35 to $100, and, with the exception of one case, the water is applied by pumping; in four cases it is obtained from streams, and in the others from wells, and the returns thus far have in all cases paid a large rate of interest on the investment.

The question of small plants and their erection and equipment has been well worked out, and one capable of furnishing water for from 6 to 8 acres can be erected and equipped for from $400 to $500, depending on the location of the land in reference to situation of the water—that is, whether the point to which the water is to be raised be high or low. This does seem a relatively high initial cost as compared with that of canals and ditches or even of storage, but as used in intensive practice and for crops of a high commercial value these plants do return a large profit on the investment. The information thus far gathered indicates that irrigation is desirable in the humid districts, and that small plants, while relatively expensive, are practicable and result in greatly reducing the effects of a deficiency in rainfall.

Care of Trees from the Nursery.

Whether purchased direct from the growers, or ordered through agents, care should be taken that the roots of the trees are not exposed to the action of the sun and dry winds. The practice of many farmers of placing the bundles in their wagons and driving home without taking any pains to cover them to prevent the drying of the roots has undoubtedly caused the loss of thousands of nursery trees. Wet straw and blankets should always be provided when notice has been received that the agent from whom the trees have been ordered is to make a delivery, and, as soon as possible, the trees should be either planted or heeled in. When received in the fall, unless one has a cellar, where the temperature can be kept just above the freezing point, in which they may be placed with their roots in the soil, it will be desirable to heel in the trees in some well-drained spot, where there will be no danger from standing water. A trench should be dug a foot or so in depth and about three feet wide, in which the trees should be placed with the tops inclined toward the south at an angle of about twenty-five or thirty degrees from the horizontal. The bundles should be opened and the soil thoroughly worked among the roots and pressed about them. It is always advisable to have the trunk and greater part of the branches covered, especially in the case of peach and other tender fruits, and whenever fruits have not been thoroughly ripened. Care should be taken to have no straw or rubbish about the trees, but it is a good plan to use evergreen boughs to break the sun's rays and prevent the alternate freezing and thawing, as well as the rapid thawing of the trees after a severe cold spell. A trench should always be dug to carry off any surface water about the trees.—Michigan Bulletin.

The Hawaii Experiment Station.

A United States Experiment Station is in process of being established on the Island of Oahu, one of the Hawaiian group. The piece of land to be used begins in the suburbs of Honolulu, and is at that end only 100 feet above the sea. It rises gradually for a distance of two miles, and is at that distance 1,400 feet above sea level. The lower slope is densely covered with thickets of native growth, but the upper third is covered with a planted forest of Australian Eucalyptus, Acacia and Grevilla species. The buildings are now being erected. One of the important lines to be taken up is that of the production of hay-making grasses. All hay is now imported and retails at $37 per ton in Honolulu. Another line to be followed will be an attempt to ensilo the tops of the sugar cane. At the present time all of this material is dried and burned. The cultivation of citrus fruits will also begin, in an attempt to give the natives some product they can export at a profit. Poultry culture will also be investigated and stimulated. At present there is a troublesome disease among fowls that makes it difficult to raise chickens. As a consequence fowl meat and eggs are very high.

Fruit Notes.

Peaches in many parts of Ohio are about half their usual size and unpalatable.

Pears are reported a large crop in Jefferson and Harrison counties, Ohio.

The prospects for peaches and grapes in New York state continue favorable but pears will be scarce.

Illinois fruit prospects are poor.

All kinds of tree fruits are scarce in New Jersey except peaches. Aphides are so numerous in Gloucester county that some fields of cantaloupes have been entirely destroyed.

California reports state that deciduous fruits are of good quality but the yield is below the average.

Good rains have caused improvement in late peaches and apples in eastern Kansas.

ANARCHIST'S FOUL DEED

President McKinley Stricken Down by the Bullet of an Assassin at Buffalo.

Foul Deed Is Planned With All the Diabolical Ingenuity of Which Anarchy Is Capable.

Wounds Not Necessarily Fatal, But the President's Condition Is Considered Serious.

Buffalo, Sept. 8. — President McKinley was shot and seriously wounded by a would-be assassin while holding a reception in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American exposition a few minutes after 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. One shot took effect in the right breast, the other in the abdomen. The first is not of a serious nature and the bullet has been extracted. The latter pierced the abdominal wall and has not yet been located. At 6:30 a. m. the following bulletin by the attending physicians was the only indication of the condition of the president's wounds:

"The president passed a good night and is resting comfortably this morning; temperature 100.4 degrees, pulse 124, respiration 24."

It was a few minutes after 4 p. m., while President McKinley was holding a public reception in the great Temple of Music on the Pan-American grounds, that the dastardly attempt was made, with what success time alone can tell. Planned with all the diabolical ingenuity and finesse of which anarchy or nihilism is capable, the would-be assassin carried out the work without a hitch, and should his designs fail and the president survive, only to divine providence can be attributed that beneficent result.

The president, thought well guarded by United States secret service detectives, was fully exposed to such an attack as occurred. He stood at the edge of the raised dais upon which stands the great pipe organ, at the east side of the magnificent structure. Throngs of people crowded in at the various entrances to gaze upon their executive, perchance To Clasp His Hand, and then fight their way out in the good-natured mob that every minute swelled and multiplied at the points of ingress and egress to the building.

The president was in a cheerful mood and was enjoying to the full the hearty evidences of good will which everywhere met his gaze. Upon his right stood John G. Milburn of Buffalo, president of the Pan-American exposition, chatting with the president and introducing to him especially persons of note who approached. Upon the president's left stood Mr. Cortelyou.

It was shortly after 4 p. m., when one of the throng which surrounded the presidential party, a medium-sized man of ordinary appearance and plainly dressed in black, approached as if to greet the president. Both Secretary Cortelyou and President Milburn noticed that the man's hand was swathed in a bandage or handkerchief. Reports of bystanders differ as to which hand. He worked his way amid the stream of people up to the edge of the dais, until he was within two feet of the president. President McKinley smiled, bowed and extended his hand in that spirit of geniality the American people so well know, when suddenly the sharp crack of a revolver rang out loud and clear above the hum of voices, the shuffling of a myriad feet and vibrating waves of applause that ever and anon swept here and there over the assemblage.

There was an instant of almost complete silence. The president stood stock still, a look of hesitancy, almost of bewilderment, on his face. Then he Retreated a Step while a pallor began to steal over his features. The multitude, only partially aware that something serious had happened, paused in surprise, while necks were craned, and all eyes turned to the rostrum where a great tragedy was being enacted.

Then came a commotion. With the leap of a tiger three men threw themselves forward as with one impulse and sprang toward the would-be assassin. Two of them were United States secret service men, who were on the lookout and whose duty it was to guard against just such a calamity as had befallen the president and the nation. The third was a bystander, a negro, who had only an instant previously grasped in his dusky hand the hand of the president. As one man the trio hurled themselves upon the president's assailant. In a twinkling he was borne to the ground, his weapon was wrested from his grasp and strong arms pinioned him down.

Then the multitude which thronged the edifice began to come to a realizing sense of the awfulness of the scene of which they had been unwilling witnesses. A murmur arose, spread and swelled to a hum of confusion, then grew to a babel of sounds, and later to a pandemonium of noises. The crowds that a moment before had stood mute and motionless, as in bewildered ignorance of the enormity of the thing, now with a single impulse surged forward toward the stage of the horrid drama, while a hoarse cry welled up from a thousand throats and a thousand men charged forward to lay hands upon the perpetrator of The Dastardly Crime.

For a moment the confusion was terrible. The crowd surged forward regardless of consequences. Men shouted and fought, women screamed and children cried. Some of those nearest the doors fled from the edifice in fear of a stampede, while hundreds of others from the outside struggled blindly forward in the effort to penetrate the crowded building and solve the mystery of excitement and panic which every moment grew and swelled within the congested interior of the edifice. But of the multitude which witnessed or bore a part in the scene of turbulence, there was but one mind which seemed to retain its equilibrium, one hand which remained steady, one eye which gazed with unflinching calmness and one voice which retained its even tenor and faltered not at the most critical juncture. They were the mind and hand and the eye and the voice of President McKinley.

After the first shock of the assassin's shot, he retreated a step; then, as the detectives leaped upon his assailant, he turned, walked steadily to a chair and seated himself, at the same time removing his hat and bowing his head in his hands. In an instant Secretary Cortelyou was at his side. His waistcoat was hurriedly opened, the president meanwhile admonishing those about him to remain calm and telling them not to be alarmed.

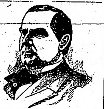
"But you are wounded," cried his secretary, "let me examine."

"No, I think not," answered the president. "I am not badly hurt, I assure you."

Trickling Stream of Blood.

Nevertheless his outer garments were hastily loosened and when a trickling stream of crimson was seen to wind its way down his breast, spreading its telltale stain over the white surface of the linen, their worst fears were confirmed.

The president's assailant in the meantime had been hustled to the rear of the building by exposition guards where he was held while the building was cleared and later he was turned over to Supt. Bull of the Buffalo police department, who took the prisoner to No. 13 police station and afterwards to police headquarters. As soon as the crowd in the Temple of Music had been dispersed sufficiently, the president was removed in the automobile ambulance and taken to the exposition hospital, where an examination was made. The best medical skill was summoned and within a brief period several of Buffalo's best-known practitioners were at the patient's side.



President William McKinley.

The president retained the full exercise of his faculties until placed on the operating table and subjected to an anaesthetic. Upon the first examination it was ascertained that one bullet had taken effect in the right breast just below the nipple, causing comparatively harmless wound. The other took effect in the abdomen, about four inches below the left nipple, four inches to the left of the navel and about on a level with it.

Upon arrival at the exposition hospital the second bullet was probed for. The walls of the abdomen were opened but the Ball Was Not Located. The incision was hastily closed and after a hasty consultation it was decided to remove the patient to the home of President Milburn. This was done, the automobile ambulance being used for the purpose. Arrived at the Milburn residence all persons outside the medical attendants, nurses and the officials immediately concerned, were excluded and the task of probing for the bullet which had lodged in the abdomen was begun by Dr. Roswell Parke. When the news of the crime was telephoned to the home of President Milburn where Mrs. McKinley was resting, immediate steps were taken to spare her the shock of a premature statement before the true condition of the president could be ascertained. Guards were stationed and no one was permitted to approach the house.

When it was decided to remove the president from the exposition hospital to the Milburn residence, the news was broken to Mrs. McKinley as gently as might be by the members of the Milburn family. She bore the shock remarkably well and displayed the utmost fortitude.

While the wounded president was being borne from the exposition to the Milburn residence between rows of onlookers with bared heads, a far different spectacle was being witnessed along the route of his assailant's journey from the scene of his crime to police headquarters. The trip was made so quickly that the prisoner Was Safely Landed within the portals of the police station and the doors closed before anyone was aware of his presence.

Then bulletins began to appear on the boards along Newspaper Row, and when the announcement was made that the prisoner had been taken to police headquarters, only two blocks distant from the newspaper section, the crowds surged down toward the terrace, eager for a glimpse of the prisoner. In a few minutes the crowd had grown from tens to hundreds and thousands until the street was completely blocked with a mass of humanity. It was at this juncture that some one raised the cry of "Lynch him!" Like a flash the cry was taken up, and the whole crowd, as if ignited by the single match thus applied, re-echoed the cry "Lynch him! Hang him!" Closer the crowd surged forward. Denser the throng became as new arrivals swelled each moment the swaying multitude. The situation was becoming critical, when suddenly the big doors were flung open and a squad of reserves advanced with solid front, drove back from the curb, then across the street and gradually succeeded in dispersing them from about the entrance to the station. Inside the station house were District Attorney Penny, Superintendent of Police Bull, Capt. Reagan of the First precinct and other officials. The prisoner first gave his name as Fred Nieman, said his home was in Detroit, and that he had been in Buffalo about a week.

Prisoner Confesses.

He at first admitted that he was an anarchist in sympthy at least, but denied strenuously that the attempt on the life of the president was a result of a preconcerted plot on the part of any anarchist society. At times he was defiant and again indifferent. But at no time did he betray the remotest sign of remorse. After long and persistent questioning it was announced at police headquarters that the prisoner had made a partial confession which he had signed.

As near as can be learned the facts contained in the confession are as follows:

The man's name is Leon Czolgosz. He is an avowed anarchist and an ardent disciple of Emma Goldman, whose teachings, he alleges, are responsible for the attack on the president. He denies steadfastly that he is the instrument of any body of anarchists or the tool of any coterie of plotters. He declares he did not have a confederate. His only reason for the deed, he declares, is that he believed the present form of government in the United States was unjust, and he concluded the most effective way to remedy it was to kill the president.

HASTENING TO BUFFALO.

Cabinet Ministers Leave for the Bedside of the President.

New York, Sept. 8. — When Secretary of War Root, who was at Southampton, L. I., heard that the president had been shot, he immediately began arranging to start for New York and thence to Buffalo. When seen to-night he said: "I cannot talk. What is there to say? It is terrible, terrible."

Mr. Root left on a special train for Long Island City a few minutes before 8 o'clock. The engineer of the train said he had been given the right of way.

Buckfield, Me., Sept. 7.—Hon. John D. Long, secretary of the navy, who has been passing his vacation at the Long homestead, two miles from this place, was deeply affected by the news, which came to him while he was at the village. He proceeded to his home at once, declaring that he was undecided about future plans on account of the suddenness of the news. The secretary positively refused to say anything for publication.

Philadelphia, Sept. 7.—Postmaster General Smith was greatly affected by the news of the shooting of President McKinley and expressed himself as shocked beyond measure. Mr. Smith said he hoped the president's injuries might not prove so serious as was at first intimated. Mr. Smith left here on a late train for Buffalo.

Dublin, N. H., Sept. 7.—Secretary Hitchcock, who has been stopping at Mount Monadnock, when informed of the tragic incident at Buffalo, said: "I am too horrified to make any expression whatever." He immediately prepared to leave for Buffalo.

ROOSEVELT SHOCKED.

Vice President Starts Immediately for Buffalo.

Burlington, Vt., Sept. 8.—Vice President Roosevelt on his arrival here from Isle La Motte, started at once for Buffalo. To the Associated Press representative he said: "I am too shocked and grieved to express my feelings."

A few minutes later when a bulletin was handed to him saying that President McKinley's wound was not fatal, the vice president sent word to the gathering:

"Like all our people and like the whole civilized world, you will rejoice to hear this good news."

President Clement of the Rutland railroad placed a train at the disposal of the vice president and made arrangements to take him to the scene of the tragedy. Col. Roosevelt was asked for a statement for publication and said:

"I am so inexpressibly grieved, shocked and horrified that I can say nothing."

He boarded the train and left for Buffalo.

GRIEF IN ENGLAND.

Horror and Sympathy as Keen as if It Had Been Their King.

London, Sept. 8.—The news of the attempt upon the life of President McKinley spread slowly in London. The first ticker reports were discredited; then, with the confirmation and the general dissemination of the news, arose a far-reaching feeling of sorrow and indignation which, wherever Americans were gathered, almost gained the proportions of a panic, accompanied by feverish anxiety for further details. The thousands of Americans now in London were mostly at the theaters when the news arrived, and returning to their hotels, found anxious groups of Englishmen and Americans discussing what, without distinction of race, is regarded as a national calamity. Comparatively few Englishmen heard the news last night, but all these expressed horror and sympathy as genuine as if it had been the king instead of the president. The latter's kindly personality, his friendship for England, and his kindly message of condolence upon the occasion of Queen Victoria's death, were recalled, in voices as low and awe-stricken as those of any purely American gathering.

All the newspapers this morning publish long accounts of the attempted assassination of President McKinley. Their editorials are unanimous in their expressions of horror at the dastardly crime and profess the profoundest sympathy for the president.

DENOUNCED BY ANARCHISTS.

New Jersey Outfit Are After Monarchs Only.

Paterson, N. J., Sept. 8.—The anarchists of this city are greatly excited over the attempted assassination of President McKinley. The general feeling among them is against the deed and the man who tried to commit the murder. They would all readily sympathize with any one who would kill an European monarch, but they protest against being represented as sympathising with Nieman.

"I do not believe he is an anarchist," said Pedro Esteve, editor of La Questione, last night. "I think he is a lunatic who has some personal grievance. The group of anarchists in this city is composed almost entirely of Italians. Nieman is not known to any of us. I never heard of the man. We have often discussed President McKinley at our meetings, and the general opinion always was that he was a broad-minded man who would not persecute us. We never plot the death of rulers, but we sympathize with any one who removes a monarch, but I don't believe that any of the anarchists of this city will applaud this deed."

There were some of the anarchists at Bartholdi hall, however, who were not displeased at Nieman's act.

ACCOMPLICES IN CHICAGO.

Six Men Arrested Charged With Having Knowledge of the Plot.

Chicago, Sept. 8.—Six men were placed under arrest in this city last night on the charge of being implicated in the plot to assassinate President McKinley. The men were all found in one house at the corner of St. Johns place and Carroll avenue on the west side of the city. The arrests were made on information from the police officials of Buffalo, who said the men were members of a society to which the assailant of the president belonged, and that they had knowledge of the plot.

PRESIDENT ONLY LAUGHED.

When Warned of the Danger of Going Without a Bodyguard.

New York, Sept. 8.—Former Attorney General Griggs, in discussing at Paterson, N. J., the shooting of President McKinley, said: "I warned him against this very thing time and time again. I asked him for the country's sake, if not for his own, to have a bodyguard when he went out. He refused. He laughed at me. He insisted that the American people were too intelligent and too loyal to their country to do any harm to their chief executive. He had supreme confidence in the people."

ANARCHISTS JUBILANT

And Are Promptly Run Out of Town by Indignant Citizens.

Pittsburg, Kan., Sept. 8. — When the Italian anarchists at Chicago, near here, heard of the attempted assassination of President McKinley they held a big jubilation last night. A mob went out from Pittsburg and drove the anarchists out of town. A number of shots were fired.

PRESIDENT MAY RECOVER

CONDITION GIVES STRONG HOPE THAT HIS LIFE WILL BE SPARED.

NOT AN UNFAVORABLE SYMPTOM

Physicians Unanimously of the Opinion That What Change Has Occurred Is for the Better — President by No Means Out of Danger — Possibility of Peritonitis or Septic Poisoning — Vice President Roosevelt Extremely Optimistic — Messages of Sympathy Pour in From All Quarters of the Globe — Mrs. McKinley Bears Up Bravely.

Buffalo, Sept. 10.—Through the quiet, peaceful Sabbath, every word that came from the big vine-clad house in Delaware avenue in which the stricken chief magistrate of the nation lies battling for life was reassuring and the chances of his recovery are so greatly improved that all of those who have kept the patient vigil at his bedside feel strongly that his life will be spared. The developments of Saturday night and yesterday were dreaded, but hour after hour passed and the distinguished patient, struggling there beneath the watchful eyes of physicians and trained nurses, showed not an unfavorable symptom. Five times during the day the eminent doctors and surgeons assembled for consultation and each time the verdict was unanimous that what change had occurred was for the better. Not the slightest premonitory symptom of peritonitis appeared and the fresh hope borne with the morning grew stronger and stronger as the day advanced until toward evening the confidence expressed in the president's recovery seemed almost sanguine.

Dr. Charles McBurney, the famous New York surgeon who had been summoned in consultation, after a thorough examination in which he said he had found not a single Unfavorable Symptom, joined in the last bulletin which declared that the president's condition was satisfactory to all the physicians present. It is not strange that the vice president and other distinguished visitors who called came away with lighter hearts and buoyant tread and gave expression to the most optimistic sentiments.

Despite all this optimism, the president is by no means out of danger. Not one of his physicians; not one of his advisors who is admitted to the inner councils, has the temerity to go so far as to declare that he is. But if he continues to improve for one more day the danger of peritonitis, which is most dreaded, will have practically disappeared. Saturday one of the doctors thought forty-eight hours would be the limit of the danger from that source, but his most conservative colleagues put it at at least twenty-four hours, possibly thirty-six, from last evening, which must elapse before the possibility of peritonitis shall have vanished. That disposed of, still other complications may arise. Blood poisoning might set in or an abscess form where the bullet is imbedded in the muscles of the back. Thus far the ball of the assassin, which is still in the body, gives the physicians no anxiety. But if the Slightest Inflammation appears in the region of the lead it will be extracted. No difficulty is expected in this regard. One of Edison's best X-ray machines and his most skilled and trusted operator, Dr. H. A. Knolls, arrived yesterday. The batteries were charged and the machine is ready for instant use. With it the physicians say there is not the slightest doubt that the ball can be located perfectly for operation. They do not deem it advisable to sap any of the president's strength at this time. All his reserve force is needed now to resist the danger of peritonitis and septic poisoning. Besides, if inflammation does not set in around the bullet it will soon become encrusted.

All the effects of the ether which was administered when the operation was performed on the exposition grounds had disappeared yesterday morning and the president's mind was perfectly clear during the time that he was awake. Yesterday for the first time he enjoyed a natural sleep. While he was still more or less under the influence of the anaesthetic his slumber was restless and disturbed and did him little real good. Yesterday between 9 and 4 o'clock he had the solace Of Natural Slumber for about four hours and the physicians stated unofficially that his sleep had been "quiet and restful," and had helped the sufferer a great deal. Yesterday, also, for the first time nourishment was administered. It was in liquid form and was injected hypodermically to avoid the possibility of irritating the wall of the stomach. The exterior wound was dressed yesterday morning and is progressing satisfactorily. All day the members of the cabinet and others associated with the president in public life came solicitously and went away almost jubilantly, all reflecting the hopeful outlook at the Milburn house.

Vice President Roosevelt received the earlier bulletins, and after going to church, hurried to the residence. There he was joined by Senator Hanna. They came away together and gave expression to the most confident and encouraging sentiments. The vice president not only shared the cheerful feeling, but was extremely optimistic. Both gentlemen took occasion to denounce in unmeasured terms the statements gaining circulation in some quarters that the doctors were not frank in their communications to the public. They maintained that the president's favorable condition was even understated by the physicians, through motives of conservatism, during the seventy-two hours' period.

Tell the Whole Truth.

Later Secretary Cortelyou took occasion to emphasize this very point by issuing an official statement assuring the public of the complete trustworthiness of the news sent out.

All the members of the cabinet are now here except Secretaries Hay and Long. The former telegraphed yesterday that he would start from Newberry to-day, probably in time to be here to-night. Secretary Long also telegraphed that he was coming, but did not specify the time. The cabinet officers feel it to be their duty to be here in this crisis to meet any emergency. They are holding no formal meetings, although there are some matters of public business which they daily discuss informally, and the possible contingencies should the president grow worse are also thoroughly canvassed. They do not believe that there is the most remote possibility that Vice President Roosevelt will be called upon to exercise the functions of chief magistrate under the disability clause of the constitution while the president lives. Vice President Roosevelt would not hear of such a course.

Vice President Roosevelt's attendance at the morning service of the First Presbyterian church gave occasion for a heartfelt expression of the sorrow universally felt over the calamity and the detestation of The Assassin's Methods. A fervid prayer by the pastor, Dr. Mitchell, invoked the sternest reprobation of anarchy and asked that the temples of public life be scourged of men willing to temporize with the madness of anarchy.

The interest in the president's condition was such across the Canadian border that the Associated Press was asked to furnish a bulletin yesterday morning to be read in the churches in Quebec and Montreal and many requests of a similar character came direct to Secretary Cortelyou from different parts of the United States. The messages of sympathy from all over the United States, and all over the world, in fact, have fairly overwhelmed Secretary Cortelyou. Two more White House stenographers have been sent for, and upon their arrival some of the more important messages will be made public. Almost every government in the world has been heard from, most of the crowned heads of Europe sending personal messages. Among the latter are King Edward, Emperor William, the kings of Portugal, Italy and Sweden and the sultan of Turkey. President Loubet of the republic of France has also cabled his sympathy direct.

Mrs. McKinley's Fortitude.

Mrs. McKinley continues to bear up bravely and her fortitude is regarded as remarkable. One of her dearest and closest friends, Mrs. Rand of Washington, has arrived here and will probably remain with her during this trying period.

The members of the cabinet are doing everything in their power to prevent the sensational exploitation of Czolgosz because he undoubtedly craves notoriety and because his fellow anarchists throughout the country love it. They do not desire to place any stone in the path of the authorities who are laboring to unravel the plot, if any plot existed, and all the minions of the government secret service will be used to aid the state authorities in the prosecution of their investigation. But by the direct request of Secretary Root on behalf of his colleagues, the district attorney and the police will not permit the prisoner to be seen or interviewed, nor will they discuss the methods of the results of their efforts to discover the originators of the plot. All that has leaked out from the jail shows that the prisoner is vain and boastful of his crime and would, if given an opportunity, fill the newspapers with columns of his vaporings.

WAR ON ANARCHISTS.

United States Many Unite With Europe in Exterminating the Societies.

Washington, Sept. 10.—One effect of the attempt to assassinate President McKinley will undoubtedly result in a movement, both in this country and in Europe, to pursue the anarchists and to exterminate them if possible. It is unfortunately true that there is no law upon the statute books of this country, nor can one be placed there until the constitution is amended relating to the right of free speech, which gives power to the authorities to deal with the anarchists. At present the anarchists can abuse the right of free speech, and until they have committed an overt act—which probably means the taking of the life of the president or some high official—the hand of the law cannot be placed upon them. It is true, however, that it is possible to break up anarchistic meetings which are likely to cause riots, and this is frequently done. Action of this kind, however, has no real effect in stamping out the organizations. Expressions of opinion from all parts of the country indicate that the people are now in a mood to resort to the most radical measures to rid the country of the anarchists. Some persons go so far as to say that individuals and organizations claiming to be anarchists should from this hour be denounced as public enemies and hunted like wild beasts.

H. O. ARMOUR DEAD.

Suddenly Expires While Talking to Friends.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 10. — Herman O. Armour of 856 Fifth avenue, New York, was fatally stricken with apoplexy here this noon. He was conversing with friends on the piazza of his cottage, when suddenly his head dropped to one side and he expired almost immediately. In the morning he enjoyed his usual drive and appeared much refreshed by his outing. Mr. Armour arrived in Saratoga early in the season and occupied the Gen. Winson B. French residence, 718 North Broadway, as his summer home.

Bullet in His Head.

Washburn, Wis., Sept. 10.—John Kennedy, a woodsman at work in Leonard's camp, was brought to the hospital in this city with a bullet hole in his head. He was found alone in one of the camp buildings, shot and unconscious. The bullet had entered the head on the top and the affair looks very much as though there had been foul play. Kennedy remained unconscious and died in the evening. The matter is an absolute mystery.

SEVEN ARE KILLED

FATAL RAILROAD WRECK OCCURS NEAR THE JAMESTOWN, N. D., DEPOT.

TRAIN STRIKES A ROAD ENGINE

Flat Car on Which Harvest Hands Are Traveling Collapses and Five of Them Are Killed Instantly and of Six Others Hurt, Two Die of Their Injuries—Were Returning From Harvest Fields.

Jamestown, N. D., Sept. 10. — Five men were killed and six others were seriously injured near the railroad depot in this city at 3:30 a. m. yesterday morning. Two of the six injured have since died.

A mixed train came in from Oakes, carrying seventeen men on a flat car. The train had but passed the depot when a road engine was struck. The force of the collision caused the flat car on which the men were riding to collapse, with the above result. The men boarded the car at La Moure, where they had been working in the harvest field, and came here for work.

LAKE HURON'S WORST DISASTER.

Shores Piled With Many Thousand Dollars' Worth of Property.

Port Huron, Mich., Sept. 10. — Last night witnessed the results of one of the worst disasters on Lake Huron. Rising from the severe gale that was blowing for twenty-four hours. Piled upon shores are many thousands of dollars' worth of vessel property and the chances for getting them off are small unless many thousand more shall be expended in dredging. Strange to say, in connection with this great calamity there is no loss of life. The life saving crews took thirty-eight people from vessels and others were beyond danger. The barge Amananth, owned by Capt. Kotcher of Detroit, is a total loss. She was loaded with lath, as was the steamer Pauley. Their cargoes are strewn all along the shore. The tug Sarnia, owned at Sarnia, Ont., which went to the assistance of the wrecked boats, is pounding on the bottom, deserted by her crew, but will be saved. Capt. Plough of the life-saving crew reports no loss of life. He stated that without doubt it is the worst wreck that he has witnessed in years. Marine men are present from Chicago and other ports and they pronounce the scene one of the most remarkable without loss of life.

APPROVAL OF CRIME PUNISHED.

People Swiftly Resent Expressions of Pleasure That McKinley Was Shot.

Oshkosh, Wis., Sept. 10. — Frank C. Cleveland, a teamster, made the remark in a saloon that he was glad McKinley had been shot. After the bartender had knocked him down with a bottle and several men who had heard the remark had kicked and cuffed him he was rescued by the police, cut and bleeding. On the matter being explained Cleveland was locked up and charged with disorderly conduct. His assailants were permitted to go unquestioned. A tramp who asserted on the street that he was an anarchist and was glad that McKinley was shot, and that he ought to have been shot long ago, had a narrow escape from being mobbed, and was hustled to the station and then out of town by the police without delay.

FOREST FIRES.

Lumber Camps Destroyed Near Bayfield, Wis.

Bayfield, Wis., Sept. 10.—Forest fires are raging in this vicinity and unless we get a heavy rainfall soon the fires will do considerable damage. The lumber camps from which J. A. Jacobs had just moved are destroyed and the fire extends about a half-mile along the Bayfield, Superior & Minneapolis railway, on both sides of the track, and a number of the bridges are in danger. Men have been sent out to check the fires.

CZAR'S PARIS TRIP IN DOUBT.

Advisers of Russian Ruler Declare Attack on McKinley to Show Great Danger.

Paris, Sept. 10.—It is still hoped that the czar of Russia will visit the French capital. The Figaro definitely announced that he would arrive here Sept. 20, but with the attempt at the assassination of President McKinley to enforce their urgent objections the advisers of the czar probably will prevail upon him to abandon his visit. When the president of the United States is not safe in Buffalo, a European despot must indeed be guarded.

DENIES A PLOT.

Anarchists Do Not Want McKinley Killed.

New York, Sept. 10. — M. N. Maisel, New York agent of the Free Society, a Chicago anarchist newspaper whose editor was arrested, charged with being in the conspiracy to murder President McKinley, was found in his second-hand book store in this city. He denied knowledge of any plot to assassinate the president and said anarchists did not want Mr. McKinley "put out of the way." He was free to declare himself an anarchist.

May Postpone Schley Inquiry.

Buffalo, Sept. 10. — A rumor is current that in view of the attack upon the president and the presence here of the chief officials of the country, the Schley court of inquiry will be postponed.

Dr. Miquel Dead.

Big Fire at New Orleans.

New Orleans, Sept. 10.—A disastrous fire in the wholesale district destroyed J. H. Menges' wholesale grocery and ship chandlery and the L. M. Brundswig chemical warehouse. Loss, $200,000.

BRITONS SYMPATHETIC.

Prayers by the Hundreds Are Offered Up for the President's Recovery.

London, Sept. 10. — Genuine relief pervades England over the favorable reports regarding President McKinley's condition and the prospects of his recovery. His personality continues to absorb the country's sympathy and interest. Were King Edward lying wounded popular feeling could not be stronger and deeper. Prayers for the recovery of Mr. McKinley were offered up in hundreds of British churches yesterday, notably St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey and Canterbury cathedral. At the Rev. F. B. Meyers church in London, where there was a large attendance, including many Americans, the congregation rose and passed a resolution of sympathy. The prayers offered in little country churches such as that at Beaches' Field, where Mr. Henry White, secretary of the United States embassy resides, lacked none of the sincerity and impressiveness of those delivered in the great edifices before large congregations.

PRAYERS FOR THE PRESIDENT

Are Offered Up in Churches All Over the Land.

New York, Sept. 10. — Not a church service was held in New York city or its environs yesterday at which prayers were not offered for the recovery of President McKinley, and coupled with these supplications was a strong undercurrent of thanksgiving that the tone of the dispatches from Buffalo was of an encouraging character.

-o-

Chicago, Sept. 10.—In every pulpit in Chicago yesterday denunciation of anarchy and its followers was the theme of the morning sermon. The indignation and horror of the people at the attempt on the president's life seemed to have frozen even Christian charity, for the prayers for the speedy recovery of the chief executive were followed by stirring demands in sermons that anarchy be stamped out so effectually that not a vestige be left.

-o-

Washington, Sept. 10. — References to the attempt on the president's life overshadowed all else in the church services at the national capital yesterday. In many pulpits it formed the theme of the sermon, while every prayer offered in the city made mention of the sad event.

-o-

St. Louis, Sept. 10. — Prayers for President McKinley were said yesterday in churches of all denominations and many clergymen referred from the pulpit to the anarchist's deed, declaring it to have been a thrust at the government.

QUEEN MARGHERITA WEEPS.

Widow of King Humbert Sympathizes With Mrs. McKinley.

London, Sept. 10.—Queen Margherita, upon hearing the news of the attempt upon the life of President McKinley, says the Rome corespondent of the Daily News, with tears in her eyes, said: "These things come hardest on the women, and at least poor Mrs. McKinley, in her state of health, should have been spared."

The pope, the Daily News correspondent says, also displayed deep emotion, exclaiming: "Oh, how earnestly I pray that he may escape with his life. These violent crimes are the curse of our day. I can only offer the afflicted victim and his poor wife my humble prayers."

USES SHOTGUN FOR GAVEL.

Absolom Miller Presides at Indiana Meeting With Loaded Weapon.

Brazil, Ind., Sept. 10. — Armed with a double-barreled shotgun, Absalom Miller, president of the miners' lodge at Ashboro, this county, attempted to preside over the deliberations, but in his haste to cover Mack Clark, who threatened his life, Miller discharged the gun, mortally wounding James Clark, an innocent bystander. Mack Clark had chased Miller home with a revolver prior to the shooting, and Miller returned immediately to the lodge room armed with a gun, when the accident occurred. Miller is in jail.

TO SUPPRESS ANARCHY.

Chicago Authorities Decide on Desperate Measures.

Chicago, Sept. 10.—There will be no more revolutionary speeches in public in Chicago if the police can prevent them. The edict has gone forth from Mayor Harrison and Superintendent of Police O'Neill that such utterances must be stopped, and the latter has sent several special orders to the commanding officers of the various districts to detail men to be in attendance at all meetings that are supposed to be of an anarchistic origin and to arrest the speakers if violent language is used.

POLES ARE INDIGNANT.

They Denounce the Attempted Murder of the President.

New York, Sept. 10.—An indignation meeting attended by about 500 Poles, of which it is estimated there are 80,000 in New York City, was held yesterday at the church of St. Stanislaus and bitter words of denunciation of Czolgosz and his crime were uttered, while the expression of sympathy for the president and those belonging to him was warm and universal.

UNITED STATES SAILORS DESERT.

This Bombardment Is the First Open Act of War on the Isthmus—Reports From Bogota Announce New Invasions From Nicaragua, Venezuela and Ecuador — President Castro Refuses Mediation.

Washington, Sept. 10. — The Colombian legation has received a message from Dr. Becerra at Willemstad, Curacoa, saying that the Venezuelan fleet is bombarding Rio Hacha.

Dr. Becerra formerly was the Colombian minister to the United States.

Rio Hacha is an important town on the northeast coast of Colombia. It is at the mouth of the Hacha river and has a population of about 2,500.

The Venezuelan navy consists mostly of river steamers converted into gunboats by the addition of a few guns. Venezuela up to 1899 had no navy and since then a small gunboat of 832 tons and four river gunboats have been constructed.

First Open Act of War.

This bombardment appears to be the first open act of war on the isthmus.

The Colombian legation is in receipt of a dispatch from the minister of foreign affairs at Bogota which says that new invasions from Venezuela, Ecuador and Nicaragua are announced. The minister declares that Colombia continues to remain strictly on the defensive, and that the government condemns the rebel invasion of Garhiras into Venezuela.

Ordered to Bocas del Toro.

The navy department has ordered the gunboat Machias, now at Colon, to Bocas del Toro, to look after American interests in that quarter should it appear that any such are in need of protection. The battleship Iowa having arrived at Panama, the gunboat Ranger, now at that place, has been ordered back to San Francisco.

A third dispatch from the governor of Panama was received at the Colombian legation saying that a simultaneous attack was feared on both sides, Colon and Panama.

Castro Refuses Mediation.

Willemstadt, Curacao, Sept. 10. — President Castro absolutely refuses to entertain the idea of accepting the good offices of the United States.

STEAMER GOES DOWN.

Fortunately Her Three Hundred Passengers Escape.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 10.—The steamer Twilight, which plies between Trenton and Philadelphia, was sunk in the Delaware river below this city last night, but fortunately none of the 300 passengers were drowned. The steamer is supposed to have struck a rock at Perriwig bar, a shallow and dangerous part of the river a couple of miles below Trenton. Capt. Ward headed the steamer for the Jersey shore with the idea of beaching her. He ran her on Long bar and the passengers were taken off in small boats and walked to Trenton, a distance of over a mile. The steamer now lies with water above her main deck. A large portion of the passengers were women, and much difficulty was experienced in preventing a panic.

ANARCHISTS CELEBRATE.

Find in McKinley's Attempted Murder an Occasion for Rejoicing.

McKeesport, Pa., Sept. 10. — Two hundred Italian anarchists celebrated President McKinley's attempted assassination yesterday at Guffey Hollow, a mining hamlet. Beer, whisky, speeches, songs and prayers for Czolgosz were the order of the day. This is one of the largest anarchist groups in the country. It was started and led for years by Garcia Ciamoavilla, now living at Spring Valley, Ill., and who edits the Firebrand, the anarchistic organ of Chicago. When Bresci assassinated King Humbert he declared that Mr. McKinley would be the next victim of the anarchist plots. He also drew up resolutions praising Bresci, which were published in Pittsburg newspapers.

PRONOUNCE IT "SHOLGOSCH."

Name of the Anarchist Who Attempted McKinley's Life.

Chicago, Sept. 10—Czolgosz, the name of the man who shot President McKinley, offers a lingual problem to nine-tenths of those who attempt to pronounce it. It is one of those names which the English alphabet can not spell phonetically, and which the average English-speaking person stumbles over in trying to express after hearing it spoken by a Russian. Written according to its sound the name of Czolgosz, or its nearest equivalent is "Tscollgosch," or, more broadly speaking, "Sholgosch."

BOERS ON TRIAL AT PRETORIA.

Two Burghers Accused of Harboring Spies, and an Unnamed Person Figures Mysteriously.

Pretoria, Sept. 10. — Fockema and Kerksoff, Hollanders, were court-martialed for having treacherously harbored spies at Pretoria. Mr. Lehman defended them. A feature of the trial was the frequent references to a certain person who was not named in the evidence. The accomplices and the prisoners themselves showed that they has assisted spies who were returning from a commando with food and lodging.

In the boat with him were four women. The entire party was rescued by rowboats from points along the shore. This is the first accident of the season in this region.

RELIEVED OF $29,000.

Mysterious Robbery at a Seaside Resort Near Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 7. — Five packages of $100 bills, amounting to $29,000, were stolen yesterday from a trunk in a cottage at Long Beach, a seaside resort twenty miles from this city. Up to a late hour no trace of the missing money had been found. The money was the property of John Kempley, who came to Long Beach from Fort Dodge, Iowa, about five months ago accompanied by his wife and married daughter, Mrs. Hannah Wonders. Kempley concluded to sell his 240-acre farm in Iowa and remain in Southern California. He had concluded a bargain with Dr. O. L. Woodworth and a deed was prepared to be delivered to the doctor upon the payment of $29,000. Wednesday morning an advertisement appeared in a Los Angeles paper inquiring for John Kempley. The advertisement stated that a childhood friend was desirous of meeting him, and appointed the following morning as the time and the newspaper office as the place of meeting. Kempley was anxious to greet the anonymous friend of his childhood and came to Los Angeles yesterday morning for that purpose. He failed to find anybody awaiting him. Shortly after his departure Dr. Woodworth called at the Kempley cottage with the $29,000 and asked for the deed to the Iowa farm, which was given upon the payment of the money. Mrs. Kempley and her daughter placed the money in a trunk, and both were called out of the house shortly afterward. They were absent only a few minutes, but on their return the money was gone. A warrant was issued at Long Beach for the arrest of Dr. Woodworth.

VERY FAT BOOTY

HAUL OF THE COTTON BELT ROBBERS LARGER THAN WAS FIRST THOUGHT.

WILL REACH FIFTY THOUSAND

They Secured One Bag of Gold Which Required the Combined Efforts of Two Men to Carry From the Express Car to the Engine—Robbers Are Still at Large and Posses Are on the Trail.

Texarkana, Ark., Sept. 6.—It is now said that the amount of booty secured by the robbers who held up the Cotton Belt train Tuesday night will reach nearly $50,000. It has been discovered that the robbers secured one bag of gold which required the combined efforts of two men to carry from the express car to the engine. The through safe was dynamited. While the dogs were trailing it is claimed enough was learned to place the guilty parties, who are believed to be Texarkana men, or one man, the remainder being boys. The arrest of the leader is looked for hourly. The amount of booty has been reported too low. The cotton Belt has offered a reward of $1,500 for the apprehension of the robbers, and the express company 10 per cent of all money recovered. The posses have been recalled to Texarkana and pursuit is now confined strictly to Texarkana.

Obliterated Their Trail.

The robbers evidently rode their horses up Aiken creek and left them standing in the stream. They then used a hand car and went five miles north, as the hand car was found near where the train was stopped. After footing the mail and express cars the robbers returned to the creek, mounted their horses and again rode down the stream, obliterating their trail. The express men, railroad and government officials are very reluctant about disclosing the robbery. At 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon a special went to the scene of the hold-up, with Col. O. K. Wheeler, chief of the Cotton Belt detectives; Sheriff Stanley Edwards, United States Marshal John Grant and a large posse of deputies, who had with them a pack of bloodhounds. An effort will be made to strike a trail leading from Aiken creek. At 4 o'clock another posse was started, headed by Constable James Rochelle, going to Eylau to try for a trail where the train was first stopped. Rochell, with his brace of hounds from Cass county, it is believed will strike the train in a few hours. Texas sheriffs are rushing here from every direction and are bringing deputies of every kind.

SPEEDY PEACE LOOKED FOR.

As the Result of a Conference in New York.

Pittsburg, Sept. 6.—Agitation and uneasiness prevailed in the ranks of the strikers last night, caused by the apparantly unfavorable developments of the day. The leaders, however, profess to be satisfied with present conditions and claim that ultimate victory will be theirs. Much was hoped for from the peace conference in New York, but the announcement of the failure to reach a decision put a damper on these hopes. Still many hold to the belief that the matter now being up to the strike leaders to accept or reject whatever may have been the proposition made yesterday, a settlement will speedily be reached. President Shaffer's only remark when he was shown the announcement of the adjournment of the converence without decision was: "I have no comment to make." He would say no more on the subject. The steel officials are in a very confident mood and appear to think the strike is broken effectually and that only a few more days will be required to make it a thing of the past.

CONSTITUTION DOES WELL.

Might Have Beaten Columbia if She Wasn't Handicapped.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 6.—The Constitution sailed a capital race yesterday against the Columbia over a course fifteen miles to windward and back, in a breeze whose force averaged about eight knots, its greatest power being twelve knots near the finish line. The Columbia won by seventeen seconds, corrected time, the Constitution beating her rival on elapsed time fifty-four seconds. This does not include the handicap of twenty-one seconds or more with which Constitution started. Had she not been handicapped she would have won. On the windward work she gained on the Columbia thirty-two seconds and also twenty-two seconds on the run home before the wind.

BOER WOMEN FOXY.

They Cleverly Hoodwink the British Authorities.

Pretoria, Sept. 6. — Of late a large number of Boer women have importuned the authorities for permission to go to their husbands in the field to attempt to persuade them to surrender, and in many cases the permission has been granted, but it appears that the requests are frequently proffered merely as excuses to visit their husbands, and have no intention of trying to get them to lay down their arms, and often give them valuable information.

To make her death certain he fired a second time at her prostrate body and then pointing the weapon at himself pulled the trigger. Mrs. Kovack's death was instantaneous. The suicide lived about three hours. The coroner's jury decided that Kovack committed the deed while temporarily insane, although there are indications that the wife was a willing victim.

It annulled the old system of essays, which are changed to the Western style of answers to questions. The legations will now have to deal with the new Chinese foreign office which has taken the place of the old tsung-li-yamun.

SAVED FROM A MOB.

"Buck" Wheler Narrowly Escapes Lynching.

Indianapolis, Sept. 10.—A mob formed at Booneville last night to lynch "Buck" Wheeler, arrested Saturday night, for killing his son-in-law, Elias Burns. Sheriff Hudson of Warwick county telegraphed Gov. Durbin for an Evansville company of national guard to protect the prisoner, but before the governor could be reached the mob had entered the town. The sheriff then appealed to the citizens of Booneville, who responded heavily armed with revolvers and shotguns and escorted the authorities with their prisoner to a train and Wheeler was taken to Evansville. In the meantime the mob was dispersed. Wheeler shot Burns four times, then, seizing an axe, decapitated him. Later, he fled to the woods and attempted to commit suicide. He was found by the sheriff's posse with a bullet hole in his head. He will recover.

Keep Watch on Anarchists.

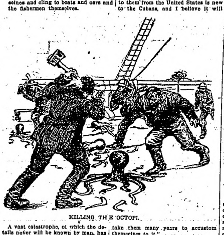
Philadelphia, Sept. 10.—Acting upon orders issued by the director of public safety, the police visited every hall available for an anarchistic meeting yesterday and notified the persons in charge not to rent their rooms for any such meetings. It was reported local anarchists would hold a meeting at Industrial hall last night but no attempt was made to open the hall. The police are keeping a close watch upon the known anarchists and their gathering places.

MONSTERS OF THE DEEP.

Probably never since Last Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, was swept away, forty-five years ago, by such a hurricane as destroyed Galveston, and for many months afterward the fishermen of Barataria and Atchafalaya dared not go to fish because their nets caught dead bodies everywhere, has a fishery been laid prostrate so strangely as have the fisheries of the north French coast in the past three years.

But the French fishermen are not catching corpses in their nets. What they haul up out of gray, cold seas of the English channel are living things—perhaps the ugliest living things that have their being on the globe.

They are octopi. They fasten to the hand lines and rob them of the hooked fish. They crawl into lobster and crab traps and fill them with the slime of their bodies and the ink that they squirt as soon as they find themselves captured. They weigh down the deep seines and cling to boats and oars and the fishermen themselves.



KILLING THE OCTOPI.

A vast catastrophe, of which the details never will be known by man, has happened in the secret deep abyss of the outer Atlantic Ocean, and has driven these creatures of night and ooze to seek the shallower waters. It is a happening most monstrous, most unnatural. It is as if the graves had opened and were parading their sacred mysteries. For nature, having made the octopus, at once as if she had become horrified at her own handiwork, banished the creature to the graves of the ocean—to those deep, dark, cold chasms where only the explorer's dredge penetrates and gropes awhile blindly, bringing up fragmentary captures that hint frightfully at frightful things that dwell there in everlasting night and in terrible companionship.

Even the deep sea dredges, feeling around at the ends of their thousand fathom long wire arms, that recently have brought up so many forms wonderful, fantastic, chimerical, incredibly horrible, never brought up a creature more fantastic, more chimerical, more horrible than the octopus. And now these beasts of sepulchre have swum in and have exposed themselves to the light of day, not in battalions or in hundreds, but in thousands and tens of thousands.

From Cape la Hague to the Channel Islands no net can be cast now without the sea nightmares crawling into it at once to strip it of fish. The visitation has extended even to the bathing resorts along that coast, and every tide brings contorted forms with arms writhing as if in deadly agony. In pools along the coast they lie, some dying, other full of life and whipping their sucker-lined, snaky tentacles at all who approach them.

The creatures are the most plentiful in that part of the English channel from the well-named Casket Islands, that have proved caskets indeed to ships innumerable, along the curve that marks the 120-foot depth to the Channel Islands. Among those Channel Islands is Sark—the land of Victor Hugo's devilfish, described by him in "The Toilers of the Sea." Sark's marine caves, in one of which he laid his scene of the famous fight between the octopus and his hero, now contain not one, but herds of the gray things, "brooding in the abyss."

They are not such monsters as he described. Few of them are larger in the body than a man's hand, and their tentacles rarely are more than ten feet long. Their average weight is from ten to twenty pounds. But they are there in hordes. They have not attacked man, except to fight back as they were attacked. But they have rendered man helpless and almost ruined the one mode of livelihood left to him in those waters.

Many Factions in Cuba.

An American officer who has just returned from Cuba says that the political parties of that island "have the propensities of all Latin races. That is, they cannot have a two-sided fight, but instead divide up into three or four factions. Thus in Havana there are four parties, each with a different shade of principles and a different leader. Among Latin races, as I have studied them in South America, it appears to be a question of leaders more than of principles. A new man comes to the front, with an engaging personality, proclaims himself a leader and a man of destiny, and the crowd falls in behind him. The idea of a battle of principles or of issues as brought to them from the United States is new to the Cubans, and I believe it will take them many years to accustom themselves to it."

United States Postal Laws.

Before 1845 the rates of letter postage in the United States varied with the distance. Half an ounce was the standard. In that year the rates were fixed at 5 cents for distances not exceeding 300 miles, and 10 cents for greater distances. In 1846 the rates were fixed at 3 and 10 cents, respectively. Then, in 1851 the maximum distance for the smaller rate was raised to 3,000 miles; and in 1863 a uniform rate of postage for the entire country of 3 cents was fixed. This lasted for twenty years—until October 1, 1883—when the rate was put at 2 cents a half ounce. On March 3, 1885, the standard of weight for 2 cents was increased to one ounce, making postage cheaper here than elsewhere in the world. Canada and Mexico also receive the benefit of this low rate.

Elm-Leaved Goldenrod.

It is well known that when a plant grows in shady places it is likely to have a greater leaf area than when it grows in the open sunshine. It must have a larger surface to collect the light when the latter is comparatively dim. Now, most of the goldenrods live in woods and copses, where the shadows are thick and direct sunshine is a fleeting thing. And so we find that this species has the broad, thin leaves of a shade plant, leaves with well-developed stems, but otherwise so similar to those of the elm tree as to give this goldenrod its distinctive name. But it gives a touch of color to the somber shades of the woods that we would not willingly do without.—Woman's Home Companion.

Afraid of Their Tin.

According to Edward de Noveu, formerly of Fond du Lac, Wis., who is now living in Paris, the notorious timidity which characterizes French capitalists, conjointly with their dislike to enter new fields, is responsible for the total neglect of what may prove the richest deposits of tin ore discovered in many years.

These deposits lie about thirty miles inland from the French coast in the department of Morbihan. It is believed that these deposits are a continuation of the famous Cornwall mines lying almost opposite on the English coast.

Noveu is attempting to form a company to exploit a concession. He has already secured limited French support, and now proposes to appeal for further financial aid to New York and Chicago.—Chicago Journal.

MOTHS AS FOOD.

Philippine Islanders Consider Them a Rare Delicacy Says a Correspondent.

Another class of insects which form a stable article of food in some of the islands are the moths found in great abundance in the mountainous regions of Panay, writes an American correspondent from Manila. These moths are small insects which hover around the rocks and live in the crevices in immense numbers. They resemble the bats somewhat in their method of hanging in groups from the rocks. It is an easy matter for the natives to capture them by the hundreds and thousands, and regular moth hunters go to the mountains at certain seasons of the year. The moths rarely fly when disturbed, but drop down into nets or bags spread to catch them when loosened from their hold. When captured they are subjected to sufficient heat to cause the soft, glossy tissues of the head and wings to shrivel up and drop off. These parts of the moth are considered unsuited to the cultivated Filipino palate, and they are always removed before sold in the market. The intense heat which burns off the wings and heads also kills the insects and dries up a good deal of the natural juices in them. When taken from the heated oven the moths are sifted, and the dried bodies are separated from the broken pieces of heads and wings. The dried moths are used much like the grasshoppers. They enter into the composition of a great variety of native dishes. They are rarely eaten alone, as are grasshoppers, but are mixed with other foods. A confection is made of them, and some natives simply dip them in melted sugar and when dried eat them as tid-bits.

OUR SUPREMACY.

We Can Produce Goods for Less Money Than Any Other Nation.

The statistics of manufactured products show that the United States is easily in the supremacy relative to any country in the world. The commercial statistics are equally satisfactory, for now at the head of the world's great exporting nations there stands the United States. For the calendar year 1900 our exports of domestic products were greater than those of any other country, their total value for that year being $1,453,013,659. This means that we can produce goods and lay them down in other countries cheaper than they can be produced in the countries to which they go. Great Britain ranks next, with $1,418,348,000, and Germany next, with $1,050,611,000. Thus the United States has reached the commercial supremacy of the great exporting nations of the world. Twenty-five years ago this country stood fourth in rank, the United Kingdom being first, Germany second and France third. The United States has increased her exports during the last 25 years 192 per cent, Germany 73 per cent, the United Kingdom 34 per cent and France 5 per cent.

The supremacy of the United States is due very largely to the enormous expansion of manufacturing industry during the last decade. Our manufactured products now constitute about 30 per cent of the total exports. In 1860 they were but 12.76 per cent. Through our agricultural products we have been feeding many countries. We are now supplying them with both food and fuel.

Dead Sea Fruit.

"Dead sea fruit" actually exists, and not in metaphor only. A recent traveler in the Sahara took a photograph in the desert within a few miles of the oasis of Biskra, and his picture shows a group of "dead sea fruit" or "apples of Sodom," as they are sometimes called. The fruit grows upon the ground on a straggling stalk and is about the size of an orange, golden colored, with bright green stripes, the skin being smooth like that of a melon. It is a strange irony of nature that the fruit which is so beautiful to look at, should be a deadly poison. It is interesting to note that the camels which graze upon the aromatic shrubs discriminate between them and this fruit of most tempting appearance.—Detroit Free Press.

New Public Service.

Springfield, Mass., has been trying in one district the experiment of a weekly house-to-house delivery of books from the public library, with good results. Over one-half of the 150 persons now receiving books in this way did not formerly make use of the city library. There is a charge for the delivery of books. One may get six weeks' service for fifty cents, twelve weeks for $1, or thirty-eight weeks for $3. This pays the book-user, since the street car fare to and from the library once a week amounts to more. A dozen persons at the same address can get books at the expense of one delivery.

Sewer Gas Kills Trees.

Experts have come to the conclusion that what kills so many trees in London is not soot flakes or the want of air or the drought, but the sewer gas, which attacks the roots, so that the tree soon withers and dies.

HERMIT OF THE SEA.

THE REMARKABLE VOYAGE OF A FINNISH SAILOR.

His Tiny Craft Which Sailed in All the Great Waters of the World—How It Was Wrecked — His Sleep on the Deep.

After seven years voyaging on nearly every ocean, the only occupant of the little vessel which he himself built, Capt. Adolphus Frietsch landed here from his last solitary cruise, met his family, which had come all the way from Milwaukee to see him, and announced his determination to sell his boat, retire from his solitary sea life, and spend the remainder of his years in Pensacola on the proceeds of his voyages and speculations, says a New Orleans writer. Capt. Frietsch is a Finn, only 41 years old, but has been at sea for 24 years. Seven years ago, when he was living in Milwaukee, engaged in the schooner trade there, the viking spirit seized on him and he determined to travel over the world and visit all the seas. He himself built a little vessel, the Nina, with a 40-foot keel. He left Milwaukee in 1894 for Liverpool, passing through the Great Lakes by way of Buffalo and the Erie canal to New York. His little vessel aroused some interest at the time and thousands came to see her. He set sail from New York for Europe; and for most of the world, that was the last heard of Capt. Frietsch and his Nina. That was seven years ago. The solitary mariner has been "plowing the ocean waves" over since. The Nina has long since gone the way of all such tiny vessels and the captain comes to New Orleans in a new vessel, the Anna F., also built by him, and a trifle larger than the Nina, having a 44-foot keel and 12-foot beam. He comes here from a cruise along the coasts of South and Central America and the tropics with the little vessel stocked with shells, corals and other marine curiosities, all collected by himself, for whenever he saw corals or shells that pleased his fancy he dived overboard to collect them. Seven years in a hermitage on the sea is remarkable, and it seems strange that Capt. Frietsch should have escaped all its dangers—but very narrowly at times, for when the first vessel, the Nina, was wrecked off the reef in Kilbrennan sound, the captain just missed by a few seconds, going with her to destruction. To navigate a vessel without a crew is a difficult matter, for there is the question of the watches. Who was going to look after the Nina or the Anna F. when the captain, boatswain, chief mariner, all rolled in one, were asleep? Over this apparently insuperable difficulty Capt. Frietsch triumphed by a lesson he learned in the matter of sleep, which he says any one can learn who will make the proper trial—the ability to sleep for a fixed time, an hour, two hours or three hours, as the sleeper might desire. This enabled the captain to rest during calms and when there was no danger to fear and to be awake and to attend to his boat when danger threatened. He naturally slept most of the day, because there was less danger of his little vessel being run into, as it could be seen, whereas at night he had to be more particular and keep a watch for vessels. In crowded places like the British channel he denied himself all sleep, and when he was on the route of vessels he seldom allowed himself more than two hours' rest, making a good examination of the horizon before retiring to rest to make sure there were no vessels within reach which might run him down. He timed himself carefully and gauged his rest by the character of the water in which he was and the outlook for the weather. He also so trained himself to the slightest luffing in the wind or different rolling of the vessel. So accustomed did he become in time to the system of voluntary sleeping and waking at a fixed time that when the Nina was wrecked, when it was evident that she would go on the Kilbrennan reefs he timed the hour at which the wreck was to occur, and having made all the necessary arrangements what he would do when the little vessel went to pieces, and finding that this could not occur before an hour, he lay down and took a good hour's sleep so that he would be rested and invigorated when the wreck came. The Nina was wrecked at the appointed time, and it was only by superhuman effort that Capt. Frietsch was rescued. But, however pleasant it may be, and full of adventure, an ocean hermitage becomes tiresome in time; and so Capt. Frietsch has concluded, after having been tossed about in his two little boats for seven years, that he will return to the domestic life of a "landlubber."

A Gentle Elephant.

"There is all the difference in the world in the dispositions of elephants," said a Philadelphia zoo keeper the other day. "Take Bolivar and Empress for example. Bolivar is kept continually chained and never leaves his cell because of his ugly nature. On the other hand, Empress is gentleness personified. Several of us were giving her her bath in the pool the other day, and George Griffiths, who has charge of the birds, was helping. All of a sudden George slipped and fell into the pool. Empress at once went to his rescue, and almost before the rest of us knew what had happened she had gently lifted him by the seat of his trousers with her trunk and carefully deposited him on dry land. Had it been Bolivar instead of Empress George would have been a goner, sure."

RILEY'S "OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE."

Citizens of the Poet's Native Village Say He Can't Identify It.

From the New York Times.—"I always thought," said the newspaper man, "that that proverb about prophets in their own country was all bosh until I spent a week in Greenfield, Ind., last summer. That's the town, you know, where Riley was born and raised. Now you'd suppose on general principles that the townspeople would be prouder of that than of any other fact in connection with Greenfield, but the truth is that the younger set scarcely know that Riley ever lived there, and the older people are rather envious of his reputation, and bear him no good will. One old lady with whom I talked the first day or two I was there is a fair sample of the whole town.

"Did you ever know James Whitcomb Riley?" I asked with what I thought was a proper amount of care.

"'Jim Riley!' she sniffed, 'why, yes, of course, I've known Jim Riley ever since him and my boys ust to play tag roun' in our backyard, an' a shif'less lot he allus was, I can tell you. Why, he never did nothin' till he was twenty-one or two year old but lay aroun' on store boxes an' gab. Ust to portend he was a reporter, but it's mighty little reportin' he ever did. Everybody said he was no good. Laws sakes, if he hadn't happened to hev made a hit with them pomes of his, he never would hev amounted to anything in the world.'

"'He seems to have succeeded pretty well in that line, though,' I remonstrated feebly.

"'Oh, yes, I guess he's pretty well fixed, and he's got a big enough name, such as it is. I must say I don't think much of his poetry, though. Take that 'Old Swimmin' Hole' pome of his. Why, I believe Jim Riley made the whole thing up out of whole cloth. Did you ever hear about the time he was here three or four years ago, and was axed to point out the original swimmin' hole? Well, he showed them a likely enough place until somebody come up and proved that that place never existed at all when Riley was a boy. The creek's channel had been changed since then, an' the hole he pointed out was in the dug channel. That shows jest how much truth there is in Jim Riley's poetry.'"

SOUND KEEPS FLIES AWAY.

Why Musicians Are Not Annoyed by the Pests While Playing.

Philadelphia Record: "While listening to an open air concert the other day," said a young man, "I was greatly annoyed by the flies, which were so persistent that I could hardly drive them away. I wondered how the musicians, with both hands busy playing, stood them, and I drew near the shell in which they sat to see. To my surprise I found that there was not a fly in the shell, and then, to my greater surprise, I discovered why this was. The sound waves of the music, rolling with tremendous volume from the shell, kept out the flies. The insects could not fly against the waves, though they tried hard. Hundreds of them were struggling frantically to reach the shell, but they might as well have tried to fly against a tornado as against those sound waves. Thus protected, inclosed by a magic curtain made of their own music, the musicians played Wagner, unannoyed by the sticky and pestering flies."

IRENE, THE COOK.

Was Made Prisoner and Held Under a Willow Chair.

It wasn't the tables that were turned on Irene, but a willow chair, and on top of it sat Mrs. Mason till the police came. Irene Harrison was a cook employed by Mrs. Mason, who lives in Lexington avenue, New York city. Irene misbehaved and was discharged. Bent on revenge she returned to the hose and began to smash the drawing room furniture. A large glass fell before her devastating hand, and nearly all the small articles in the room. Then she attacked Mrs. Mason's niece and both women fell to the floor. Seeing her chance, Mrs. Mason inverted a willow chair over Irene and then sat on the top of it. Irene was damaged so badly that she had to be taken to the station in an ambulance.

Modish Chirography.

If handwriting is an index to character American women are all getting to be exactly alike. Every fashionable woman now writes the angular English hand, and others are cultivating it. Good form decrees that paper, ink, and wax must be of a certain style and this, taken in conjunction with the similarity of penmanship, makes one fashionable woman's letter resemble another's almost exactly. The blacker the writing the more character it is supposed to possess, just as the sketches of some artists who are lavish with their India ink are rated as strong. Shading has gone out entirely. Even among women the telegraph and telephone have done much to make letter writing as it used to be practiced considered an out-of-date accomplishment. The feminine handwriting most characteristic today is that of women in the professions. These women write their own letters as a rule and are more accustomed to the pen than their society sisters.

Barings Hold Four Peerages.

The Barings hold now four peerages—two earldoms, Northbrook and Cromer; two baronies, Ashburton and Revelstoke. And the founder of the family, like the first Rothschild, came from Germany. He was a Lutheran minister, who settled with a son in Exeter some 200 years ago, and started a cloth manufactory.

Easy Come, Easy Go.

The man who creeps along, bent over with his spinal column feeling in a condition to snap like a pipestem at any minute, would readily give a great deal to get out of his dilemma, and yet this is only the commonest form by which lumbago seizes on and twists out of shape the muscles of the back. This is commonly known as backache, a crick in the back, but by whatever name it may be known, and however bad it may be, 10 minutes' vigorous rubbing with St. Jacob's Oil on the afflicted part will drive out the trouble and completely restore. It is a thing so easily caught, it may be wondered at why there is not more of it, but because it is so easily cured by St. Jacob's Oil may be the very reason we hear so little of it.

Religion Losing Ground.

The country is becoming agitated over the statement that religion is losing ground. This results in countless discussions until the agitation runs its course, and still religion flourishes. It is only useless things that deteriorate. The finest recommendation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the great stomach strengthener, lies in the fact that it has lived for fifty years in spite of hundreds of imitations, and is renowned for its cure of dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, nervousness and malaria, fever and ague.

To Have Clothes Last.

Never in home dressmaking cut any kind of woolen goods until they have been sponged, as cheap material is often not dampened before it is sold. To do this properly at home, get an ironing board or table the width of the goods and cover with tightly-stretched calico. Spread your cloth, wrong side up, cover with a linen cloth that has been well wrung out in water, and then press it with a hot iron lengthwise of the goods. Never let the iron be still, and the goods must fall evenly on the floor on to a clean cloth as pressed.

Bow Bells Silenced.

Whatever may be the case with St. Paul's, partial damage has already been sustained by the historic church of St. Mary-le-Bow, the beautiful tower of which already leans twenty-three inches out of the perpendicular. Meantime, owing to the dangerous condition of the belfry, the famous Bow Bells, that are turned again Dick Whittington, must remain silent until the necessary underpinning operations are completed.—New York Herald.

Couldn't Wear Shoes.

Sumpter, Ill., Sept. 9th.—Mrs. J. B. Flanigan, of this place, has suffered with dropsy for fifteen years. She was so very bad that for the last three years she has not been able to wear her shoes. She had doctored all the time but was gradually getting worse.

Last winter Mr. Flanigan, who was very much discouraged, called for some medicine at Mr. J. J. Dale's drug store in Carmi. Mr. Dale persuaded him to have his wife try Dodd's Kidney Pills, and he bought six boxes. His wife used five out of the six, before she was entirely cured. She is now as sound and well as ever she was, completely restored to health, and free from any symptom whatever of dropsy.

To say that Mrs. Flanigan is pleased at her wonderful deliverance does not half express her feelings, and she and Mr. Flanigan are loud in their praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and of Mr. Dale for recommending this wonderful remedy to them.

The fact that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured Mrs. Flanigan of such a severe case of dropsy, after the doctors had given her up, has made them the most talked-of remedy in White county.

THE SECOND ISLAND

BAFFIN LAND RANKS SECOND IN SIZE IN THE WORLD.

Excluding Australia, Baffin Land, situated near the east coast of the American continent, a short distance north of Hudson strait, is the second island of the world in point of size and still little is known about it. It has long been represented on the maps as composed of a number of islands. It is still shown in this way on a number of maps now in use. One by one these supposed islands, Cumberland island, Fox Land, Meta Incognita, Sussex island and others have been found to be a part of the main island; thus Baffin Land has been gradually increasing in size on the maps until today it is known to be inferior only to Greenland in size. The latest edition of the best map of the polar regions published in any American atlas, however, still shows Cockburn island, which is separated from Baffin Land by a wide channel, though a number of foreign maps show that it is a part of Baffin Land. Dr. Robert Bell, the new director of the geological survey of Canada, who mapped a long stretch of the west coast in 1897, has just published in the Geographical Journal a report of his explorations. He says that it is "the third largest island in the world, being only exceeded by Australia and Greenland." As Australia is now ranked by nearly all geographers as the smallest of the continents, Baffin Land will undoubtedly take its place among the islands as the second in area. All the best maps of Baffin Land now show a great lake region in the central part of the southern portion of the island. These lakes lie between mountain ranges. Dr. Bell says that the two greatest bodies of water are larger than any of the lakes in the whole peninsula of Labrador and that they may almost be compared to Lake Ontario in extent. He visited the southernmost, Lake Amadjuak, which may be 120 miles in length by forty in breadth in the middle. According to Eskimo accounts, Lake Amadjuak discharges northward into Lake Mettilling by a short river, without rapids, the natives passing from one lake to another in their kyaks. Lake Mettilling is perhaps 140 miles long and sixty miles wide and its waters reach the sea through a large and rapid river, fifty or sixty miles long, that has a descent of about five feet to the mile. The conspicuous honor of being the largest island in the world has been held by quite a number of islands at various stages of geographical knowledge. School children were taught for many years that Australia was the largest island. Then Australia came properly to be regarded as one of the continental masses and Borneo took its place as the largest island. Less than twenty years ago it was discovered that New Guinea was larger than Borneo and so the latter island took second place. When Peary practically outlined the northern coast of Greenland, early in the last decade geographers began to think that they had overlooked an important section of the earth's surface and so they placed Greenland at the head of the list of islands. At last Baffin Land looms up as an island 1,005 statute miles in length, with a breadth varying from 200 to 500 miles, the average being 305 miles. Its area is therefore about 300,000 square miles. In other words, the island is larger than the state of Texas by about 40,000 square miles or about ten times as large as either Scotland or Ireland. Though it takes its place as second in the list of islands, Baffin Land appears to be of no great value, since it is composed, as far as we know, of barren rocks, partly covered with ice. The twelve largest islands in the world in order of size, are: Greenland, Baffin Land, New Guinea, Borneo, Madagascar, Sumatra, Nippon (the largest island of Japan), Great Britain, Celebes, New Zealand (South island), Java and Cuba.—Chicago Chronicle.

Military Pensions in England.

England is imitating the pension system in the United States. There is a bill in parliament providing for a scheme for pensioning the widows and orphans of soldiers who have died in the South African war. This measure is being hastened by the officials of the war office in order to stimulate enlistments in the army, which are now very slow.

The British ..Soldier..

Regarded as a Brute by His Aristocratic Officers.

Much has been said about the hardihood and bravery of the British soldier, writes Bradford Daniels, who served 10 months in South Africa during the present war, but as I saw him both on the veldt and in the hospital his robusiness may be seriously questioned. Often the regular, when he arrived at Cape Town, was not in a fit condition for an arduous campaign. Excesses had sapped his strength to such an extent that a body of regulars, trained as they were to carry a heavy kit and to march, could not follow any of the colonial corps for even two hours of hard marching. Many a regular died in the hospital from comparatively slight wounds because his blood was tainted while beside some dangerously wounded colonial who had lived a clean life, recovered.

The regular's bravery cannot be questioned, however. He simply laughs at death; and, all through the war, the English infantry would attack impregnable positions which the more wary colonial troops would never think of attacking. But this courage is largely the courage of the brute which does not realize what death is. To live in a hospital filled with regulars after a big engagement and hear them, even before their wounds are closed, fill the air with jibes and curses and all the old obscene language of the barrack-room, strips them of all the romance in which fiction has clothed them and leaves them in the light of men who do not value life because they do not know its significance.

But there is every excuse to be made for Tommy Adkins. The army takes him in his ignorance and, instead of attempting to make a man of him, tries to crush all the self-assertive element that might make him insubordinate when ill-treated, and leaves him simply a machine to execute military maneuvers. So long as he keeps out of trouble and is present at roll call no further notice is taken of him. Usually the officers over him are rich and aristocratic and absorbed in social life. According to their standards a soldier is little better than a brute. That he is young, ignorant, among strangers and surrounded with temptations that would corrupt any but the strongest characters is all ignored by those who profess to have him in charge. If he breaks the law the extenuating circumstances of the case are not considered.

A woman always has her suspicions of a man who never lies to her.

CLERICS HIS VICTIMS

A Slick Swindler Who Made His Living on That Class.

One morning a man came to me with a letter written on stamped paper and signed with the name of a clergyman of my church in a town in Massachusetts, says a writer in the Ladies' Home Journal. His story, told in great embarrassment, was that he had run away from home. According to the letter his aged mother was dying with grief, and the appeal of the rector was to the man to come back at once. The minister's check for $8, drawn on a bank in the same town was inclosed with which to pay car fare. He was distressed and was anxious to go, but the difficulty was that he had been in New York only five days, knew no one and could not be identified at any bank. Would I cash the check? I told him to come back in a couple of hours, and meantime I telegraphed inquiries to Rev. C——. The answer came back: "Do not know any such man." When the fellow returned he was arrested, and in his pocket a neatly kept memorandum book was found containing the names of nearly every clergyman in Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburg and Philadelphia. This had been his route. On each page of the book were four columns, headed, "Name, date, amount and remarks," and in these were such entries as: "Rev. R——, $4. Got after an hour's work." "Rev. S——. No good. Can't work." "Rev. T——, $6. An easy mark." The dates ran back through three years. When he had completed his tour he would probably either have sold his book for some one else to use, or he would have changed his appearance, invented a new story and approached a second time the people who were worth it.

American Argonauts.

F. L. B. asks: "Why were the people who crossed the plains in 1849 to seek gold in California called "American Argonauts," as well as "Forty-niners"? Answer.—The name was applied to them by Bret Harte in his ballads of the "Forty-niners." The similarity of their conditions suggested the quest of the Argonauts of Greek antiquity. The original Argonauts are reputed to have undertaken a long journey into unknown seas. The expedition was under the command of Jason and its purported object was to fetch from Colchis the golden fleece of a ram which was suspended on an oak and guarded by a sleepless dragon. The adventurous spirit of the "Forty-niners" may be compared to that of the early Argonauts, hence the application of the name.—Ed.

Rich Men Without Change.

It is a rather curious fact that very rich men are so often caught without money in their pockets. The late George W. Childs was so careless in this respect, that not infrequently other passengers in street cars would pay his fare for him.—Philadelphia Record.

UNIQUE WEDDING PRESENT.

This Is the Odd Gift of an English Soldier to His Bride-Elect.

The question so often asked: "What shall I give her for a wedding present?" has been answered in an original manner by an Englishman, who bestowed upon his bride-elect the unique memento of a piece of his own skull, tastefully set in gold. Such an offering could not be general under the best circumstances, for, after all, a skull has its limits, and a fellow must retain enough to cover the little brain he possesses, or there would be no marriage ceremony.

In the present instance, this sentimental giver had his head cracked by a Boer, and the surgeon who did the trepanning kindly "saved the pieces." When the man recovered he took one bit, after it had been cured, to a jeweler, who fashioned a fetching little frame for it. The bride, it is said, now wears the souvenir next her heart; but when she can have the real thing, it does seem silly. However, the real pinch will come when divorce is in the air.

What Is "Nothing?"

An old Scotch farmer, being elected a member of the local school board, visited the school and tested the intelligence of the class by his questions. The first inquiry was:

"Noo, boys, can ony o 'ye ell me what nathing is?"

After a moment's silence, a small boy in the back seat arose and replied

"It's what ye gie me t'other day for haudin' yer horse!"—London Answers.

Disease and Remedy.

"That must be a pretty bad toothache to swell your face like that. Why don't you see a dentist?"

"I did call on my friend, Dr. Pullem, yesterday, and experienced great relief."

"You must be mistaken. Pullem has been out of town for a week."

"I know. I felt relieved when I found that out."—Philadelphia Press.

Consolation and Comfort.

Who is it that does not wish to be out in the open air or alive in some field of sport, whether it be with the bat, rod or gun; whether we go coasting over the hills and vales on the wheel or sailing over rough waves or into serene coves, it is all sport, and the springing muscles seem to need it. It is bound to happen that some mishap will occur. Thus it is that we have sprains in abundance. Light sprains, sprains that cripple, sprains that give great pain, sprains that rob us of sleep, but sportsmen of all kinds have come to know that there is nothing better than the old, reliable St. Jacob's Oil. Have it with you for use; you may rely on its cure of the worst sprain and restoration to the comforts of life.

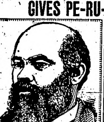
A METHODIST BISHOP GIVES PE-RU-NA GREAT CREDIT.



BISHOP GRANT, OF INDIANAPOLIS.

Writes His Recommendation for the Famous Catarrh Remedy, Pe-ru-na.

Bishop A. Grant of Indianapolis, Ind., writes the following letter:

Indianapolis, Indiana,
3349 N. Pennsylvania Street.
Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Gentlemen—"I have been using Peruna for catarrh and can cheerfully recommend your remedy to anyone who wants a good medicine."—A. Grant.

Prominent members of the clergy are giving Peruna their unqualified endorsement. These men find Peruna especially adapted to preserve them from catarrh of the vocal organs which has always been the bane of public speakers, and general catarrhal debility incident to the sedentary life of the clergyman. Among the recent utterances of noted clergymen on the curative virtues of Peruna is the above one from Bishop Grant.

The day was when men of prominence hesitated to give their testimonials to proprietary medicines for publication. This remains true today of most proprietary medicines. But Peruna has become so justly famous, its merits are known to so many people of high and low station that none hesitates to see his name in print recommending Peruna.

The following letters from pastors who use Peruna speak for themselves:

Rev. E. G. Smith, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, of Greensboro, Ga., writes:

"My little boy had been suffering for some time with catarrh of the lower bowels. Other remedies had failed, but after taking two bottles of Peruna the trouble almost entirely disappeared. For this special malady I consider it well nigh a specific."—Rev. E. G. Smith.

Rev. A. S. Vaughn, Eureka Springs, Ark., says: "I had been prostrated by congestive chills and was almost dead; as soon as able to be about, I commenced the use of Peruna. I took five bottles; my strength returned rapidly and I am now enjoying my usual health."—Rev. A. S. Vaughn.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

God reigns and the government at Washington still lives.—James A. Garfield on the assassination of President Lincoln in 1865.

Henry E. Lee, of Anoka, is a candidate for state auditor, providing R. C. Dunn does not wish to serve another term. Mr. Lee is well qualified for this office, and has a host of friends throughout the state who will work hard for his success.

The Brainerd Dispatch sums up the matter in one sentence, and it reads this way: When a man declares himself an anarchist he thereby proclaims himself a murderer when the opportunity presents itself, and he should be treated accordingly.

Thief River Falls undoubtedly contains as many patriots as any city of its size in the United States and this fact was proven by the sincere expressions of sympathy over the assassination of President McKinley to be heard everywhere. Democrats and Populist, who had been opposed to the election of McKinley, were as earnest in their denunciations of the cowardly act as Republicans.

Secretary Gage's announced determination to break up the nests of anarchists in various parts of the country is commendable in the extreme. It should be made impossible for the wretches to assemble and plot villainy. They can be scattered at least and the utmost efforts of the secret service should be put forth to that end. Much can be accomplished by a well planned campaign.—Minneapolis Times.

SMALL BLAZE

Fire Damaged Coenen & Pederson's Cigar Factory.

Fire Monday evening was discovered in Coenen & Pederson's cigar factory, but was put out before much damage was done to the building, although a great deal of the stock was ruined. The origin of the fire is thought to have been from a stove. There was a strong wind and had any headway been gained it would have proved a disasterious fire. Coenen & Pederson had insurance to the amount of $300 upon their stock.

PERTINENT POINTERS.

A Tax Payer—I see by the council proceedings that the present city council does not intend to take any action regarding the putting in of a system of water works and sewerage, claiming that they do not know the sentiment of the people. I believe there was a petition presented to this august body a short time ago containing the names of men who pay four-fifths of the taxes here, who favored seeing the work done, and it might be a good idea for them to read it over again. The people want both waterworks and sewerage, and if the present city council does not give it to them—well, there is an election this fall.

W. C. Smiley—I am creditably informed that the amount of business done by the Great Northern at this point is nearly double the business done at all the other stations combined on this branch.

H. Fant—The people up in the Thief lake country are very desirous of having telephone communication with this city, and I may build a line up there this winter. If I build I will eventually extend it to Roseau and Warroad.

City Attorney Mabey—While it is not very clear, I do not think the new election law will apply to our city election this fall. I have written to the attorney general about the matter and expect an answer in a few days.

H. W. Lee—I am not a prophet—or a son of a prophet—but I predict that we will have a long and cold winter.

Third Ward Voter—The people on the East Side want "Joe" Crowe for alderman, and they are going to elect him, too.

Something in Glass very different from the usual, is generally to be found in our stock of REAL AMERICAN CUT GLASS, and prices are sure to be less than the average. We make it a point to hunt up and secure things which the factories have just produced, and which are of new design.

The recent christening of a Maine schooner by strewing pinks and roses on the dock was a pleasant departure from the usual practice of breaking a bottle of champagne over the bow, and especially fitting in a prohibition state.

An old woman died in a squalid attic in a poor quarter of Paris the other day under conditions suggesting persistent starvation. On the removal of the body from the attic the police found that in drawers and corners the deceased had hidden £1,000 in gold, as well as title deeds which were worth £400 a year.

There has been discovered in China a curious picture, evidently of great antiquity, which is supposed to represent Noah's Ark resting on the top of Mount Ararat. As is well known, the religious literature of almost every nation and race contains an account of a deluge, and a Chinese manuscript recently unearthed follows very closely the story recorded in the Bible.

One of the Russian railways has recently ordered its signalmen not to sleep on the track. They had been in the habit of doing this, it is said, relying on being awakened by the vibration caused by an approaching train; but several of them, failing to awake, were killed by the cars; therefore the order. We do things better in this country. Our railroad men are seldom worked to such a pitch of fatigue —and they are by nature wide-awake.

California's Yosemite Valley Commissioners have decided to establish a plant to light the hotels and main roads in the valleys of the reservation, and are considering a plan for searchlights over the falls and peaks; all so much to the distaste of the Sierra Club that a protest has been made and if the commissioners go on with it an effort will be made to get the Yosemite out of the local politicians' hands and into those of the United States government.

The act of union between Sweden and Norway provides that the king shall spend part of the year in Norway. This time has usually been limited. A change in this respect is now contemplated, and it is proposed constitutionally to compel the king to spend the same length of time in Norway as in Sweden—say in one, two or three years at a time in each country. It is believed that this measure, if adopted, will render the monarchy more popular with the Norwegians, who are longing to see the throne of King Haaken and King Sverre raised again on the soil of Norway.

Just how long pensions may continue illustrated by the fact that there are still four widows of revolutionary soldiers on the rolls. According to the same continuation and considering the average of life increasing, this government may be paying pensions on account of the Spanish war as late as 2018. It will not be for any lack of applications, which already number 44,000, of which nearly 4,000 have been granted. And the revolutionary wards are not the only ones with long lives, for within the past year two widows of the war of 1812 and 325 widows of the Mexican war were added to the list.

Souls can not be estimated in shekels, says the Evangelist, and yet there does seem to be an unwelcome significance in the fact that, as some one has estimated last year, the sum of $3,300,000 was expended in Greater New York for the current expenses of Protestant churches, while the increase in membership was only 5,278. Yet the fault, continues the Evangelist, of these facts is not to be blamed wholly upon the members of the churches, as so many very glibly say, but in large measure to be attributed to the desperately wicked worldliness of great masses of our time, who, in spite of all manner of gospel advantages and appeals, go on their way, like Gallio of old, caring for none of these things.

The butter of Denmark is considered superior to that of all other countries. It brings the highest price in fancy markets, and can be found all over the world in shops where luxuries are sold. In South America, South Africa, in the East and West Indies, in India, Egypt, and in tropical countries generally it is used by epicures, who pay $1 a pound for it in tins of one, two and three pounds' weight. No other country has been able to produce butter that will stand changes of climate so well. In Holland and Sweden attempts are made to compete with the Danish dairymen, but the butter from those countries is worth only half as much and does not keep half as well, while the efforts of dairymen in the United States have practically failed with a few isolated exceptions.

Rapid progress is being made upon the new subway beneath the River Thames, communicating Poplar on the one side with Greenwich upon the other. It is being constructed upon the same principle as the Blackwall tunnel, the success of which prompted the boring of this subway and the projection of several other similar tunnels at various points to facilitate communications between the two banks of the river. Poplar and Greenwich are two busy working centers, and this new tunnel will prove a great boon to the working population.

IN A STATE OF FERMENT.

Crowd Driven Back From the Jail Where Czolgosz Is Confined.

Buffalo, Sept. 13.—The city, not only in those parts near the Milburn house, but all over and even out in the exposition grounds, went into a state of ferment when the news of the sudden collapse of the president was announced. The ill news of the early day had been somewhat softened by the later afternoon announcement that there was a slight improvement, and the sudden announcement of approaching dissolution came as a great surprise.

At the Pan-American grounds it was announced that he was dead and the majority of the immense crowd turned toward the city. In the city itself the papers refrained from any anticipation, but made it understood that there was no hope. It seemed but an instant when crowds formed at every corner, swarmed towards the newspaper bulletins and when they found that the rumors were confirmed, somebody shouted

"Let's Find the Assassin!"

With one impulse the crowd started for the station house where Czolgosz is confined. Telephones were utilized and the police notified and when the crowd arrived they found the police out in force. Supt. Bull, anticipating trouble, called out the entire force and in addition asked fourth brigade headquarters to be in readiness to assist. Col. Welch, in charge, answered by ordering two companies each from the Sixty-fifth and Seventy-fourth regiments to their armories to await immediate call. Around the station house at 8 o'clock it was estimated that at least 6,000 people were gathered. They were not particularly ugly, and when the police proceeded to drive them back there was little resistance.

RED RAG WAVED.

An Incident Tending to Show That Czolgosz Had Accomplices.

Warsaw, Ind., Sept. 13—An incident, previous to the attempt of Czolgosz to assassinate President McKinley came to light here to-day, and tends to show the would-be assassin had accomplices. Miss Mary Simons, a daughter of W. H. Simons, a prominent citizen of Warsaw, has returned from Buffalo, and states that she voluntarily appeared before District Attorney Penny, through the advice of friends in Buffalo. She said:

"Although I was not in the Temple of Music when the president was shot, I was within hearing distance when he made his speech the day previous. I noticed a red flag, about two feet in diameter, wave in the crowd several times and then disappear. I paid no particular attention to it. The following day, after the president was shot, I recalled the incident, and became convinced that it was a signal to Czolgosz from a confederate."

Miss Simons related to District Attorney Penny her story, which was corroborated by her sister and a Miss Myers, both of whom saw the red flag. That the authorities attached some significance to her statement is shown by the fact that she was told not to mention the incident to newspaper reporters at Buffalo.

SILENT GRIEF.

New Yorkers Spend the Day in Comparative Quiet.

New York, Sept. 13.—This city manifested its grief at the tidings from Buffalo concerning the hopeless condition of President McKinley's case by eagerly seeking for the latest news. Of excitement there was none, for the city was prepared for the worst. Large numbers of people scanned the bulletin boards of the newspaper offices, waiting for the announcement of the president's death, but the crowd was not dense, and no expressions but those of sorrow were heard as the succeeding bulletins told of the hopeless fight for life.

If threats were made against anarchists they were not in loud or angry tones. There was no gathering whatever near the Tombs, where Herr Most is being kept in solitary confinement.

All the Broadway playhouse managers started their performances, but stood ready to stop the plays on hearing the news of the president's death. Their announced intention was to stop the play immediately, no matter if an act were on or not, after announcing to the audience the news.

The services in all the Jewish synagogues which marked the eve of the Jewish New Year, were turned from one of rejoicing to one o fgrief. Special extempore prayers were offered by the rabbis for the president and his wife, and during their delivery the large congregations of worshippers manifested deep emotion.

PROTECTION FOR THE PRESIDENT.

Law Making an Assault Upon Chief Executive Punishable by Death.

Washington, Sept. 13.—Messrs. Botkin and Bynum, members of the commission to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States, since the attempt upon the life of the president have been investigating the authorities with a view to the preparation of a law making an assault upon the president with intent to murder cognizable in the courts of the United States and punishable by death. They have prepared a draft of a bill to be submitted to congress, making assault upon the president a felony and punishable by death, when the assault is for the purpose of obstructing the operations of government. It is believed that this qualification will have the effect of giving the federal courts jurisdiction in such cases.

CZOLGOSZ IS STRUNG UP.

Children Vent Spite on Assassin's Effigy.

Chicago, Sept. 13.—Czolgosz was hanged in effigy at Oak and Larrabee streets this noon by a number of children. More than 500 persons collected and the Larrabee street electric cars were delayed for some time. The effigy consisted of a straw man, on which was the placard:

"Czolgosz, Anarchist."

This was hung by a rope around its neck from a trolley wire in Larrabee street. The cars could not pass while the effigy hung from the wire and the shouts of the children collected a crowd.

Officer Johnson was called and cut the object down. At the approach of the officer, the children ran away. After it was cut down the cars were started and the crowd dispersed.

MOST IS LOCKED UP.

He Fails to Furnish Bail to Appear for Preliminary Examination.

New York, Sept. 13.—Johann Most who was arrested last night on the charge of circulating incendiary literature calculated to incite unlawful act was arraigned in police court to-day. At the prisoner's request his hearing was set for Monday, Sept. 16. The assistant district attorney asked that Most be held in $2,500 bail, but the magistrate said the prisoner was only charged with a misdemeanor and fixed the bail at $1,000. Most was locked up in default of bail.

PLOT IN ENGLAND

CHAMBERLAIN, THE COLONIAL SECRETARY, WAS TO BE KILLED.

PLOTTER MURDERED BY HIS DUPE

Frenchman Who Declined to Assassinate the British Colonial Secretary Is Compelled to Kill the Instigator — King Edward Doubly Guarded by the Most Expert Secret Service Men.

London, Sept. 13. — A Frenchman named Marshal Faugerou, who has been in jail for a week on a remand charged with murdering a German named Jung in the Clarkenwell district, stated in the police court yesterday that there was a plot to assassinate Joseph Chamberlain, the colonial secretary, and that Jung had suggested that he (Faugerou) should commit the crime. When Faugerou was informed that he would be committed for trial on the charge of murdering Jung, he said that about six weeks ago, when he was out of work another foreigner spoke to him outside a restaurant. This man told Faugerou that he need not work, and took him to Jung's house. Jung said to him that it was absurd that some persons should have their purses full of money while others had none. Jung added: "There must be Equality for Everybody."

Before Faugerou left Jung gave him a pound note. On a subsequent visit Jung said to him: "Don't you think all the misery of the Transvaal war is due to Chamberlain, and that he deserves to be stabbed to make him feel a little of the misery he has inflicted upon others? I will not take any risks myself, but will undertake through intermediaries to guarantee protection to the man who will do the deed." Faugerou went on to say that Jung showed him an invoice for £10 which he said "was for the purpose of allowing you to dress yourself decently in order to accomplish this object."

Jung added: "I do not expect to see the man who introduced me to you (whose name is Doots) again. The latter has gone to do his duty. I hope you will do yours. I mean to kill Mr. Chamberlain."

Faugerou said in reply: "I will not do it."

Jung then demanded back the money which he had advanced, a fight ensued in which Jung was killed.

In Self-Defense.

Faugerou concluded his statement by saying that he had committed the crime and pleaded guilty, but added. "But I committed the murder in legitimate self-defense. I regret the murder, not for Jung himself, but for the sake of his family. I think I have done a favor to the country."

Faugerou then signed and swore to his statement, and was then committed to custody. There are two extraordinary features about the case. In the first place, Faugerou has been kept in the closest custody for a week and could not have known of Czolgosz's attempt on the life of President McKinley and the world-wide denunciation of anarchists. The second is that the most expert secret service detectives in England have recently been working short-handed on account of the doubling of the guard around King Edward.

RULERS MEET ABOARD SHIP.

Emperor William Greets Emperor Nicholas.

Dantzic, Sept. 13.—The imperial Russian yacht Standart, with the czar on board, was sighted off this port at 3:30 p. m. yesterday, escorted by the German imperial yacht Hohenzollern, with Emperor William on board, and the Russian cruiser Variag and the German cruisers Sleipner and Niobe. The meeting between Emperor Nicholas and Emperor William was favored with perfect weather. The Hohenzollern, flying the German and Russian imperial standards at the main, welcomed the Standart with an imperial salute, which the Standart returned. Both crews dressed ship while the bands played the Russian and German national anthems. Count Platteua, the kaiser's aide, went on board the Standart to escort the czar, who went on board the Hohenzollern. The kaiser received his imperial visitor at the gangway, where the two monarchs embraced each other, then inspected the guard of honor together, after which they retired to the deck, where they remained in animated conversation until luncheon, where the czar sat on the right of the kaiser and Grand Duke Alexis on the left.

Troy, N. Y., Sept. 13.—A cloudburst broke over this city shortly before 3 o'clock yesterday and damage resulted to the amount of about $50,000. The wind blew a hurricane. Windows were crushed in and trees blown down.

VETERANS IN REVIEW.

Boys in Blue Participate in a Magnificent Parade.

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 13.—The surviving veterans of the Civil war known as the Grand Army of the Republic again responded to the bugle call yesterday. They awoke yesterday morning to the sound of reveille and long before the hour set for the starting of the parade, lined the streets and avenues adjacent to Case and Euclid avenues, where the parade was to be formed. Old veterans prominent in the affairs of the G. A. R. said it was the grandest parade and the greatest day the organization had ever seen. In a seemingly interminable line of blue the various departments took up their march. Surging masses of people, numbering in the hundreds of thousands, lined the streets and covered the housetops and took advantage of every available point of view along the entire line of parade. It is estimated that nearly half a million people witnessed the magnificent pageant. Promptly at the hour set for the parade to move Gen. Leo Rassieur, commander-in-chief, gave the signal and the column moved forward. The governors of several states marched in line with their respective posts and did not hesitate to go afoot with their old comrades in the old way. Even Senator M. A. Hanna caught the infection of the hour and left the reviewing stand and marched down the line with Memorial post. It is expected that the patriotic outburst of yesterday will be repeated this afternoon, when a mass-meeting will be held in praise and thanksgiving for the prospective recovery of President McKinley. Senator Hanna, Gov. Nash of Ohio, Mayor Johnson of Cleveland, Gen. Rassieur of the Grand Army, Judge William R. Day of Canton, Senator Fairbanks of Indiana, Hon. Charles Grosvenor and Rev. Dr. Manchester, the president's pastor, will address the meeting.

IMPORTANT FIND IN CHICAGO.

Two Hundred Names and Addresses of Persons Said to Be Anarchists.

Chicago, Sept. 13.—What may have an important connection with the present agitation against anarchists was uncovered by the Maxwell street police yesterday. A list of 200 names and addresses of persons said to be anarchists was found by Sergt. Frank Bernard and turned over to Capt. Wheeler. The latter was elated at the find, and expressed deep satisfaction. That the list will prove of deep importance to the police in their investigation of the anarchists is admitted.

AFTER-HARVEST

Like to git away fum folks,
  Work an' worry, too,
When the crops is harvested
  An' nothin' else to do,
Take a hook 'n line along
  Where the eddies quiver,
Wishin' wuz a boy agin,
  Down along the river.

Watchin' out along the bank
  Where's a little hazy,
Nothin' jes' to think about,
  Feelin' sort o' lazy.
Fishes nibble mighty sof,
  'S if I can't diskiver,
Close m' eyes 'n let 'em nib,
  Down along the river.

Never any trouble come,
  Natur sort o' smilin',
Birds a chirpin' mighty sweet,
  Sun is mos' a bilin';
Jes' a loungin' lazily,
  Chawin' on a sliver;
No one richerer 'n me,
  Down along the river.

Never carin' what's the time,
  Eatin' doesn't trouble;
Dreamin' uv when wuz a boy,
  Watchin' ever' bubble.
Wouldn't try to ketch a fish,
  Hate to see 'em quiver.
Kind o' feller feelin' like,
  Down along the river.

Ef the devil's temptin' 'n
  Yer feelin' mighty weak,
Resistin' his indoocements
  'N cunnin' way he speak,
Git on yer oldest "tog out,"
  Satan then 'll shiver,
Knowin' well he's lost ye,
  Down along the river.

Ef I wuz a doctor chap
  An' nothing else to do
But feelin' folkses pulses
  'Ats bein' sick an' blue,
Never'd git to physikin',
  Bes' thing for the liver
'S jes' a dose o' hook 'n line,
  Down along the river.

Concerning An Offer.

BY GARRARD HARRIS.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"And so this is the end?" There was a hopeless note in his voice. She looked in the fire, avoiding his gaze.

"Yes."

"And you are doing this voluntarily?"

"Certainly—there's no one to coerce me. It is my choosing."

"Then you care nothing for me?"

"No, no—on the contrary, I like you a great deal."

"Are you in the habit of encouraging young men you merely 'like' to kiss you,—remember the night on the crags in the moonlight?"

"I didn't encourage you—you made all the advances, and—and you just did it, anyhow. That was what I liked—about you."

"And you no longer think my right arm was 'built for you to cuddle up in,' eh?"

"Don't," she held up her hand deprecatingly.

"That's what you said that night—and times too numerous to mention since."

"And it always had the same effect—of making you more determined and persistent."

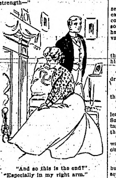
He started, and looked at her keenly. Then he moved his chair closer. She glanced at him a little apprehensively.

"Remember how the moonlight looked on the water that night, and how we wished we could run hand in hand along that silvery path until we came to away off, where it ended, and with his offer? And how did his business instinct lead him to make it—so much per pound 'on the hoof,' or an advance 'dressed'?"

"Hush up—you haven't any room to talk; you have never offered anything."

"Never had anything to offer, compared with old porkchops."

"You've got youth, and health, and strength—"

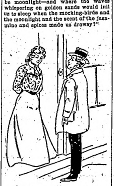


"And so this is the end?"

"Especially in my right arm."

"You are very annoying at times—and a good prospect, and you come of good people, and you're a jolly fellow—"

we would find a land where there would be nothing but blue skies and flowers and trees by day, and all nights would be moonlight—and where the waves whispering on golden sands would lull us to sleep when the mocking-birds and the moonlight and the scent of the jasamine and spices made us drowsy?"



"I've changed my mind—it's no."

"Yes, I remember it all, Robert, but, unfortunately, we can't walk on the water, we can't go to that pretty isle, and we've got to face a world in which we pay as we go, and those who can't pay don't go."

"Ah-h, I begin to see. How much is he worth?"

"Your perception does you credit. Oh, I don't know—some absurdly large amount."

"Made it killing pigs, and sheep, and cows, and packing up broken-down street car horses for corned beef, didn't he?"

"How do I know?"

"And he's fifty-eight, and says 'I seen'; makes pleasant noises when he eats; wears loud clothes and tells the cost of everything—speaks of his associates as 'gent' and 'lady friends' and has promised you a house on the boulevard?"

"Who told you?"

"No one. I saw it was evident that there were great inducements besides his charming and refined personality."

"Well, I don't care."

"That is very evident—ero. What has driven you to such a step?"

Silence.

"I say, why are you going to marry this man?"

"Oh, well—because."

"I'll bet the Oracle at Delphi took lessons in ambiguity from a woman. So you don't want any love in a cottage—or flat—only on the crags—and the boulevard?"

"It isn't a question of what one wants, in this world, Robert, but what one can get, or is forced to take."

"Say, did he send a certified check?"

"Stock advancing rapidly—strong bull movement—porkchops and preserved hay-burners declining steadily—why, I'm quite a catch!"

"There are worse ones."

"Do you know—excuse personalities—that you have a deuced pretty ankle?"

She surveyed it as it rested on the fender, and blushed.

"That isn't my fault."

"But if prettiness could be called a fault, then I'd like to shoulder the responsibility and call it my fault—may I?"

"Really, you must have been studying Delphic utterances yourself—I don't comprehend."

He moved to the lounge, where she was sitting on one end.

"Don't, Robert," she said.

"You said that once or twice before, but you didn't really mean it."

"Yes, I did—I do. Stop!"

"I won't—not until you promise to marry me. We will get along all right—a flat isn't so bad, and a cottage is delightful."

"It sounds nice, and I'm tempted."

"Do, dearest; we'd be happy, and you'd never regret it—never."

"I'll think about it—"

"No, you won't. Yes or no, right now!"

"Well—n—yes!"

And late that night, at the front door, she leaned out and said.

"Robert, I've changed my mind; it's 'no.' The cottage and flat may be very nice, but—I'll take the brownstone and boulevard."

"Well, I'll be damned," said Robert, as he walked down the street wondering.

Well, old Chops may die some day —then maybe she'll take me, and she'll have all the money, too. Maybe it's all right, but it's devilish hard now. I hate to see her marry that beast, though." He turned into his club.

"Party at the 'phone wants you right now, this minute, sir!" said the porter. Robert went to the 'phone.

"Is that you, Robert?"

"Yes; what is it?"

"I just wanted to tell you, I've changed my mind, and I can't bear the idea of losing you, and I'll never eat another porkchop as long as I live, and I'll marry you in the morning before breakfast, and I won't live in a brownstone on the boulevard, if you had it!"

"Well, I'll be da—— All right—thanks—I'll be around at eight in the morning with the preacher, before you change your mind again."

A Sensitive Instrument.

Among the new scientific inventions for which a patent has been secured, is one that the inventor calls the kryptophone. It was brought before the scientific world some years ago, but owing to some defects in construction it failed to fulfil the promises made for it. Since then it has been perfected to such a degree that it is now regarded as promising successful practical results in the line marked out by its inventor. In the make up of this peculiar apparatus, a very sensitive receiving diaphragm is so disposed that it will respond to and transmit air vibrations produced by any noise to a distant telephone, an alarm bell being provided at the receiving station to attract the attention of the attendant. The sensitiveness of the device is said to be such that, with the receiving diaphragm immersed in a body of water, the pulsations of a steamboat from two to three miles distant are discernible, and other tests show its sensitive capacity in giving warning of noises at a distance. This is in line with the telescope, the telephone, and other inventions. Man is always trying to extend the powers of his body and find aids for his senses. It is much to be wished that he would avail himself of the greatest of all such powers, the power of faith, by which he would perceive more than he can ever hope to see.

The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen (Rom. 1: 20.)—Christian Herald.

A Meal for a Cent.

There is a restaurant in the Whitechapel district of London where a relishing and fairly substantial meal may be had for a half-penny, or 1 cent in our money. This cheap repast is not served up in the shape of a cut from a joint and two vegetables. It is a big brown pie, very juicy and very hot. The absence of beefsteak is evident when you cut the pie, but you find inside a liberal sprinkling of sheep's liver, onions and turnips and a plentiful supply of gravy. For a half-penny extra two slices of bread and a cup of tea are supplied. Between the hours of 12 and 2 the poor and hungry from all parts of the east end of the city flock to the dining-room. Most of the patrons are shoeblacks, penny-toy men, costermongers and now and then young clerks whose salaries will not permit them to indulge in a more costly dinner.—Chicago News.

Fine Architecture a Civic Duty.

Like old wine, a beautiful building grows more precious with the years, for time deals tenderly and lovingly with its lines and colors. Our national capitol and white house, Independence hall and Christ church in Philadelphia, the state house and King's chapel in Boston, the city hall and St. Paul's and Old Trinity in New York to-day have a rarer charm than when they first stood forth in the freshness of new masonry and sharp profiles. When a city or state erects a beautiful structure it returns to the taxpayers a large interest upon their investment, in which the humblest citizen can share without cutting coupons in a bank vault to claim it with-al.—Harper's Weekly.

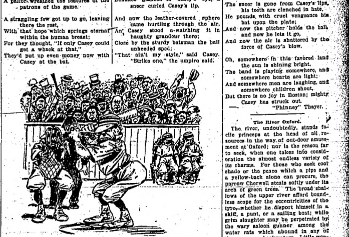
CASEY AT THE BAT

Published by Request.

It looked extremely rocky for the Boston nine that day;
The score stood two to four, with but an inning left to play.
So when Cooney died at second, and Burrows did the same,
A pallor wreathed the features of the patrons of the game.

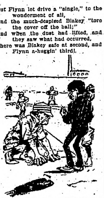
A straggling few got up to go, leaving there the rest,
With that hope which springs eternal within the human breast;
For they thought, "If only Casey could get a whack at that,"
They'd put up even money now with Casey at the bat.



"THE SNEER IS GONE FROM CASEY'S FACE, HIS TEETH ARE CLENCHED IN HATE."

But Flynn preceded Casey, and likewise so did Blake,
And the former was a puddin', and the latter was a fake;
So on that stricken multitude a deathlike silence sat,
For there seemed but little chance of Casey's getting to the bat.

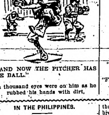
But Flynn let drive a "single," to the wonderment of all,
And the much-despised Blakey "tore the cover off the ball;"
And when the dust had lifted, and they saw what had occurred,
There was Blakey safe at second, and Flynn a-huggin' third!



"TEN THOUSAND EYES WERE ON HIM AS HE RUBBED HIS HANDS WITH DIRT."

Then from the gladdened multitude went up a joyous yell,
It rumbled in the mountain tops, it rattled in the dell;
It struck upon the hillside, and rebounded on the flat;
For Casey, mighty Casey, was advancing to the bat!

There was ease in Casey's manner as he stepped into his place,
There was pride in Casey's bearing, and a smile on Casey's face;
And when responding to the cheers, he lightly doffed his hat,
No stranger in the crowd could doubt 'twas Casey at the bat.

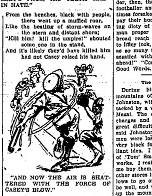


"AND NOW THE PITCHER HAS THE BALL."

Ten thousand eyes were on him as he rubbed his hands with dirt,
Five thousand tongues applauded when he wiped them on his shirt;
Then when the writhing pitcher ground the ball into his hip
Defiance glanced in Casey's eye, a sneer curled Casey's lip.

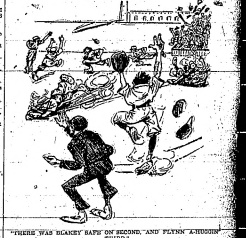
And now the leather-covered sphere came hurtling through the air,
An' Casey stood a-watching it in haughty grandeur there;
Close by the sturdy batsman the ball unheeded sped;
"That ain't my style," said Casey. "Strike one," the umpire said.

From the benches, black with people, there went up a muffled roar,
Like the beating of storm-waves on the stern and distant shore;
"Kill him! kill the umpire!" shouted some one in the stand,
And it's likely they'd have killed him had not Casey raised his hand.



"AND NOW THE AIR IS SHATTERED WITH THE FORCE OF CASEY'S BLOW."

With a smile of Christian charity great Casey's visage shone;
He stilled the rising tumult, he made the game go on;
He signaled to the pitcher, and once more the spheroid flew,
But Casey still ignored it, and the umpire said, "Strike two."



"THERE WAS BLAKEY SAFE ON SECOND, AND FLYNN A-HUGGIN' THIRD."

"Fraud!" cried the maddened thousands, and the echo answered "Fraud!"

But one scornful look from Casey and the audience was awed;
They saw his face grow stern and cold, they saw his muscles strain,
And they knew that Casey wouldn't let the ball go by again.

The sneer is gone from Casey's lips, his teeth are clenched in hate,
He pounds with cruel vengeance his bat upon the plate;
And now the pitcher holds the ball, and now he lets it go,
And now the air is shattered by the force of Casey's blow.

Oh, somewhere in this favored land the sun is shining bright,
The band is playing somewhere, and somewhere hearts are light;
And somewhere men are laughing, and somewhere children shout,
But there is no joy in Boston; mighty Casey has struck out.

The River Oxford.

The river, undoubtedly, stands facile princeps at the head of all resources in the way of out-door amusement at Oxford; nor is the reason far to seek, when one takes into consideration the almost endless variety of its charms. For those who seek cool shade or the peace which a pipe and a yellow-back alone can procure, the narrow Cherwell steals softly under its arch of green trees. The broad shallows of the upper river afford boundless scope for the eccentricities of the tyro, whether he disport himself in a skiff, a punt, or a sailing boat; while grim slaughter may be perpetrated by the wary saloon gunner among the water rats which abound in any of the numerous backwaters. Little wonder, then, that readingman, cricketer, footballer, and all the other "ers" at times forsake their household goods to pay their homage to the great presiding deity of Oxford. To the boating man proper who seeks fame in the broad reach from Salter's boathouse to Iffley lock, they may, indeed, appear as so many trifling interlopers, to be assailed with fierce shouts of "Look ahead!" "Confound you, sir!" etc.—Good Words.

The Mountain Devil.

During his explorations in the mountains of East Africa, Sir Henry Johnston, with 100 Zanzibars, was attacked by a very much larger body of Masai. The enemy made desperate charges and were beaten back with great difficulty. "Toward evening," said Johnston, telling the story, "my men were losing heart, and it looked very black for us, when I had a brilliant idea. I remembered I had a box of 'Tom' Smith's crackers and fireworks. I really don't know what made me buy them, but I added them to my other stores in London. I told my fellows to go on fighting and all would be well, and when night fell I climbed up the mountain side, unseen by the Masai, with a Zanzabari to carry the box, and half way up I let off the various squibs; and when the enemy, who are very superstitious, saw the streams of blue and red light blaze into the black sky from the mountains they instantly fled. It was, they said, the mountain devil fighting on our side, and they didn't stop to argue with him, you can be sure."—London Truth.

IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Native Bulls for Hauling Vehicles—Boys as Soldiers.

Maj. R. R. Stevens, chief quartermaster in the Philippines, thinks well of the native bull, or carabao, for transportation purposes. A cart with a single bull and driver costs $1.50 to $2 a day, Mexican. It transports about one-third or one-fourth as much as an escort wagon. Australian or trotting bulls are used on expedited lines. The system of these expedited lines for the supply of fresh beef and vegetables throughout the department has been brought to a great state of efficiency for the interior of Luzon. The chief surgeon in the Philippines objects strongly to the enlistment of youths under 21 for service there, as he has found such boys particularly prone to typhoid fever. When the first sense of novelty and adventure wears off the boy loses heart and becomes homesick. The chief surgeon's ideal army for the tropics would consist of men between 25 and 40. Contrary to the general disability from alcoholism, it is the native drink that produces insanity among soldiers. Capt. Thomas Cruse, depot quartermaster at Manila, points out in an official report that the sizes of clothing in the United States will not apply in the Philippines, because the American soldier out there soon loses considerably in his waist measure. A man taking a 30-inch leg and a 36-inch waist on arrival will, within six months, be wearing a 30-inch leg and a 32-inch waist.—Chicago News.

THE PRESIDENT IS DEAD

His Last Words Were an Humble Submission to the Will of the God in Whom He Trusted.

WAS RECONCILED TO HIS CRUEL FATE

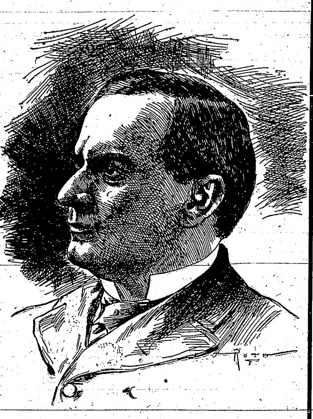
Mrs. McKinley Goes Through the Heart-Trying Leave-Taking With Bravery and Fortitude.

William McKinley, twenty-fifth president of the United States, died at the home of John D. Milburn in Buffalo, N. Y., at 2:15 o'clock Saturday morning, from the effects of an assassin's bullet.

Theodore Roosevelt, twenty-sixth president of the United States, succeeded to that exalted office under the constitution and laws of the country, and with the administration of the oath of office Saturday began the exercise of the functions of president.

In these statements are embraced the consummation of an awful tragedy and the historic event by which the entire administration of government is changed and a new administration comes into being.

But for the moment the transfer of the government is forgotten in the great sorrow which has befallen the nation in the passing of President McKinley, soldier, statesman, president, devoted husband and friend, he was beloved by all who knew him.



WILLIAM M'KINLEY,

Third Martyred President of the United States.

The death of President McKinley came in the small hours of the morning, under circumstances of peculiar wierdness. For hours he had lain unconsciously with all hope of his survival abandoned. As early as 6 o'clock Friday night the doctors had pronounced him a dying man, and soon thereafter the rigors of approaching death began to creep upon him. The administration of powerful stimulants was maintained until 7 o'clock, but with no effect.

It was seen that the end was near at hand, and those nearest and dearest to the stricken president were summoned for the offices of the last farewell. He came out of a stupor about 7 o'clock, and while his mind was partially clear there occurred the last endearments, the last submission of the sufferer to the will of the Almighty, the last murmured expressions from his dying lips, and the last good-byes.

Last Moments With Wife.

In this interval of consciousness Mrs. McKinley was brought into the death chamber. The president had asked to see her. She came and sat beside him, held his hand and heard from him his last words of encouragement and comfort. Then she was led away, and not again during his living hours did she see him.

The president himself fully realized that his hour had come, and his mind turned to his Maker. He whispered feebly, "Nearer my God to thee," the words of a hymn always dear to his heart. Then in faint accents, he murmured:

"Good-bye all; good-bye; it's God's way. His will be done; not ours."

With this sublime display of Christian fortitude, the president soon after lapsed into unconsciousness.

The members of the cabinet, grief-stricken, were gathered in the large drawing room of the Milburn house. The time had come when they, too, were to look upon the president for the last time in life.

They ascended the stairway, one after the other, noiselessly approaching the threshold of the chamber where the dying man lay and gazed within. Those who came first turned back appalled and overwhelmed, and did not pass within the chamber. Secretary Wilson remained below, unwilling to have imprinted on his memory the picture of his expiring chief. Secretary Long, who arrived on a late train, went at once to the chamber and passed directly to the bedside of the president, grasping the hand that was already clammy with approaching death.

Meantime, the president had lapsed into a state of complete unconsciousness, and it was perhaps minutes, when the end would come. By 10 o'clock there was no perceptible pulse. The extremities had grown cold, and the rigidity of death was fast falling upon the sufferer.

Only a Question of Hours,

The physicians, who remained at his side, detected only the faintest heartbeats. Some of them, knowing that all was over, departed, while others remained, not because there was any further need for their ministrations, but because of respect for the expiring president. Dr. Janeway, the eminent heart specialist, who had been summoned from New York, arrived shortly before midnight, and proceeded at once to the bedside of the president. An instant glance told him the time had passed for the slightest hope. He turned away, telling the assembled relatives and officials that the end was very near. Midnight came, and still the tremendous vitality of the president was battling against dissolution. Another hour passed so, and still another.

At 2 o'clock Dr. Rixey was the only physician in the death chamber. The others were in an adjoining room, while the relatives, cabinet officers and nearest friends were gathered in silent groups in the apartments below. As he watched and waited, Dr. Rixey noticed a slight, convulsive tremor. The president had entered the valley of the shadow of death.

Word was at once taken to the immediate relatives who were not present, to hasten for the last look upon the president in life. They came in groups, the women weeping and the men bowed and sobbing in their intense grief.

Grouped about the bedside at this final moment were the only brother of the president, Abner McKinley, and his wife; Miss Helen McKinley and Mrs. Sarah Duncan, sisters of the president; Miss Mary Barber, niece; Lieut. James F. McKinley, William M. Duncan and John Barber, nephews; F. M. Osborne, a cousin; Secretary George B. Cortelyou; Hon. Charles G. Dawes, controller of the currency; Col. Webb C. Hayes and Col. William C. Brown. With these directly and indirectly connected with the family were those others who had kept ceaseless vigil—the white-garbed nurses and the uniformed Marine hospital attendants. In the adjoining room were Doctors Charles McBurney, Eugene Wasdin, Roswell Park, Charles G. Stockton and Herman Mynter.

The minutes were now flying, and it was now 2:15 o'clock.

Silent and motionless, the circle of loving friends stood about the bedside.

Dr. Rixey leaned forward and placed his ear close to the breast of the expiring president. Then he straightened up and made an effort to speak.

"The President Is Dead," He Said.

The president had passed away peacefully, without the convulsive struggle of death. It was as though he had fallen asleep. As they gazed on the face of the martyred president, only the sobs of the mourners broke the silence of this chamber of death. Mr. Cortelyou had been one of the first to rouse himself after the stunning effect of the announcement of the death. He passed from the room and down the stairway.

There in the large drawing room were still assembled the members of the cabinet, officials high in the administration and in the confidence of the president. As he appeared at the threshold of the room they seemed to realize that the message of death had come. Mr. Cortelyou halted at the door, and, summoning all of his effort, he said: "Gentlemen, the president has passed away."

Realizing, too, the momentous nature of the event to the people of the country, Mr. Cortelyou stepped through the outer doorway of Milburn house and advanced down the walk to the newspaper men at the front gate, calmly announced: "The president died at 2:15 o'clock."

Thus closed the final chapter in the life of William McKinley. All that remained was to perform those gruesome offices which follow death. There was the sending of the official notices, the summoning of the funeral directors, the first hasty thoughts of the details of burial.

Within half an hour a carriage had brought those who were to take charge of the body. The autopsy, which had been decided upon for the early forenoon, rendered impossible the immediate embalming process. The corpse was laid upon a stretcher and covered by a sheet, remaining in the chamber where death had occurred. A uniformed guard of the United States army hospital corps was detailed for duty at the temporary bier.

At 3:30 o'clock the long crepe emblem of mourning was hung from the door of the house. It was of heavy material, of amplest width, caught together with a wide black ribbon.

Czolgosz a Murderer.

The wretch, Czolgosz, now stands accused of murder. The crime was committed with malice aforethought, and, as such, was murder in the first degree, the punishment for which, under the law of New York, is death in the electric chair.

Had the death of the president occurred at any other time than in the early hours of the morning, it would have boded ill to the evil genius of this fearful episode.

The angry spirit of the people had reached an intense pitch Friday night. Foreseeing the danger of possible riot, the police headquarters where Czolgosz is confined was roped off and the menacing thousands held at bay. The entire police force of the city, regulars and reserve, was held on duty all night. Two regiments of the National Guard of New York were at their armories, ready for instant service.

If the president's death had come before night it would have been difficult to avoid a conflict, (but the crowds gradually broke up as the new day came on; and by 2:15, when the death announcement came, the down-town thoroughfares were deserted. For the moment the anger of the outraged people is forgotten in their poignant grief, and this will doubtless consign Czolgosz to the swift and inevitable punishment provided by law.

EULOGISTIC SERMONS.

American Churches in Paris Crowded With American Residents and Visitors.

Paris, Sept. 15.—The American churches in Paris were crowded to-day with American residents and visitors with expectations of allusions to the death of President McKinley, and in every case the preachers made sympathetic allusions in their sermons and offered special prayers. Dr. Morgan, rector of the leading church, devoted his sermon to an eulogy of President McKinley. The interiors of the edifices were hung with crepe and French and American Flags. A solemn memorial service will be held at Dr. Morgan's church next Thursday, when Ambassador Porter and all the United States officials, together with a representative of President Loubet, a representative of the cabinet and members of the diplomatic corps will be present.

Gen. Porter is still confined to his room, but is making rapid progress toward recovery. He will convene a meeting of the American colony at his residence, probably Tuesday, when he will pronounce an eulogy and the assembly will adopt addresses to Mrs. McKinley and President Roosevelt.

A STATE FUNERAL

ARRANGEMENTS MADE FOR THE OBSEQUIES OF THE LATE PRESIDENT.

THE SERVICES IN WASHINGTON

Body Will Lie in State in the Capitol Tuesday, When the Funeral Exercises Will Be Held—The Funeral Train Will Leave for Canton Tuesday Evening and the Interment Will Take Place Thursday.

Washington, Sept. 16.—The following official statement making important changes in the plans for the funeral services over the remains of President McKinley in this city was given to the press last night:

In compliance with the earnest wishes of Mrs. McKinley that the body of her husband shall rest in her home at Canton Wednesday night, the following changes in the obsequies of the late president will be made:

Funeral services in the rotunda of the capitol will be held Tuesday morning on the arrival of the escort, which will accompany the remains from the White House. The body will lie in state in the rotunda for the remainder of Tuesday and will be escorted to the railroad station Tuesday evening. The funeral train will leave Washington at or about 9 o'clock Tuesday evening and thus will arrive at Canton during the day Wednesday.

The remains will arrive in Washington at 9 p. m. to-day and will be taken to the White House, where the body will remain until Tuesday morning.

Funeral Arrangements.

The heads of the various departments and their principal assistants were busy yesterday making arrangements for the proper execution of so much of the funeral program as fell to them respectively. Secretary Hay came to his desk early in the morning and remained through the day. Though it was Sunday cablegrams of condolence were still coming to the department of state from all parts of the world.

In the war department Acting Secretary Sanger was in consultation with Gen. Gillespie, Col. Ward and Gen. Barry, arranging for the transportation to Washington of the troops to participate in the funeral procession, making details for guard duty and other matters. Gen. Randolph, chief of artillery, who is to represent the army at the capitol, arranged with Sergeant-at-Arms Ransdell that they should cooperate in the management of the funeral ceremonies at the capitol. Four private soldiers will stand watch day and night, one at each corner of the catafalque, so long as the remains of the late president shall building. A suitable guard will be maintained at the entrances and will keep the people in alignment when they are admitted to the capitol to view the remains Tuesday.

Acting Secretary Hackett ordered that a detail should be made up consisting of two officers, four petty officers and twenty-one privates in the marine corps for duty at the capitol on Tuesday to supplement the army representation.

The special guard of honor to represent the navy at the funeral ceremonies will comprise the following officers of high rank: Admiral Dewey, Rear Admiral Crowninshield, Rear Admiral O'Neil, Paymaster General Remey and Brig. Gen. Heywood of the marine corps.

While Gen. Brooke will be in general charge of military arrangements here, Gen. Francis Guenther will be in command of the military contingent in the procession. Col. Samuel Reber, son-in-law to Gen. Miles, has been detailed to and look specially after her comfort, while Col. Henry H. Whitney of Gen. Miles' staff has been designated to perform a similar service for President Roosevelt.

Meet Mrs. McKinley

At the capitol Sergeant-at-Arms Ransdell directed the preparation of the rotunda for the funeral service. The space in even this vast structure is entirely insufficient to meet the demand for admission of more than a fraction of the persons who think they should be admitted to the services on Tuesday. The public will be excluded as the accommodations will not suffice for the officials who must be present. The diplomatic corps alone will occupy about 200 places if all the invitations sent out are accepted, and in addition there will be the United States senate, the United States supreme court, the house of representatives and a large number of officials, army and navy and civilians. Every army and navy officer in Washington having been ordered to attend the funeral service, they alone would consume a large portion of this seating space. The general public will have an opportunity to view the remains of the late president while the body lies in state before the funeral services.

EXERCISES AT CANTON.

Funeral Will Be in Charge of the Citizens.

Canton, Ohio, Sept. 16.—Judge William R. Day, former secretary of state, returned from Buffalo yesterday morning with instructions from the members of the cabinet as to arrangements for that part of the funeral of President McKinley to be held at Canton.

He immediately called Mayor J. H. Robertson to his office and informed him that it was the desire of the cabinet that the mayor of the president's home city take charge of the arrangements here. The mayor appointed an executive committee composed of Judge Day, Henry W. Harter, William A. Lynch, E. E. Case and John C. Welty. That committee has been in almost continuous session ever since and has already set a number of subcommittees to work.

Adjt. Gen. Gyger of Gov. Nash's staff appeared before the committee and tendered the entire national guard of Ohio for escort duty on the day of the funeral. Gen. Gyger announced that the state would bear all expenses of the escort, asking the city only for ground upon which to pitch the tents of the 4,000 men expected. This matter was left to Lieut. Col. Harry Frease of Gen Dick's staff, and grounds were selected just at the eastern border of the city.

Knights Templars from a number of cities, Masons from Canton and vicinity and numerous other societies tendered escort services, but in view of the expected congested condition of the city on that day these offers were temporarily tabled.

DEATH CAUSED BY GANGRENE.

Coroner Certifies as to the Cause of President McKinley's Death.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.—The coroner of Erie county yesterday issued the following certificate of death of the late president:

"City of Buffalo, Bureau of Vital Statistics, County of Erie, State of New York. Certificate and Record of Death of William McKinley: I hereby certify that he died on the 14th day of September, 1901, at 2:15 o'clock a. m., and to the best of my knowledge and belief the cause of death was as underwritten: Cause—Gangrene of both walls of stomach and pancreas following gunshot wound."

No skill of the surgeon could have saved William McKinley. He died not of peritonitis, nor of heart trouble, but manifestly of gangrene.

The autopsy, which was conducted by surgeons different from those in attendance, and under the direct supervision of the district attorney, whose stenographer made the official notes, showed clearly that the president was marked for death from the first, and no medical skill could have prevented a fatal ending.

There was a distinct track of gangrene from the opening to the place where the bullet finally lodged in the muscles of the abdomen. The two holes in the wall of the stomach were found to have been closed up properly, but the tissues around the stitches themselves were covered with gangrene, showing that the bullet had left a poisoned track along its entire path through the body, due to the grease or dirt, in all probability, which surrounded it.

The autopsy shows that the bullet which caused death touched the upper end of the kidneys, also involving the pancreas, and it is probable there would have been serious difficulty in this regard later on.

There was no sign of peritonitis, and to this extent the diagnosis of the surgeons was entirely correct. The president did not die from blood poisoning, nor was the toast and coffee he was given particularly fatal to the suffering patient.

The walls of the heart were found exceedingly thin and the organ showed the effect of the constant smoking to which the president had been addicted for so many years. The heart action was necessarily weak, but it was not this which killed him any more than peritonitis.

CZOLGOSZ DOES NOT KNOW.

Not Yet Informed That President McKinley Is Dead.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.—The assassin does not know yet that President McKinley is dead, and probably will not know it until he is arraigned for murder. He will be indicted by the grand jury probably to-day and the case will then immediately be removed to the supreme court. The arraignment will take place in that court and very soon, the exact time depending upon the return of the indictment. No further attempt was made yesterday by the officers to talk to Czolgosz nor was the theory of poisoned bullets taken up by the police. They say when the chambers of the revolver shall be chemically examined, as they undoubtedly will be, no poison will be found on them. As to Emma Goldman, the situation remains unchanged, the police holding there is insufficient evidence on which to ask her extradition.

GRIEF IN MANILA.

All Classes Mourn the Loss of the President.

Manila, Sept. 15.—The profoundest grief is manifested by every class in the community over the death of President McKinley. Gov. Taft has issued a proclamation which explains to the Filipinos that, while the death of Mr. McKinley is an irreparable individual loss, it does not alter the stability of the government or change the course of the administration. This was considered necessary because the Filipinos thought Bryan would succeed McKinley, as Bryan received the next highest number of votes in the electoral college.

Flags were ordered to be at half-mast for a month, while all employes of the civil government are to wear mourning bands on their arms. All the foreign consuls, wearing their uniforms, called at the residence of Gov. Taft to tender their condolences. Gen. Chaffee has ordered that every officer and soldier in the archipelago, whether in the field, in camp, in garrison or in hospital, be notified.

STRAIN TOO GREAT.

Chicago Girl Commits Suicide When Told of the President's Death.

Chicago, Sept. 16.—Because President McKinley died Grace Wilson, 6664 Michigan avenue, killed herself Saturday. The young woman is said to have been intensely interested in the condition of the late chief executive. Following the news that the president was sinking Friday she spent hours in weeping, and an hour after learning of his death she fired a bullet into her brain and died instantly. She was only seventeen years old.

TRIPLETS COMING TOO FAST.

Kansas Governor, Who Offered Prizes for All Trios Born in the State, Withdraws Proposal.

Topeka, Kan., Sept. 16.—Gov. Stanley, who began his administration with the announcement that he would give silver mugs to all triplets born in Kansas while he was in office, has abandoned the scheme. After having spent $125 for mugs for thirty-seven sets of triplets, he decided that the experiment was too expensive.

COW GOES MAD.

Bitten by a Strange Dog Three Weeks Ago.

Kasson, Minn., Sept. 16—A cow owned by George Castner, living seven miles northeast of here, went mad. It is pronounced a clear case of hydrophobia. The cow was bit by a dog that passed through that section some three weeks ago and was supposed to be mad. Several other animals and a few persons were bitten by the same dog.

DAY OF MOURNING

THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE VIEW THE BODY OF THE MARTYRED PRESIDENT.

SORROW EVERYWHERE APPARENT

Simple but Affecting Service Held at the Milburn Residence, After Which the Body Is Removed to the City Hall, Where It Is Viewed by Grief-Stricken Citizens—80,000 People Pass Before the Bier.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.—Buffalo yesterday became a city of mourners. The gay and flaming decorations gave way to the symbol of sorrow. The black drapery of the city's streets muffled the tolling bells of the churches. Bits of crepe appeared on every sleeve. The sorrow was everywhere apparent. In the morning a simple service took place at the residence on Delaware avenue where the martyred president died.

A hymn was sung and prayer was offered over the dead body. That was all. Only the immediate family and the friends and political associates of the late president were present. The scene there was pathetic in the extreme. Then the body was borne out to the waiting cortege on the brawny shoulders of eight sailors and soldiers of the republic. The cortege passed through solid walls of living humanity, bareheaded and grief-stricken, to the city hall, where the body lay in state yesterday afternoon. There a remarkable demonstration occurred which proved how close the president was to the hearts of the people. Arrangements had been made to allow the public from the time it arrived, at about 1:30 o'clock, until about 5 o'clock. But the people were wedged into the streets for blocks. Two lines were formed. They extended literally for miles. When 5 o'clock came 40,000 people had already passed and the crowds waiting below in the streets seemed undiminished. It was decided to extend the time till midnight. Then for hours longer the streets were dense with people and a constant stream flowed up the steps of the broad entrance into the hall and passed the bier. When the doors were closed at midnight it was estimated that 80,000 people had viewed the remains, but thousands of disappointed ones were still in the streets.

To View the Body

The body will be taken to the station by a military escort this morning, the funeral train, consisting of seven cars, will start for Washington over the Pennsylvania road at 8:30. Mrs. McKinley, the president, the cabinet and relatives and friends of the dead president will accompany the remains. Mrs. McKinley bore up bravely yesterday during the service at Milburn residence, and Dr. Rixey, her physician, thinks she will be able to support her trying part in the state funeral at Washington.

IN MEMORY OF THE MARTYR.

Memorial Services Held Throughout the Country.

New York, Sept. 16.—Naturally the theme of all the sermons preached in New York and its suburbs yesterday was the lamentable death of the president. With practical unanimity those in charge of the services had the congregations sing "Nearer my God to thee," as a still further tribute to Mr. McKinley. Most of the churches were draped in black and in not a few the American flag mingled its colors with the dark folds of crepe. The congregations were large in every church and there was a marked gravity about the worshippers.

-o-

Washington, Sept. 16. — "Nearer my God to thee," the late president's favorite hymn, formed a feature of the service of homage and tribute held in almost every church in the national capital yesterday. The Metropolitan Methodist church, the president's church, was crowded. The president's pew was heavily draped in black. Rev. William H. Chapman, who is temporarily filling the pulpit in the absence of the pastor, Dr. Bristol, in London, preached the sermon and three other ministers assisted him.

-o-

Chicago, Sept. 16. — Almost without exception President McKinley's death was the theme of pastors, priests and rabbis at the different churches in this city yesterday. Senator William E. Mason occupied the pulpit at the Hyde Park Methodist church at its memorial services, and the announcement that he would speak filled the edifice to its fullest capacity. His speech was devoted almost entirely to President McKinley.

-o-

Cleveland, Sept. 16. — Tributes were paid to the life of President McKinley in Cleveland yesterday by representatives of every religion. Ministers of the gospel joined in eulogizing William McKinley as the man, Maj. McKinley as the soldier, and President McKinley as the statesman.

-o-

Cincinnati, Sept. 16. — The death of President McKinley was generally observed in the churches of various denominations here yesterday by appropriate texts and sermons. The ministers spared no words in denouncing the assassination and the existence of anarchy.

-o-

St. Louis, Sept. 16.—Special memorial services in honor of President McKinley were held in all the churches here yesterday.

MOURNING ABROAD.

Remarkable Outburst of Sympathy in Great Britain.

London, Sept. 16.—It would be almost impossible to record in detail the remarkable outburst of sympathy in Great Britain and her colonies over the death of President McKinley, proofs of which come hourly. Not only has King Edward ordered the court to go into mourning for one week, but wherever a public meeting of any kind had been held or a public man has had occasion to speak, expressions of horror and sympathy have been heard. In every place of public worship yesterday from St. Paul's cathedral and Canterbury cathedral down to the preachers made special references to the terrible event, invoking God's blessing upon the United States and American people. Craithie church at Balmoral, whose bells had never before been used except on occasions of national interest, broke the custom and announced the event to the neighborhood.

Mr. Choate and the staff of the United States embassy, who again had their hands very full, attended service at St. Paul's cathedral in the afternoon. There were many other Americans in the congregation. In accordance with a special army order the guards at St. James' palace and at all other points where guard was mounted throughout the United Kingdom, honors were rendered yesterday to the memory of President McKinley such as are usually accorded only on the death of royal personages. The troops wore crepe and the bands played dirges. Funeral marches were played in every church in the kingdom.

-o-

London, Sept. 16.—King Edward has commanded the court to go in mourning for a week on account of the death of President McKinley.

-o-

Rome, Sept. 16.—The government has ordered the commanders of all naval vessels to half-mast their flags for three days.

-o-

Berlin, Sept. 16. — Emperor William has issued orders to place the flags on all government buildings at half-mast in memory of President McKinley.

EDWARD TELLS OF SYMPATHY.

England's King Telegraphs Ambassador Choate Expressing Grief of the British People.

London, Sept. 16.—King Edward telegraphed to Ambassador Choate as follows:

"Most truly do I sympathize with you and the whole American nation at the loss of your distinguished and ever-to-be-regretted president.

—"Edward, Rex."

POPE WEEPS ON HEARING NEWS.

Pontiff's Emotion Uncontrollable When Told of the President's Death—Prays for an Hour.

London, Sept. 16.—A special dispatch from Rome says the pope prayed an hour for the soul of President McKinley. The pontiff wept with uncontrollable emotion on receiving the news of the President's death. All audiences at the Vatican have been suspended.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S WILL.

Bulk of His Property Left to His Wife.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.—President McKinley has left a will. The instrument was executed some time before the shooting and at no time during his final suffering was there any wish or occasion to revise it, or to frame a codicil. It leaves the bulk of his property to Mrs. McKinley. How much the estate is worth cannot be stated with exactness by those familiar with the late president's business affairs, but it is believed to be a goodly sum, although not amounting to a large fortune.

ROOSEVELT IS PRESIDENT

TAKES THE OATH OF OFFICE IN THE PRESENCE OF MEMBERS OF CABINET.

CABINET OFFICERS WILL STAY

Mr. Roosevelt Declares Before the Ceremony It Will Be His Purpose to Carry Out the Policy of President McKinley — There Will Not Be an Extra Session of Congress—Offers Sympathy to Mrs. McKinley.

Buffalo, Sept. 16. — Theodore Roosevelt, the youngest man to occupy the presidential chair of the American republic, Saturday took the oath of office and was sworn in as president to succeed the lamented President McKinley, lying dead from the effects of an assassin's bullet.

The new president's first announcement was that all the cabinet ministers would remain with him and that there would not be an extra session of congress.

The ceremony of taking the oath of office occurred at the residence of Ansley Wilcox, a personal friend, and the scene was an affecting one.

There were present when he swore to the oath: Secretaries Root, Hitchcock, Long, Wilson and Postmaster General Smith, Senator Chauncey M. Depew of New York and others.

The new president had just come from the Milburn house, whither he had immediately gone on his arrival in the city to express to Mrs. McKinley and the family of the dead president his deep sympathy in the hour of their bereavement.

Roosevelt Takes Oath.

The place selected for the ceremony was the library of Mr. Wilcox's house. Surrounding him were the five members of the cabinet—Secretaries Root, Hitchcock, Long and Wilson and Postmaster General Smith.

At precisely 3:32 o'clock Secretary Root said in an almost inaudible voice: "Mr. Vice President, I—," then his voice broke, and for fully two minutes the tears came down his face and his lips quivered so that he could not continue his utterances. There were sympathetic tears from those about him, and two great drops ran down either cheek of the successor to William McKinley. Mr. Root's chin was on his breast. Suddenly throwing back his head as if with an effort, he continued in broken voice:

"I have been requested on behalf of the cabinet of the late president, at least those who are present in Buffalo, all except two, to request that for reasons of weight affecting the affairs of the government you should proceed to take the constitutional oath as president of the United States."

Follow McKinley's Policy.

Mr. Roosevelt replied in a voice that at first wavered, but finally became deep and strong:

"I shall take the oath at once, in accordance with your request, and in this hour of deep and terrible national bereavement, I wish to state that it shall be my aim to continue absolutely unbroken the policy of President McKinley for the peace and prosperity and honor of our beloved country."

Judge J. R. Hazel of the United States district court then administered the oath of office.

Immediately following the dispersing of the spectators after taking the oath President Roosevelt asked the cabinet members present to confer with him. The conference lasted very nearly two hours, and when it was finished the president said:

"Following out the brief statement I made when taking the oath that I would follow the administrative lines laid down by President McKinley, I requested the members of the cabinet who were present to remain in their positions at least for the present. They have assured me that they will, and I may say that I have assurance also from the absent members."

Inquiry was made of the president as to whether an extra session of congress would be called by him, and he said in substance that there was no fundamental law requiring the calling of congress together upon the succession of a vice president to the presidency, and after consultation with the cabinet they had decided that no extra session would be called.

ROOSEVELT'S SECRETARY.

Mr. Cortelyou Will Act in That Capacity for the Present.

Buffalo, Sept. 16. — President Roosevelt passed a very quiet day at the Wilcox house, arranging to attend the funeral of the late president. His secretary, Mr. Loeb, and his assistants were, however, kept busy opening telegrams and mail and classifying them. Piled up on the oak table in the sitting room of the house were at least 600 telegrams and letters, all of them expressing regret at the sad occurrence to the late president and assurance of confidence and support to the new president. The only announcement the president had to make yesterday was that Mr. Cortelyou, the secretary of President McKinley, would for the present act in that capacity for him because of his knowledge of the condition of affairs. Mr. Cortelyou confirmed this statement.

CAN LIVE BUT A FEW HOURS.

Bishop Whipple Was Taken Suddenly Worse Last Night.

St. Paul, Sept. 16. — Bishop H. B. Whipple, who has been seriously ill at his home in Faribault, was taken suddenly worse last night. Dr. A. J. Stone, who attended him, stated at 2 o'clock this morning that the bishop can live but a short time, probably but a few hours. He had a severe attack of angina pectoris about a week ago but seemed to recover after the first few days' illness.

Henry Benjamin Whipple has been bishop of the Episcopal church in Minnesota since 1859. He was born in Adams, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1823. He was ordained in 1850, and was rector of Zion church in Rome, N. Y., and later of the Church of Holy Communion in Chicago. He was one of the foremost in the work of evangelizing the Indians, and founded and built the Seabury divinity school, the Shattuck military academy and St. Mary's hall at Faribault.

A PROCLAMATION.

President Roosevelt Appoints a Day of Mourning.

Buffalo, Sept. 16. — President Roosevelt Saturday night issued the following proclamation:

By the President of the United States—

A Proclamation:

A terrible bereavement has befallen our people. The president of the United States has been struck down; a crime committed not only against the chief magistrate, but against every law-abiding and liberty-loving citizen.

President McKinley crowned a life of largest love for his fellow men, of most earnest endeavor for their welfare, by a death of Christian fortitude; and both the way in which he lived his life and the way in which, in the supreme hour of trial, he met his death, will remain forever a precious heritage of our people.

It is meet that we as a nation express our abiding love and reverence for his life; our deep sorrow for his untimely death.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, president of the United States of America, do appoint Thursday next, Sept. 19, the day on which the body of the dead president will be laid in its last earthly resting place, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend all the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God, and to pay out of full hearts their homage of love and reverence to the great and good president whose death has smitten the nation with bitter grief.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, the 14th day of September, A. D. one thousand nine hundred and one and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-sixth.

(Seal.) —Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

CERTAINLY A PLOT.

Another Man Who Knew That the President Would Be Shot.

Buffalo, Sept. 16. — The police have just learned that the fourth man in front of Czolgosz at the reception when President McKinley was shot, and whom they have been seeking ever since, is a Hebrew named Lang. They are still in search of him, but have not been able to locate him. His residence it at 57 Wasmuth avenue in East Buffalo, near where Dr. Saylin lives. Lang disappeared from his home at the same time Dr. Saylin left Buffalo, a few hours after the assassination of President McKinley. About two weeks ago Lang went to Patrizykowiski's saloon at 1119 Broadway, where he bought a quantity of bottled beer. When paying for it he said: "I will keep this to drink when President McKinley dies." Lang is known to be the man who went to Rochester with Dr. Saylin to visit Emma Goldman.

MOB STOPPED BY BLUECOATS.

Chicago Mob Tries to Lynch Anarchists.

Chicago, Sept. 16—Armed with stones, ropes and sticks and shouting "Lynch the anarchists," a mob of 600 men and boys marched to the county jail at 9 o'clock Saturday night and attempted to break into the bastile. Several of the leaders kicked at the door and shouted for admittance, but the arrival of 400 policemen spoiled the plans of the enraged men who were "going to hang the nine anarchists" locked up in connection with the assassination of President McKinley. With drawn revolvers, the mob that had vengeance in their hearts, were dispersed by the blue coats, but not until they had hurled their sticks and stones at the officers.

STRIKE AT AN END.

Telegraphic Notice to That Effect Sent Out.

Pittsburg, Sept. 16.—Matters pertaining to the settlement of the steel strike are in a very unsatisfactory state. While the telegraphic notice was sent out Saturday night by Secretary Williams to all vice presidents declaring the strike at an end, it cannot be learned definitely that the official order has been issued by President Shaffer. Some of the local strikers declare they have no such notice and many of them say they will not return to work, order or no order, unless they shall be recognized as union men. President Shaffer arrived home at an early hour yesterday morning but denied himself to all callers. Last night his wife, in answer to questions as to his whereabouts, said he had received a special letter calling him out of the city. A member of the advisory board said that the official order calling the strike off has gone out and that the men generally will be at work to-day or within a day or two later.

HOWISON IS OUT

CHALLENGE OF ADMIRAL SCHLEY SUSTAINED BY THE COURT OF INQUIRY.

OPENS WITH POMP AND DIGNITY

Proceedings Brought to an Abrupt Termination by the Decision of the Court—Must Wait Until Howison's Successor Is Appointed—Dewey and Schley the Principal Figures in Popular Interest.

Washington, Sept. 14.—Within three hours from the time of convening the Schley court of inquiry yesterday it was announced that Rear Admiral H. L. Howison was disqualified from serving as a member of the court and was excused from further duty. This brought proceedings to an abrupt termination and caused a temporary adjournment of the court in order to permit the navy department to designate an officer to succeed Admiral Howison.

It had been expected that little official business would be accomplished on the opening day and the prompt decision as to Admiral Howison came somewhat as a surprise.

Prior to the court's convening a good-sized crowd assembled at the Washington navy yard, where the court meets to witness the coming of the prominent naval officers who were to take part in the proceedings. They came ununiformed and unheralded, and until the full dress uniform had been donned inside the quarters set aside for the actual sessions of the court there was nothing dramatic to the session. Admiral Dewey and Admiral Schley were naturally the principal figures in popular interest. The latter had about him a distinguished party of counsel, including Jere Wilson, Attorney General Isidor Rayner of Maryland, Capt. James Parker, with Mr. Teague acting as advisory counsel. The German naval attache, Capt. Reuber-Pashwitz, occupied one of the seats in the public areas, and the number of wives of naval officers present was noteworthy.

Salute for Dewey.

A salute of seventeen guns, in honor of the admiral of the navy, marked the opening of the proceedings at 1 o'clock. The usual formalities on the opening of a court were transacted with dispatch. The first skirmish was opened by Admiral Schley, rising from his seat and speaking in strong voice, calmly and deliberately, challenging Admiral Howison's eligibility as a member of the court. Three witnesses were brought forward in support of this challenge, namely, Mr. Francis S. Frost, Mr. William E. Spon and Mr. Foster Nicholls. They gave very positive evidence as to expressions they had heard Admiral Howison make favorable to Admiral Sampson and unfavorable to Admiral Schley. On concluding this testimony the question arose whether Admiral Howison would join issue with the statements made by the witnesses or would rest on his privilege to withhold any answer until he chose to submit it. The admiral met the issue by turning at once to Admiral Dewey and announcing that he would make a writ of rejoinder to the statements of the three witnesses. This rejoinder he prepared very speedily. While conceding the accuracy of some points in the evidence it threw considerable doubt on other points and disclaimed any recollection of the talks said to have taken place on the transatlantic steamer. It was not sufficient, however, to counteract the given by the three witnesses, and, moreover, the admiral himself, in concluding his statement, indicated plainly that he had no desire to remain on the court, and was there simply in obedience to orders. He even appealed to his associates on the court to decide all doubtful questions as to his eligibility in favor of Admiral Schley.

Very Direct Testimony

The challenge was then submitted to the court, which, under the circumstances, was narrowed to Admiral Dewey and Rear Admiral Benham, to pass upon. After hardly more than fifteen minutes spent in retirement to the consultation room of the court, Admiral Dewey briefly announced that the court sustained the challenge and that Admiral Howison would be excused from further attendance.

The decision came so quickly and unexpectedly that it sent a flutter of agitation throughout the courtroom. There was a buzz of animated comment and Admiral Schley exchanged looks of satisfaction with his counsel. Admiral Dewey then at once closed the proceedings of the day by announcing that the court would adjourn indefinitely until the navy department had named an officer to succeed Admiral Howison. No further session of the court is probable until the early part of next week.

BISHOP WHIPPLE ILL.

Venerable Churchman Dangerously Sick at His Home in Faribault.

St. Paul, Sept. 14.—Rt. Rev. Henry B. Whipple, D. D. LL. D., lies dangerously sick at his home in Faribault. The venerable bishop's condition is so serious that Dr. Rose of Faribault, who has been attending him, summoned Dr. A. J. Stone of St. Paul to go to Faribault in consultation. Dr. Stone obeyed the summons and was at the bishop's side Monday night and Wednesday night. Bishop Whipple is an old man who has undergone a world of work and care, and his friends fear that this sickness may be the prelude to the final breaking up. For more than forty years he has ministered to the people of the diocese and done pioneer work which has given him a place and name not only in the church but in American history. He is suffering with a severe attack of angina pectoris.

Held for Alleged Bootlegging.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 14.—Ed Hendricks, who was arrested on a charge of bootlegging near Horace, was held to the district court. Hendricks is said to have sold a concoction which he made himself and called whisky. It was about one-fourth alcohol and colored to look like rye whisky. The purchasers claim it was so vile they were unable to drink it, and two of his customers reported the fellow. He had a large stock in pint bottles.

Asylum Almost Completed.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Sept. 14.—Oct. 2 has now been definitely fixed as the date when the government asylum for insane Indians at Canton will be formally turned over to the government. FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

To what extent is it possible to smother the roots of trees by layers of earth over them? There are more answers than one that will be given. The following from Vicks Magazine gives one view of the subject: "It is a fact not generally known that trees may readily be killed by smothering the roots—that is, by covering them so deeply with soil or other material, that the supply of air is unduly cut off and the tree dies. Such instances have frequently come under the observation of the writer in connection with landscape gardening improvements. He recalls especially the case in a Western New York town, where, on a certain street, the front part of the lots laid so much higher than the streets that it was desirable to cut the soil down before buildings were erected thereon. Now the rear of the same lots sloped away so low that better shaped building sites could be created by filling in earth in these parts. The conclusion was easily reached that by moving soil from front to rear in the lot the surface would be about the right shape and this plan was carried out. In the back of these lots, however, there were some vigorous old orchard and other trees, which were highly prized. The filling in of earth to improve the grade called for a depth of as much as three and four feet of soil over the roots of these trees. In most cases the owners before moving in the earth made boxes of plank about four feet across around the trees, to keep the soil away from the trunks, thinking that this was all the provision needed for their safety. Now for the lesson: The result of that filling in of earth was that after five years, not one of the former healthy trees was alive wherever the soil was deeply filled in. The trees had been smothered effectually. So far as the final outcome was concerned, the boxing of the trunks to keep back the soil might as well not have been performed."

Now for a little on the other side of the question. The writer of this paragraph knows a good many instances where dirt has been "filled in" over the roots of trees, in this case forest and shade trees. In every case the trees have remained vigorous. Some of these cases are on railroad grounds and some on school grounds. Near the home of the writer the hickory trees have been dying for the last five years. On his own lot all the hickories and most of the oaks have died except where the earth has been filled in over the roots and hickory whose roots are buried the deepest is the healthiest of all. These latter trees are not even boxed to keep the earth from the trees. How much value there may be to the boxing we do not know. We have seen boxes put around large oak trees whose roots must have extended 25 or more feet from the trees. The active parts of the roots are near the extremities and are the parts that need the air. The boxes around the trees admit the air only to the trunks and not the active areas of roots. It is evident to any thinking person that the air in the box would have to pass through more earth to reach the roots than from the surface to the ground. There is without doubt a possibility of killing roots by burying them too deep, but the smothering out is not by any means as likely in one locality as in another.

* * *

J. P. Brown, secretary of the International Society of Arboriculture, predicts that "fifty years hence Kansas and the states today planting trees will be supplying California and the Pacific coast states with timber." He says further that with a continuation of the present rate of timber cutting there will soon be a great dearth of forests west of the Rocky mountains. He suggests government ownership of these forests as the only means of preserving them. Tree planting is now going on quite extensively in the states west of the Mississippi river, but not so fast as it would be done were the plantations owned by the state. The individual planters say that they cannot hope to reap any returns and do not like to invest too much of their own money in posterity. The state is perpetual and can afford to invest in forest plantations even though they will not give returns till the next generation. The hard woods, the most valuable of all, are not favorites for planting, taking, as they do, such long periods of time for development. This is a question in which the public is deeply interested; it is a problem that the public only can handle successfully and in a scientific manner. It is not reasonable for us to ask private citizens to make sacrifices that the future public may be benefited. The people of Europe long ago realized this truth, and their governments have been carrying on the work of forest preservation and propagation for generations.

Health of Show Stock.

Every year we hear complaints regarding disease contracted at the state fairs, and there are some breeders of excellent swine who stay at home with their animals rather than run chances of bringing disease back with them to the farm. This should not be, and there is no need of so much trouble annually in this respect. In the first place it behooves the intending exhibitor to act fairly towards all concerned. He knows better than anyone else whether there is cholera in his district. He knows whether his swine have been exposed or not—whether there is the slightest chance that they may take the disease to the fair and so expose other swine. He is well aware of the fact that the germ may exist for a time in the blood of the hogs without showing the characteristic symptoms to the fell disease. Knowing all of these things then he should not take his hogs to the fair. Depend upon it that some one man takes the disease to the fair grounds. The germ of the disease is not there when the show opens. Great care is usually taken by the management to clean up after each show, to disinfect and whitewash. This being the case the grounds may be considered healthy and the exhibitor cannot say fairly that his swine contracted the disease from germs existent in the pens. The disease is invariably due to contagion brought to each show by some of the exhibits, and we say without reserve that in most cases these swine might have been kept at home and so prevented an outbreak. It is very rare indeed when investigation of the outbreak is made, to find that no trace can be found of the district from which the disease originally came and when found there are usually sufficient facts to show that the exhibitor whose swine brought in the germs had some knowledge of the possibility of contagion, but thought it too remote to give trouble. When an exhibitor has such information there is only one way for him to act, and that is to forego the pleasure and profit of showing for fear that he may bring disease to his neighbors' hogs. On general principles, if there is known to be cholera present in a given district no swine should be allowed to come to the show from that district no matter whether they have been exposed or not. There is always a chance that they may carry the disease. This is the plain duty of the exhibitor, but he should receive equal consideration upon the part of the management of the fair or show. The pens provided for the reception of his fine hogs should be clean, dry, well ventilated and recently disinfected and whitewashed. He should see to it before he starts that the management has so prepared the pens for his reception, and if each breeder would take time to write to the secretary of the show weeks ahead just what he expects in this way the management would soon see the necessity and advantage of having the quarters for hogs in fine sanitary condition at the opening of the show. But this is not all. When the swine arrives upon the fair grounds everything should be done to prevent disease from breaking out among them. Expert veterinarians or a special veterinarian retained for the purpose, should examine each lot of hogs before it is allowed to enter the pens, and reject for cause any animal or lot of animals that are seen to be afflicted with any disease that is likely to spread contagion among the other hogs. Each exhibitor should file an affidavit that cholera is non-existent in his district. Each railroad company should provide clean, disinfected, whitewashed cars for the conveyance of swine to and from the fair. Precautions should be taken to keep the pens at the fair grounds scrupulously clean, so that bad odors may not arise to annoy the visitors and at the same time out of consideration for the health of the swine exhibited. At many of the shows the pens are not kept clean and disinfectants are not used or are so sparingly distributed that they fail to deodorize and cannot possibly be depended upon to kill germs of disease. Each state agricultural association should give some well known disinfecting firm the contract to keep the pens sweet and healthy during the show, and if this were done there would be few reports of disease at the fairs.

Last week the New Jersey crop report said: "The horned worm is doing considerable damage to tomatoes, whole fields having been destroyed in some places." This is the same insect that we illustrated on our Agricultural page last week. Usually these worms do not appear in sufficient numbers to be a menace to the crop. Hand picking is about the only method that is recommended and is generally effective. The use of poisons on tomato vines or tobacco plants can hardly be encouraged, as tomato plants are already bearing fruit and tobacco is used entire. When the worms first appear they should be all picked off, thus leaving none as a foundation for future broods. The worm is familiar to most of our readers, being the big green horned worm frequently seen on tomato plants.

L. A. Goodman, secretary of the Missouri State Horticultural Society, reports that the drouth of more than 90 days' duration has inflicted great injury on apple and peach orchards. Some of the orchardists to save their trees are thinning the fruit one-half. Well-cultivated orchards are holding their fruit best. This is good testimony of the value of cultivation. The thinning of the fruit is an excellent idea, especially in a dry year.

Soft Rot of Sweet Potatoes.—Attacks tubers, usually after they are stored. Tubers shrivel. Black masses when skin is broken and disagreeable odor. Remedy—Avoid bruising the tubers, store in dry places at a temperature of about 70 degrees, remove and burn diseased tubers as soon as they begin to decay.

When muck is exposed to the action of the air, as when mixed with ordinary cultivated soil, its nitrogen slowly undergoes change and is gradually rendered available to the growing plant.

Soil Investigations.

The mysteries locked up in the soil are only slowly being made plain. Year by year, decade by decade, century by century, the work goes on. In all civilized lands are scientists applying themselves to the problems. Chemists, botanists, biologists and geologists all find in this quarter room enough for their labors. And the farmer has need of all this kind of help he can get. To nearly every cultivator of the soil today, as in the past, the thing he cultivates is an unknown factor. He knows it is sandy or clayey, wet or dry, rich or poor, but those things are but the beginning of wisdom.

In the state of Mississippi three men connected with the agricultural college have been giving a good deal of attention to the matter of soil investigation. Professors Hutchinson, Perkins and Ferris have made analyses of over 400 samples of soil and have investigated them further than the analyses. So far as the soils of that state are concerned they are satisfied that chemical analyses does give an index of the value of any soil for plant use. They have found that "other things being equal, soils containing the largest total amounts of plant food will have the most plant food available for crops * * * and the deepest surface soils give the best yields." So far as the soils were examined 0.07 to 0.1 per cent of phosphoric acid was sufficient for maximum yields. Soils that contained 0.05 per cent or less of this acid required an application of phosphoric acid before good yields could be obtained. The soils of Mississippi are reported by the gentlemen named to contain all the lime necessary to plant growth. Recently uncovered soils are described as being unproductive. The investigators urge the greater use of the leguminous plants both to increase the nitrogen and improve the soil as to its ability to hold water.

* * *

In some European experiments to determine the loss of fertility by drainage, the greater loss of nitrogen occurred in case of bare soil, the order of losses in other cases being (1) soil bearing young clover, (2) that under flax and beans, and (3) that under summer grain. Lime was the constituent most easily removed from the soil. The losses of potash and soda were practically the same. Chlorin and sulphuric acid were removed in considerable quantities, especially in bare soil. Phosphoric acid could scarcely be detected in the drainage waters of soils bearing crops. In bare soils traces were found.

Late Blight of Potatoes.

The Vermont station sends out a circular warning farmers of the appearance of late blight. In part the circular says: Potato blight is threatening Vermont fields. Unless proper measures are promptly taken to meet this disease there will be serious damage to the crop. Professor Jones, botanist of the Vermont Experiment Station, has been visiting potato fields and stands back of this information. The professor reports that he has very recently found the first symptoms of the late blight. In no case was it very far advanced. A few leaves on each affected hill showed the brownish black spots and when examined carefully on the under side each spot revealed the delicate white mildew which is the cause of the disease. Prompt application of Bordeaux mixture in such fields is the only thing that can prevent serious loss from blight and rot. The best remedy for late blight is the Bordeaux mixture, which is made as follows: Take 1½ pounds of blue vitriol (copper sulphate) and 1 pound of quick lime (not air slaked) to ten gallons of water. Dissolve the vitriol in one-half the water, slake the lime in another vessel and add it to the rest of the water, thus making a thin whitewash. Then mix the two and stir thoroughly. Add paris green if desired for bugs. This may be applied in whatever way is most convenient, the aim being to cover the upper surface of every leaf as completely as possible. This can be done best and most economically of both time and mixture by means of a spray pump. But a sprinkling can or even a pail and a wisp of hay may serve the purpose in the absence of the pump. Be sure to apply liberally, using at least three barrels to the acre. Bordeaux mixture will not injure the plants if used in any amount. Do the work promptly and thoroughly or it will be of little use.

Fruit Prospects.

Fruit has improved in many parts of Arkansas.

Pears and grapes have been much damaged by wind in Alabama.

Reports from South Carolina state that fruit is rotting extensively.

The New York apple crop is light; in some places it is less than one-fourth of the average and in other localities a complete failure.

Every producer of milk should remember that it costs just as much to produce bad milk as good as far as the cleanliness of the milk is concerned. The purest and cleanest milk costs nothing more in money than the other kind, but it does cost more in attention and care. The production of good milk can be carried on only by a man whose brain is active. The sluggish mind does not grasp the needs of the hour or the value of clean products.

Leached wood ashes are valuable for fertilizing purposes. They have indeed lost in the leaching most of their potash, but they have still remaining the phosphoric acid and the lime.

A heart is lost in the game of golf!
Cupid has taken charge of the green,
And hazards are frequent, nigh and off,
With a stymie constantly between.

The victim studies his charmer's play,
Follows her course with an anxious eye,
Hoping she'll land in the self-same way,
Making the game a like-as-we-lie.

The parson's niblick would help them
then,
For to the altar the course would be,
And when the game would begin again
A wedding-ring would serve as the tee.

As single players no more arrayed
Against each other, but man and wife,
Their future would be a series played
Of foursomes upon the links of life.

Between Heart and Bayonet.

BY JAMES NOEL JOHNSON.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"Boys," cried the Colonel, dashing up, "do you see that redoubt?"

The Colonel paused but a second. He had spoken with the air of one who is granting a favor rather than delivering a command.

Capt. Blake and Lieut. Summers answered with an exultant shout that echoed from every lip in their company.

A single impulse throbbed in each heart simultaneously, and the leap of one foot was the movement of all.

Until now the company had stood, all their arteries conduits of burning flame. Their faces gave evidence of the repressive struggle within them.

They had cast sullen, envious eyes on other ranks of men that, loosed from restraint, were hurrying, like glad streams, into the sea of action.

Oh, the sickening agony, the soul neuralgia of the brave soldier who is compelled for a time to become the passive objector of roaring conflict!

The wild shouts of his brother troopers in action ring in his ears, firing his enthusiasm, but his feet are chained to the ground.

All around him and through him runs the thrill of battle. His nerves are leaping and vibrating like strings swept by heroic melodies, but he is chained to passivity.

Ever and anon a shot strikes into the human wall. A man detached drops and lies on the ground. There is reproach in the fading eyes, for the man had been shot as he stood as helpless as if tied to a tree.

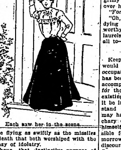
But now the Colonel's word had cut the thongs from Capt. Blake's impatient men, and gave them the liberty of action. And each man pressed forward as if victory sat on the hill to be claimed by him alone.

An accommodating wind shouldered aside the masses of smoke and exposed the redoubt.

About the mouths of the great guns was blown the foaming clouds of death. The redoubt seemed a great monster idol, belching flame and destruction to the feet of which hundreds of human sacrifices were already being cast.

Capt. Blake and Lieut. Summers charged in front of their exultant troopers, their swords lifted in glittering menace. They had no need to cheer on their men. To keep free and ahead of the exultant rush was all the officers needed to do.

Each of the two officers knew that, in that sublimed moment, his mind was in many things the reflex of the other's.



Each saw her in the scene.

Images in their respective minds were flying as swiftly as the missiles of death that both worshiped with the frenzy of idolatry.

Above that instinctive purpose of shattering the monster on the hill, each man saw laurels, blood red, he expected to clasp and carry away to be proudly placed at the beautiful feet of Christine Egglestone.

She was at home—each saw her in the same anxious attitude, at the doorway, a soft hand roofing her eyes, gazing toward the south. The men rushed, shoulder to shoulder, but at which was she gazing most anxiously? Neither could tell—each had his hope and his fear. But the uncertainty of it all flew through the soul of each like a sword.

Each officer had a clear premonition that but one of the two would escape that cauldron of death.

Blacker grew the clouds, and the peals of thunder fused into a continuous roar. Vague lightning played through the wall. Men dropped like ripe fruit from a shaken tree. Shouts of exultation often dropped into dying groans. Still unharmed, side by side, the rival officers fought, the same impulses moving their bodies, the same vision flaming in their minds.

But if each officer knew the other's mind was engaged with the same thoughts and images, he couldn't resist the belief that the other held a dark purpose in addition unworthy of himself, but to be expected in the other.

Drove his shoulder like a glut.

They were enemies, of course. In self-defense they couldn't wish each other well.

"He'd rather die than lose Christine He'd see me die with secret joy. I believe he would kill me if he knew he would never be suspected. I am too magnanimous. I am too chivalrous to nourish such a thought respecting him, but I am sure he would kill me if he could. I'll be between twin perils throughout this action." This horrible suspicion flew through the jealous mind of Capt. Blake, and, with reference to the Captain, it sped on through the jealous heart of Lieut. Summers.

Each, in his present morbid state, furious with two passions, wrongly felt the other would connive at his death!

Now the men are in the very teeth of the awful monster. Great mouths open and spurt out tearing missiles of death. All sounds, small and tremendous, run together in a continuous roar that becomes half silence. All passions are reduced to one primal, elemental desire—the lust of slaughter. This is the pressing, omnivorous instinct. From the rim of that vortex, hope, love, despair, fear, all fly like feeble wisps of vapor. Through plunging arm; through pressing foil; through pointed eyes; through lifted lip; through singing nostril, but one feeling surges—the lust of slaughter.

Lieut. Summers is at the side of his rival, and both fight with that cool resolution and tremendous execution of fearless men exalted by a dual purpose.

Suddenly, without experiencing any distinct pain, Lieut. Summers felt the strength flow from his great arms. Outstretched, their weight overbalanced him, and he dropped forward. Bells sang in his ears a moment, but by omnipotent will force he struggled to his all-fours, and then gained his feet by the assistance of Capt. Blake. A feeble thread of smoke was then seen crawling from his coat a little below the heart.

"My laurels for my grave!" he grimly thought, and smiled.

The next instant a dim, straight object came plunging down through the smoke, spearing toward the heart of Capt. Blake. In the snarl of the crowd and jam, he had no power to avoid it, had he known it was coming. Would neither brave man go back with laurels?

Instantly Lieut. Summers, with the last spurting energy of a dying flame, drove his shoulder, like a glut, between the bayonet and its intended sheath.

Now the death-dealing monster had blown its last breath. The great guns died in sudden silence, and above the echoes arose the lusty shout of victory.

Lieut. Summers saw laurels through fading eyes. A great, strong hero, his grimy face streaked with tears, bent over him.

"Forgive me!" he began.

"Oh, don't mention that," spoke the dying man. "Forgive me for my unworthy suspicion. Now, go home with laurels—yours and mine. Take them all to—to her."

Keep Them Interested.

Keep your children busy if you would have them happy. When the occupation is some daily labor which has been wisely allotted, see that it is accomplished as well as it is possible for the child to accomplish it under existing circumstances. But whether it be in work or play, let him understand that no matter how well he may have done today—and do not be chary of your praise—he has within himself that which will make it possible for him to do still better tomorrow. This treatment, instead of discouraging, says Woman's Home Companion, will encourage by inciting the child toward even better work, and will early implant that spirit of divine discontent which allows of no absolute satisfaction in that which has been accomplished until the achievement reaches perfection. This is the discontent which Emerson preaches, and which is holy if doubt is not allowed to creep in to mar the aspiration.

The Oldest French Immortal.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Queer Freaks of the Current Which Is Easily Deflected.

"I have been much impressed with the importance of small things in late years," said an old steamboat man to a New Orleans Times-Democrat reporter, "and the Mississippi river has furnished me with rather good examples. I can understand now why Caesar looked out upon the Nile in such curious amazement and offered all that he stood for to the Egyptian priest if he would show him the source of that wonderful river. But the antics of the Nile look like insignificant nothings to me when compared with the strange conduct of the stream that oozes out of the earth at Itasca and hurries on its murky and devious way toward the Gulf of Mexico. Towns along the Mississippi that once stood right on the brink of the river have been isolated even in my day, and there are, too, all along the course of the stream little empires in view where the river has encroached upon small centers of population, finally eating the earth away and forcing the inhabitants to seek other quarters. There are hundreds of these places that are almost forgotten, now, even by the men who are constantly on the river. What brings about these violent changes along the banks of the river? Not floods. It is just the ordinary doings of the stream. In the first place the current of the Mississippi is wonderfully swift, and the sediment deposited at any point where resistance to the flow is offered is very great. Tie a string to the neck of a bottle and sink it with the mouth of the bottle up and open. If held in one place where the flow is normal, in an extremely short period of time the bottle will fill with sediment. Stretch a net across the river, a net so finely woven that nothing but the pure water of the river can pass through, and on account of the rapidity of the flow and the greatness of the deposit of sediment, almost in a twinkling the river would be dammed at that point. Experts have admitted this. This brings me to the point of my narrative. The flow of current is frequently interfered with by sunken boats, perhaps by a jackstaff sticking up above the surface. The current is diverted by degrees, generally touching the far side of the stream, a mile from the point where it again meets resistance and immediately begins the building of a sandbar. I have seen a thousand examples of this sort during my career on the river, and I have known of instances where the root of a tree or the mere twig of a willow have brought about similar conditions. These things have tended to make a riddle out of the river, yet the stream, after awhile, will be handled so as to undo all that it has accomplished."

BRAINS BEAT MUSCLE.

What a Scientific Farmer Did with Worn Out Land.

A little over a year ago we made some extended comment upon an illustration of what might be done on an abandoned farm by a man who knew his business, says the Boston Transcript. Such a farm has been purchased and redeemed in the little town of Paxton, about seven miles from Worcester, and away from the railroad by a Long Island man, who brought with him a thorough knowledge of truck farming. His success the first year does not seem to have been exceptional. We have heard a great deal about the smallness of the potato crop this year, and undoubtedly the conditions have been less favorable than usual, but our Paxton farmer put thirty-seven acres into the tubers, from which he expects to produce a crop of some 4,500 bushels, or from 125 to 150 bushels to the acre. In fact, he has now for some time been sending potatoes to Worcester, the nearest large town, and receiving from $4.50 to $5 a barrel. Even at the lowest yield mentioned this will stand him in a return of over $200 an acre from land that probably did not cost him a twentieth part of that sum. Of course, there is a considerable debt account, but allowing for all that the profits are fat. Farmers in his neighborhood are beginning to think that their troubles are not entirely due to worn-out land and generally changed conditions. The fact that they do not know how to make the most of what they have had something to do with it.

FISH FLEE FROM THUNDER.

Seek Refuge From Storm in Deep Water Away From Coast.

Fishermen along the Atlantic coast know the peculiar effect of thunderstorms on fish, and save themselves unnecessary work because they do know it. Of the army of 40,000 fishermen that occasionally or regularly wet lines in the waters contiguous to New York, 35,000 never think of going afishing after two or three days of thunder and lightning. They know better. The other 5,000, hopeful and imaginative, with nothing better to do, take a chance at it any way, and come home with fisherman's luck. The highest authorities among bay men say that thunder drives the fish into deep water off shore and that vivid lightning so disturbs their sleep that they take a day or two off for rest and recuperation. Thus it happens that on the third day after a hard storm with fulmination and pyrotechnics, the catch is phenomenal, whereas on the first or second day after there is no sport except sailing o'er the bounding billows or groaning on a ground swell.

To My Many Friends—I am pleased to make a report to you of the pleasant visit my wife and I had in Western Canada.

We visited the territories of Alberta, Assiniboia, and Saskatchewan, and found them far surpassing our imagination, but little did I expect to find such rich, loamy soil, so much of it, and so uniform in its level prairie lay. I do think the soil of Canada as a rule equals if not excels the finest prairie farm lands of Indiana. These lands are immense in their richness; and when once the sod is rotted and pulverized, it is as pliable and as easily cultivated as Indiana sandy soil.

Western Canada, from my point of view, offers as fine opportunities for mixed farming as any place in my knowledge. The long, sunshiny days, together with the rich soil, produce very fine wheat, oats, barley, flax and other cereal products. There is scarcely any attempt to raise corn, except early varieties for table use. The season is too short to depend upon maturing field corn. From the standpoint of getting this land ready for the plow, I must say that I never saw such a vast extent, practically all ready so all that one has to do is to hitch up the plow and go to work. This is not the case with all the Canadian land, however; some of it has quite a bit of timber, much of it may be called brush land; and some of it has lovely forest groves, dotted here and there, thereby covering a hundred and sixty acres.

I have no doubt but that this country excels as a grazing or ranching country, because they have such rich grass, having an abundance of rain to keep it fresh. They also have plenty of water streams, and as a rule water may be reached at a depth of from 20 to 40 feet. From this you can see there can be plenty of hay mown for winter feeding, and I have had reliable farmers to tell me that their stock will feed on hay alone, and be ready for market in the spring. Upon inquiring about the expense of raising a steer, a farmer replied that he did not consider it would cost any more than $4 or $6 to develop a three-year-old steer.

I truly think Canada offers a fine opening for a young man or a man who is renting land in Indiana. One hundred and sixty acres of good black land will cost you only $10 at the time you enter it, and by plowing and cultivating five acres each year for three years, gives you one hundred and sixty acres of good land for $10. This land can be bought from the railroad companies, private corporations or the government for $3 to $4 per acre.

From a financial standpoint, I believe that for a series of years (five) a young man can make $10 in Canada, whereas he would only make $1 here, and I feel sure that I spent more money to get my eighty acre farm in White county, Indiana, cultivated than it would cost me to cultivate eight hundred acres in Canada. This may seem a strong view to take of the matter, but when you take into consideration the clearing, ditching, fencing and the expensive breaking in of the stumps, and then compare the expense to that of land needing only the breaking, you will conclude that it is not such a wild or exaggerated statement as you might at first think.

I enjoyed the balmy, breezy atmosphere, which was bracing and refreshing, and the cool nights which made it so pleasant for sleep.

On making inquiries regarding the winters in this country, I learned that the people never suffer from the cold, as the weather is dry and invigorating, and in a great many places farmers and herders allow their stock to run outside the year round.

One great advantage to the settlers in Western Canada is the free creameries established by the government and run exclusively in the interest of the farmer.

I visited Thomas Daley, a farmer near Edmonton, Alberta, who showed me oats he had raised, some of which took the first prize at the Paris Exposition last year. The same yielded 110 bushels to the acre in 1899.

Yours truly,
FRANK FISHER,

A SHAKESPEAREAN FORGERY.

Remarkable Book Sold by Auction as a Curiosity.

Among the thousands of books that formed the library of E. J. Stanley, M. P., and recently sold by auction in London, was one precious product of the ingenuity of that arch-forger of Shakespeare, Samuel William Henry Ireland. It is the quarto volume which deceived the world when it was published in 1796, under the title of "Miscellaneous Papers and Legal Instruments under the Hand and Seal of William Shakespeare, including the tragedy of 'King Lear' and a small fragment of 'Hamlet,' from the original MSS. in the possession of Samuel Ireland, of Norfolk street." In the book world the reign of the rogue is but a span, but the inventive Ireland's was rather long drawn out, and Boswell on his death bed, kissing the forged manuscripts and believing his lips to be sanctified by the process, was not the only great man who was taken in by the swindle. This book is not only interleaved with manuscript copies of the original forgeries, but is also preceded by an account in manuscript signed by Ireland of the suppression (on the discovery of the forgeries) of the original issue in folio. Ireland's success is but a record of human credulity. Young Ireland was first tempted by his father's unintelligent enthusiasm for Shakespeare to forge an autograph of the poet on a carefully copied old lease. His audacity grew with the growing credulity of his dupes, and ere long locks of hair, private letters, annotated books, and so on, were plentifully produced, and all enquiries were put off with lying explanations. Boswell, Wha——, Dr. Parr and hundreds more were deceived, but those like Malone, really qualified to judge, denounced the imposture from the first. Ireland's audacity now reached the folly of producing a deed of Shakespeare's, bequeathing his books and papers to a William Henrye Irelaunde, an assumed ancestor. A new historical play was announced, entitled "Vortigern," and carefully concealed its production by Sheridan at Drury Lane; but it was vapid and un-Shakespearean and was a failure. The old man now began to smell a rat and demanded an explanation from his enterprising son. It was forthcoming in the form of the confession in manuscript affixed to the volume referred to. "I order," one reads, "to further obliterate as much as possible every vestige of Shakespearean production I further committed to the flames the complete impression of the present reprint, reserving no more than the annexed copy," which as a literary curiosity consequently ranks unique. It was bought by Mr. Jackson for £123

The Effects of Bad Books.

It is not alone that the ethics and aesthetics of so many books are bad, the moral tone dubious and the stimulus unwholesome; that is bad enough in itself. But the mischief is that the prominence given to a certain species of literature, if it must be so called—its cheapness; its innate impertinence—act not only as an inducement to partake of unwholesome mental pabulum, but they unfit the mind for the digestion of anything more wholesome or profitable. The appetite grows by what it feeds on; and it is not surprising that the final state of the mind which has pastured on such rank herbage is one of indifference toward anything that is difficult to find, difficult to masticate, and, perhaps, uncomfortable to an easy conscience, lying, as it were, a little uneasy on the intellectual and moral stomach. It is as if the diet of a child were advanced from milk to sweet sherbet, and from that to brandy, and men were to wonder at an infant maturing through a brief stage of sickly youth into a premature decrepitude.

The reason of the unhealthy mental development is not far to seek. The unwholesome book fails in the mission of every book. It does not extend man's knowledge of man, but merely repeats in various more-or-less-piquant dressings the story of certain vices, craftiness, heartlessness, and failings, which are, essentially, not the study of man, but a morbid interest in the remnants of beasts which an imperfect civilization and faulty education have failed to eradicate in man. It fails to deal with aliquid humani, in so far as it puts forward as interesting problems what are really sordid difficulties in the life of the animal—difficulties of whose existence every one is aware, and with which the right-minded man tries to cope in the inmost privacy of his heart and mind.—Contemporary Review.

Value of a Man's Life.

The Supreme Courts have decided that the life of the average man is worth just what he is able to earn. A man's earnings depend to a great extent upon his physical health. The stomach is the measure of health and strength. Every man may be bright and active if his digestion is normal. If it is not, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will make it so. Try it for dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, biliousness, flatulency, liver or kidney troubles.

The Cloth of Fall River.

Fall River easily leads all other manufacturing centers in America. It has about one-fifth of the cotton spindles in the United States, and more than twice as many as any other industrial center in America. It makes 843,000,000 yards of cloth annually. Every working day its mills weave more than 1,500 miles of cloth. If all the mills could be run on one piece, the fastest express train could not travel fast enough to carry off the piece as it is woven, since the product is more than two miles a minute.—New England Magazine.

A Narrow Escape.

Bath, N. Y., Sept. 16th.—There is now at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home here an old soldier who has been nearer death than anyone who has lived to tell the story.

His name is A. E. Ayers. For many years he lived in Minneapolis, Minn., where he is well known.

Four physicians of that city once told Mr. Ayers that he could not live four days. He had Brights' disease.

As a last resort he tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. He is strong and well today.

He says: "I was in the very presence of death, but Dodd's Kidney Pills saved me. They are the greatest medicine in the world."

What He Remarked.

CATARRH OF KIDNEYS
Quickly Develops Into Bright's Disease.
[PE-RU-NA CURES CATARRH WHEREVER LOCATED.]

JOHN HERZIGER

John Herziger, son of Alderman Herziger, of Neenah, Wis., and Vice President of the Neenah Young Men's Club, writes in a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, Ohio, the following:

"After suffering for two years with kidney trouble I received relief and a cure from using your wonderful medicine, Peruna.

"For months I was unable to work on account of a severe pain in my back, and when I was able to do anything I was in pain and distressed most of the time.

"Hearing so much of the good results people had obtained through the use of Peruna I determined to give it a trial and it was a lucky day for me when I did so. I am well now and it only took a few bottles of Peruna."—John Herziger, 307 Commercial street, Neenah, Wis.

Two years suffering with catarrh of the kidneys, unable to work on account of the severe pain; could find no relief from medicine; gave Peruna a trial and was promptly cured—such was the experience of John Herziger of Wisconsin.

This experience has been repeated many times. Not only in Wisconsin but in every state in the Union. It was indeed a lucky day for this young man when his attention was called to Peruna. What would have been the result had he continued suffering on and fooling away precious time with other remedies, no man can tell. But it is almost certain that it would have ended in incurable Bright's disease of the kidneys, which sooner or later would have proved fatal.

Peruna is a sure cure for incipient Bright's disease of the kidneys. Taken in the early stages of this disease, it cures permanently. Bright's disease always begins with catarrh of the kidneys. Peruna cures catarrh wherever located.

Congressman Bankhead's Statement.

Congressman J. H. Bankhead of Alabama, one of the most influential members of the House of Representatives, in a letter written from Washington, D. C., gives his indorsement to the great catarrh remedy, Peruna, in the following words:

"Your Peruna is one of the best medicines I ever tried, and no family should be without your remarkable remedy. As a tonic and a catarrh cure I know of nothing better."—J. H. Bankhead.

Samuel R. Sprecher, Junior Beadle Court Angelina No. 3422, I. O. O. F., 205 High St., Los Angeles, Cal., writes:

"I came here a few years ago suffering with catarrh of the kidneys, in search of health. I thought that the climate would cure me but found that I was mistaken, but what the climate could not do Peruna could and did do. Seven weeks' trial convinced me that I had the right medicine and I was then a well man. I know of at least twenty friends and members of the lodge to which I belong who have been cured of catarrh, bladder and kidney trouble through the use of Peruna and it has a host of friends in this city."—Samuel R. Sprecher.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

THE LESSON OF McKINLEY'S DEATH.

McKinley dead? Not so. McKinley will live through the ages—Washington, Lincoln and McKinley—the three great presidents of this nation alike immortal.

I hear much of this crime that has prostrated Columbia in piteous grief upon the bier of her honored son, but good people, the lesson we must read, if we read aright, is not one of revenge. In a time like this when hearts are filled with grief, and mouths with curses for this pitiful creature whose act has staggered the nation, few among us see that in his death our president held out a hand from the mountain-top that we might rise superior to our griefs and passions. Remember, his last words, were a message from the cross, "Thy will be done."

What a wonderful example has this great man's career been to the nation. What a lesson in humility his public and private life affords. Follow him through those desperate days early in the Spanish war. Remember his masterly handling of the tremendous crisis through which this country passed in a few years.

All of us know that throughout the terrible exactions of official life he was ever the courtly gentleman, the modest head of a great concern; seeking no selfish end, always just, moderate: the balance wheel of the republic—simply William McKinley, the American gentleman, our president.

All through this trying war time, through peril from aboard and peril as deadly from within the president remained as he had ever been, devoted to that invalid wife whose delicate health was his constant anxiety.

Tears spring unbidden to my eyes when I reflect that but a short time ago Mr. McKinley suffered death's agonies in the illness of his wife, refused to give up when doctors conceded death inevitable, and went back home happy as a school boy despite his cares of state, because the woman he loved had been spared to him.

The thought chokes me that this noble character, whose labor were drawing to a close after he had rendered services to this nation beyond the nation's power to estimate has been stricken down in full strength of body and mind. In the very zenith of his power—standing on the summit of the country's prosperity in that wonderful exposition—there, where he more than any other American had the right to stand proudly.—There came the end.

Great among the great was McKinley. In an awful moment like that he experienced when shot men speak the thoughts that are within them.

"Do not let them hurt him," gasped the president, and then fell, never more to rise.

And since then, through the mental and physical suffering he has endured, not one querulous word. Think of it you people. No word of repining—not a complaint has he uttered—not one.

And at the last, with the poor wife weeping on his cold hand the president repeated our Savior's words: "Thy will be done." Then he died.

Here is our lesson. The president in his death has left this nation a legacy no less valuable than is the magnificent example of his life. Let us not talk of revenge. For me—I care not what becomes of the assassin. Remove him—take him away—hide him. Make it a misdemeanor for a newspaper to print his name, do what you will; but let us obliterate this man from our memories. Let us remember how the president lived and let us never forget the simple religious faith with which he stepped forth to face his maker. Christ was crucified.

Here is a story that illustrates that even anarchists do not always live up to what they preach. About twenty years ago some fifteen or twenty families of Russian or Polish extract came to Perham, Minn., in search of a location. They called themselves socialists, but in reality they advocated anarchistic doctrines. Some of them lived around Perham, while others took up land. Those who took land prospered, while those who stayed about the village did not get along so well. The latter clamored for a division of the profits, according to their creed, but the prosperous ones refused to divide, and there was considerable trouble among them for some time. Finally the less prosperous left Perham for some of the larger cities, while the others remained there, and are now prosperous farmers in that section.

By a singular coincidence the funeral of President McKinley will be held on the twentieth anniversary of the death of President Garfield the second martyred executive of the United States. Garfield was shot by Guiteau June 2, 1881, and died Septembe 19 of the same year. He was the twentieth president of United States and died just twenty years ago today.

TO OPEN IT UP

The Red Lake Reservation May Be Opened Up

NEXT SUMMER.

Congress to Take Action This Winter.

Indain Commissioner Jones, United States Senator Quarels, of Wisconsin, and his private secretary, T. W. Brabany and Col. R. H. Platt, superintendent of the Carlisle, Penn., Indian school, and Capt. W. A. Mercer arrived in the city Monday afternoon at 2:30 on a special train and at once proceeded to Red lake on the steamer Ethel, where they will interview the Indians regarding the timber question and the opening of public lands to settlement.

While here the party was interviewed by a number of our citizens and they seemed to be very much in favor of having the reservations opened up.

To the NEWS Commissioner Jones stated that he was strongly in favor of seeing not only the lands on this portion of the Red lake reservation opened to settlement but also favored the opening of all lands in the state. He did not think the reservations were of any benefit to the Indians and the best way to teach them the ways of civilizaton was to bring them in in closer contact with the whites. Turning them loose on large reservations only kept them in a state of uncivilization. Regarding this portion of the reservation Commissioner Jones said: "The impression in Washington has been that this was timber land and not valuable for agricultural purposes. I would like to see this piece of land opened and will do all in my power to assist you. While there is some dispute as to whom this land belongs, I beleive it is the property of the Red Lake Indians and that a treaty will not have to be made with all the Chippewas to secure it."

Senator Quarles, who is the chairman of senate subcommittiee on Indian affairs was of about the some opinion as Mr. Jones and said that if the people her were desirous of having it opened at an early date, it would be a good idea to have a meeting of all the Indians on the reservations at which time a stipulation as to the terms on which they would cede it to the government could be agreed upon and this could be sent to congress and it would be at once ratified. He thought it was a shame to have such valuable agricultural land laying idle.

Col. Platt stated it was necessay for him to appear before the committees on Indian affairs in both the house and senate each year, and that he should advocate the opening of the lands to settlement. He thought it was the best thing for the Indians.

Capt. Mercer was of the same opinion, in fact all the party were in favor of seeing the land opened up.

The party returned to this yesterday, and at once proceeded to St. Paul. They did not reach the the Agency owing to a severe storm on the lake.

One of the leading merchants of McIntosh saw fit to show his disrespect for both the past and the present president by refusing to close his place of business Thursday afternoon, Friday morning he was sorry. A coat of tar and feathers decorated the whole front of his place when he reached the shop.

Why One Should Trade at the Central Mercantile Store.

Not because we have the finest and freshest stock in town to select from (Though we have);

Not because our service is courteous and prompt (Though it is);

Not because our dry goods are modern and up-to-date (Though they are);

Not because our grocery department is the largest and best in town. (Though it is);

Not because our terms are the very easiest (Though they are);

But for these reasons combined, and on top of them, namely: that the Central Mercantile Co. sells GOOD GOODS only, and at the same price others charge for second and third rate articles. These are the collective reasons that cause our business to steadily increase and make trading with us always pleasant and profitable.

Contract Let to K. M. Hansen. Monday.

The contract for constructing what is to be known as the Thief River Falls ditch was let Monday to K. M. Hansen, he securing the whole job. His bid for the entire job was about $7,000, and as much of the work as can will be done this fall. A sub-contract has been let to Dennis Connelly for building a portion of it from the corner of his farm to John Meehan's farm. In the building of the remaining part M. Hansen will be associated with James Meehan, Jr.

PERTINENT POINTERS.

Carl Kretzschmar—Now is the time for the city to put in a system of water works and sewerage. We can borrow money for 4½ per cent, and if it is economically spent no one will do any "kicking."

An Iowa Farmer—There is no question in my mind but what the farmers could raise hogs around here for the market at two cents per pound, and the present price is firm at six cents per pound. Every farmer should have a drove of hogs and cattle. The two can be raised together to advantage.

J. L. Cohoon (insurance adjuster for Hartford)—If a system of water works is put in here the insurance companies will lower the rates 25 per cent. This would mean a saving to the city of at least $2,500 a year, besides giving better fire protection.

M. K. Wall—An alley sewer system may be all right, but I am unable to see how the sewers can do as good work there as in the streets, and surely it will cost property owners more to make connections in the alley than in street.

Prof. James A. Wilson—More school room is needed very badly, and it is time for the people to think seriously of this matter.

A Tax Payer—I do not think the city council is acting wisely in building the addition to the city hall. There is no question but additional room is needed, but the present building will never be an ornament to the city, and in a few years it will have to be removed and a better building erected. I do not think it wise to spend any more money on that old hulk.

W. C. Smiley—I will contribute a day's work and a gallon of paint to help give H. M. Hicks building a uniform color.

We have unlimited money to loan on improved farms. Will loan on final receiver's receipt. Interest reasonable. No delays. Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office over First State Bank.

Youthful aspirants who plan to make a living by writing poetry ought to note the fact that the livelihood of the English poet, Austin Dobson, was earned as principal of the fisheries and harbor department of the Board of Trade. He has just resigned after nearly half a century of service. A few men only can earn fame as poets. Fewer still are they who can trust to the productions of their muse to pay the butcher's bill.

As soon as the weather will permit and proper locations can be selected, there will be pitched near Boston the first of a number of camps for consumptives. This camp (and each succeeding camp will be like it) will consist of ten piano-box tents, arranged in a circle, with an open-air fire in the center, and surrounded by a duck wall eight feet high. Each of these tents will be a consumptive's home; a consumptive will sleep there, even through the coldest weather, with no other protection than plenty of felt blankets, felt sleeping boots, and a two-inch gallon jug of hot water.

As a result of a tangle in the steering gear of his automobile, Arthur Fasker of Philadelphia met with a peculiar accident. He started to take a spin down to Baltimore recently, but turned aside from the high road when a few miles out from the city. He was coursing at a speed of eleven miles when suddenly, without apparent cause, the machine spurted and veered to one side. It was going at the rate of seventy-five miles an hour when it jumped a fence and struck a tree. Fortunately, instead of being an upright tree, it was leaning, and instead of being crushed by the impact the machine slid up the tree and lodged in the branches, forty-five feet from the ground. Mr. Fasker was unhurt. He climbed out of the seat and slid down the tree and walked to a farm house, where he hired a farmer to bring him to town.

According to the Medical Record, a gang of swindlers has been playing a despicable trick on numerous pharmacists in Brooklyn. A man goes to a drug store with a simple prescription, has it made up, and takes the mixture away with him. In an hour or two, or the following day, the purchaser returns with the medicine, which he says he gave to his wife or child, as the case may be, and that the patient was nearly killed by poison which was there through the blunder of the compounder. He says his physician has analyzed the mixture and demonstrated the presence of poison, and he allows the druggist to test it then and there. The poison is, of course, found, as the swindler has added it himself, and he thereupon announces his determination to sue the druggist for damages to atone for the results of his alleged blunder. If the pharmacist becomes frightened at the idea of a suit for damages, and thinks it may be possible that a mistake has been made, he may accept the suggestion of the blackmailer to settle the case out of court. The amount of settlement is said to vary from $50 to $200.

Miss Mattie Helen Beals, the young woman of Wichita, Kan., who drew a farm near Lawton, Oklahoma, in the recent land lottery at El Reno, was marshal of the new town of Lawton for one day, and she says that was enough. She says: "I am mighty glad to get out of Lawton. Such riding, drinking, robbing and killing you never saw. It makes me shudder. I don't think there are a dozen women on the town site. But those there are well treated." She thinks she will get $35,000 for her farm, which is to be cut up into town lots.

WILLIAM McKINLEY, MARTYR PRESIDENT

BRIEF SKETCH OF THE VICTIM OF A FOUL ASSASSIN'S BULLET.

Born, Raised and Lived in the State of Ohio All His Life, He Partook Something of the Sturdy Nature Which Has Characterized Many Statesmen From the Buckeye State—A Self-made Man of the People and a True Lover of Right and Justice—These Qualities Attracted the Members of His Party, and He Was Rapidly Advanced From Position to Position Until Elected President.

William McKinley was born at Niles, Trumbull county, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1843. He was the son of William McKinley and Nancy Campbell Allison.

When William McKinley was a small boy his father, who was engaged in the iron business at Niles, decided to move to Poland, in Mahoning county, Ohio, because of the superior educational advantages it afforded for their children. Here William McKinley's boyhood life really began, and like that of all boys in small communities it was devoid of any special incident.

When the call to arms came he was eighteen years old. A company was quickly formed in Poland and was dignified with the name of the "Poland Guards."

He made haste to join his friends and schoolmates and was mustered in with the company at Columbus.

Mr. McKinley served in the ranks until a few days after the first battle of Antietam, when he was promoted to a second lieutenancy. At the battle just mentioned he was acting commissary, and during the heat of the fight took to the front cooked rations to feed his hungry comrades, who had been without food for twenty-four hours.

Feb. 7, 1863, he was made first lieutenant; July 25, 1864, captain and brevetted major by President Lincoln for

Gallant Conduct on the Fields of Opequan, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek. He served on the staffs of ex-President Hays, Gen. Crook, Gen. Hancock and Gen. Carroll. He was with the old Twenty-third in all its fights and was mustered out with the regiment in July, 1865.

During his military service Mr. McKinley took part in the engagement at Clarks Hollow, Princeton, W. Va., the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Buffingtons Island, Ohio, in the campaign against Morgan's raiders at Cloyds Mountain, at Westchester, Va.; at the Berryville, Va.; at Cedar Creek and many other engagements.

After the close of the war Maj. McKinley entered upon the study of law. He was admitted to the bar at Warren in the early months of 1867. The young attorney practiced alone for awhile, having located at Canton, Ohio.

Maj. McKinley was an excellent advocate and made some of the best jury arguments ever made at the Stark county bar. At the time he was first elected to congress he enjoyed one of the leading places and one of the in the county. He prepared himself by thorough courses of reading for his public career. During all this time he was an active participant in Republican campaigns and early gave evidence of the power he afterward developed as a public speaker and orator.

Mr. McKinley first became prominent in the state politics of Ohio in the campaign in which his former colonel, Rutherford B. Hayes, was the Republican candidate for governor. Mr. McKinley threw himself into this contest with ardor, and was considered one of the most effective speakers of his party in that exciting campaign. It also made him widely known throughout the state among the party leaders and gave him an ambition to aspire to political preferment for himself.

In 1876 Mr. McKinley announced himself as a candidate for congress in his district. He had plenty of opponents for the nomination. Mr. McKinley was such a strong favorite that he had a majority of the delegates in almost every county in the district and was nominated on the first ballot in the convention.

For Fourteen Years After This event he represented the district of which Stark county was a part.

Aside from the part Mr. McKinley took at Washington in the important work before the congress he won for himself a reputation as an industrious, well informed, level headed member on any and all questions which came up.

During the fourteen years of his congressional life he came in hand-to-hand conflict with such skilled parliamentarians as Hewitt, Crisp, Randall, Morrison, Mills, Wilson, both the Breckinridges, Springer and a host of lesser lights. In these debates he nearly always came out ahead, and with hardly an exception sent home the last thrust amid loud applause from the Republican side of the house.

It was these qualities that soon attracted the attention of the Republican leaders in the house and led to Mr. McKinley's advancement in the party ranks. His first notable speech in the house was delivered on April 15, 1878, and was in opposition to the Wood tariff bill. In his advocacy of a protective tariff, a policy with which Mr. McKinley then first became prominently identified, he was actuated by the highest sense of public duty. Many of the prominent statesmen of the Republican party have at times wavered on the tariff question.

McKinley Never Did.

A year later he took up and discussed with great ability the tariff bill of 1883, which was the result of the labors of the tariff commission. The two strongest advocates of this bill, which became a law, were William D. Kelly of Pennsylvania, then chairman of the ways and means committee, and Mr. McKinley. It was upon this occasion that Mr. McKinley so firmly planted the protection banner upon the ramparts of the Republican party.

The part Mr. McKinley took in the tariff bill of 1890 was simply herculean and it was properly known as the "McKinley bill." He not only devoted all day to the committee work, but every night he was visited by those anxious to give information on the innumerable items which go to make up the schedules of a tariff act.

When completed the tariff bill of 1890 was undoubtedly the most complete, most harmonious and the most truly patriotic tariff law ever framed by an American congress.

Besides his conspicuous work on the tariff question in congress, Mr. McKinley was always conspicuous for his devotion to the interests of the veterans of the war and an advocate of the most liberal treatment of the men who had risked their lives that the Union might endure. It was at the great

National Convention of 1884

at Chicago at which Mr. McKinley's claims to leadership—or at least to be considered as one of the most prominent men of the nation in the councils of his party—came to be recognized. He was a Blaine man at this convention. In being for Mr. Blaine he but represented the overwhelming sentiment of the Mahoning valley; and yet while he favored Mr. Blaine, he had the kindliest feeling for the illustrious senator from Ohio, John Sherman, who at that convention was also a candidate for the presidency. Mr. McKinley was a strong advocate of the sentiment that all legitimate means should be sought to nominate Mr. Blaine, but if that was impossible Ohio should cast a solid vote for Mr. Sherman.

In the general election held in the fall of 1890, the year in which the McKinley tariff bill was passed, Mr. McKinley was again the nominee of the party in his district for congress, but was defeated through the aid of a Democratic gerrymander of his district.

From the very day of election in 1890, when it was known that Mr. McKinley had been defeated for congress, there was a strong sentiment throughout Ohio in favor of his nomination for governor the following year. There was no organized movement to effect this purpose. It was not necessary. When the state Republican convention met at Columbus in June, 1891, there for the gubernatorial nomination, that of William McKinley. Ex-Gov. Foraker put McKinley in nomination in a speech of great brilliancy and on motion of Ex-Gov. Foster, McKinley was unanimously nominated.

Was Only One Name Mentioned

The Republican state convention held in 1893 renominated Mr. McKinley for governor by acclamation and after a campaign none the less active than its predecessor, he was elected by a plurality of 80,995, up to that time the most phenomenal in the history of the state.

From the day of his inauguration Gov. McKinley took the greatest interest in the management of the public benevolent institutions of the state. He made a study of means for their betterment, a work in which he early secured the confidence and co-operation of his official and legislative colleagues. His policy was one of economy, yet he urged the preservation and improvement of the canals of the state and he was decidedly in favor of some form of appropriation for the betterment of the country roads.

Some time before the Republican national convention of 1892 Mr. McKinley had privately and publicly expressed himself as in favor of the Renomination of Harrison.

Having committed himself, Mr. McKinley stood by his declaration clear through. He was elected delegate-at-large as a Harrison man and the understanding was that Ohio would vote solidly for the president's renomination.

The convention made Mr. McKinley its permanent chairman. R. M. Nevin of Dayton, was his alternate. Before he took the chair as presiding officer Mr. McKinley specifically charged Mr. Nevin to vote for Mr. Harrison. Only one vote was taken on the nomination for president. When Ohio was called ex-Gov. Foraker said Ohio asked time for a consultation and after a pause the vote of the state was announced as: Harrison 2 votes; William McKinley 44. Chairman McKinley immediately sprang up from his seat and shouted: "I challenge the vote of Ohio."

A brief and animated debate then ensued between ex-Gov. Foraker and Mr. McKinley, in which Foraker told the chairman that he had ceased to be a member of the Ohio delegation on assuming the post of presiding officer and could not be recognized. Finally a roll call of Ohio delegates was ordered and this resulted: McKinley 45; Harrison 1. The only vote cast by the Ohio delegation was that cast by McKinley's alternate. President Harrison was renominated on the first and only ballot, but Mr. McKinley

Had 182 Votes Cast for Him

despite the fact that he was not a candidate. Mr. Harrison was defeated for re-election and the Democratic party assumed charge of the nation's affairs March 4, 1893. [illegible] from industrial prosperity to industrial adversity known in the economic history of our country. Under its blighting effects private fortunes went down, values shrank, corporations were pushed to the wall, banks closed their doors, solvent firms sought refuge in the hands of receivers, the people took alarm and drained the savings banks of their deposits, orders for merchandise and commodities stopped and whole communities of wage-earners were discharged from mines, mills, factories and workshops.

During the campaign of 1894 Mr. McKinley spoke in sixteen states and it was estimated at the time that he had addressed over two million people. He spoke in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Kentucky, Louisiana, West Virginia, Tennessee, Pennsylvania and New York.

In many places the crowds that went to hear him were the largest ever gathered in the places upon any occasion. He made 371 speeches in that campaign and visited over three hundred places. The result of this campaign is a matter of history.

Mr. McKinley's second term as governor of Ohio expired with the end of the year 1895 and he then returned to his old home in Canton. Between Jan. 1 of 1896 and June 16, when the Republican national convention met at St. Louis, his home was the mecca of Republican leaders from all parts of the United States. There was never any doubt as to the action of that convention, although Speaker Thomas B. Reed had conducted a vigorous campaign to obtain the nomination. Mr. McKinley was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 661½ votes to Mr. Reed's 84½. Morton, Quay, Allison and Cameron also received a small vote.

In the campaign that followed the tariff was only a subordinate issue, the fight being waged against the free silver doctrine enunciated by the nominee of the Democratic party, W. J. Bryan. Mr. McKinley not only secured a majority of the popular vote in this election, but broke the vote of the solid South by carrying Kentucky, Maryland and West Virginia. At the Republican national convention held in Philadelphia in June, 1900, he was renominated for the presidency without opposition by acclamation.

MURDERED BY A HALF-BREED.

Three Victims of a Fiendish Brute.

Grantsburg, Wis., Sept. 19. — Parties from the north part of the county have just arrived with the information that three children of the family of Mr. Bawaley, living at Lang's Dam, on Leon creek, were brutally murdered and their bodies burned. There were three children, girl sixteen, boy eight, and another child of four years. Louis Murgaw, a half-breed, has been in love with the oldest girl and her parents have seriously objected to his coming to the house. Bawaley and wife and Murgaw started cranberrying Sunday, and after going a mile Murgaw turned back and would go no further. The evidence is strong that he returned to the house, murdered the young lady and other children and fled. He was seen yesterday going toward Shell Lake. The parents returned Thursday and found the house burned and the children cut with gashes and bruises indicating a foul deed. The neighbors throughout this region are up in arms at the cowardly crime, and would mob Murgaw on sight. The sheriff is out with a posse and every hiding place is carefully covered.

AVENGERS HEADED OFF.

Four Minnesota Boys Start for Buffalo to Kill Czolgosz.

Madison, Wis., Sept. 19. — Four boys, ranging in age from ten to thirteen years, were arrested at Oregon, twenty miles south of here, to-day, by Deputy Sheriff McDill and are now being held at the city hall awaiting an officer and train to take them home. They are Glen and Howard Miller, Guy Harmor, and Morris Graham, all of Pine Island, Minn.

They left home Sunday afternoon armed with a dirk and a 43-caliber revolver for Buffalo to seek Leon Czolgosz and to avenge the president's death. They had money enough to carry them thus far, and after spending the day in wandering are ready to go home. Money has been telegraphed from home and the boys will take the train for Rochester, Minn., the nearest railway station.

HAMMOND BANK ROBBED.

Burglars Secure $6,000 in Cash and Valuable Papers.

Hammond, Wis., Sept. 19. — The Bank of Hammond was robbed Monday night of about $6,000 cash, also some bonds of the city of River Falls, Wis., of the denomination of $5,000 each. Banks, brokers and others are cautioned to look out for these. Entrance was gained by removing a panel in the rear door of the private office and digging a hole through the vault wall and using dynamite to break the safe. Papers, notes and private boxes were scattered. The institution is well insured. Officials have no clue, but are putting forth every effort to apprehend the thieves.

Under the Engine.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Sept. 19.—Dale Gilbert, a brakeman on the Great Northern, was found under a switch engine at daylight yesterday morning. The body had caught under the engine and been carried about for some time.

Farmers Favor 'Phones.

Sauk Center, Minn., Sept. 19.—Rural telephones are becoming the popular thing in Stearns county. The Sauk Center exchange recently began advocating the use of telephones among the farmers, and as a result many country extensions have been made. Before another year nearly every farmer in this section will have an instrument in his home.

MOB STOPPED BY BLUECOATS.

Chicago Mob Tries to Lynch Anarchists.

Chicago, Sept. 16—Armed with stones, ropes and sticks and shouting "Lynch the anarchists," a mob of 500 men and boys marched to the county jail at 9 o'clock Saturday night and attempted to break into the bastile. Several of the leaders kicked at the door and shouted for admittance, but the arrival of 100 policemen spoiled the plans of the enraged men who were "going to hang the nine anarchists" locked up in connection with the assassination of President McKinley. With drawn revolvers, the mob that had vengeance in their hearts, were dispersed by the bluecoats, but not until they had hurled their sticks and stones at the officers.

CZOLGOSZ IS ARRAIGNED

ASSASSIN OF PRESIDENT STUBBORNLY REFUSES TO ANSWER QUESTIONS.

CROWDS HISS THE PRISONER

A Plea of Not Guilty Is Entered for Him by the Lawyer Appointed by the Court to Defend Him—Prisoner Maintains the Appearance of Stolid Indifference and Is Evidently Shamming Insanity — Accused Will Be Tried in the Supreme Court Next Monday.

Buffalo, Sept. 10. — Leon F. Czolgosz, the assassin of President McKinley, was arraigned before Judge Edward K. Emery in the county court at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon on the indictment for murder in the first degree in fatally shooting President McKinley in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American exposition on Sept. 6. Again the stubborn prisoner refused to plead or even utter a word or sound, and the Hon. Loran L. Lewis, ex-supreme court justice, entered a plea of not guilty. The accused will be tried in the supreme court next Monday morning.

Crowds flocked to the city hall yesterday to see the prisoner, but the uncertainty surrounding the question as to whether or not counsel could be secured for him saved congestion of the court room and corridors of the hall.

The most notable incident of the day was the hissing of the prisoner by the crowds that surged around him as he was being escorted down the stairs still draped in mourning garb. The strong guard of patrolmen and deputy sheriffs had been dispensed with so that the people were able to get nearer the prisoner as he passed to and from the court room.

Refuses to Answer Questions.

As a result of the urging of President Adelbert Mott of the Erie County Bar association, Judge Lewis, one of the attorneys assigned as counsel by Judge Emery, called at the Erie county jail at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon to see the prisoner. Czolgosz refused to talk to Judge Lewis and even refused to answer questions as to whether or not he wanted any counsel. Judge Lewis said that nevertheless he would appear for the prisoner upon arraignment even if he decided not to accept the assignment of the court.

Although the prisoner's demeanor was still one of stubbornness he gave a little more evidence of concern than upon his first presence in court. When questions were being asked of him rapidly he moistened his lips with his tongue and seemed to be endeavoring to maintain the appearance of stolid indifference. In his roaming glances the prisoner's eyes met those of a reporter who stared him full in the face. In a moment the prisoner's eyelids drooped and he shifted uneasily. However, aside from the slight evidences of uneasiness, Czolgosz's appearance was that of a man shamming insanity.

FEARING FOR HANNA.

Friends Are Apprehensive of an Attempt on His Life.

Cincinnati, Sept. 10. — If information that is in the hands of proper authorities is true, Senator Hanna is a marked man. His life is in danger. This is the information that comes from a prominent official and a warm personal friend of the senator who has been in Cleveland and Buffalo during the last week. Extraordinary precautions have been taken to prevent an attempt on the life of the noted Ohioan. The information in the hands of the right officials came to them carefully through the mail, though there have been personal warnings to the effect that the senator was the next man chosen to die at the hands of an assassin. Senator Hanna takes the matter lightly, but his friends are apprehensive, and they have seen to it that he goes nowhere unless an officer, or may be two, accompany him and are close at his side all the time.

A GOLDMAN FUND.

Bakers Pass the Hat Around and an Illinois Town Threatens a Boycott.

Elgin, Ill., Sept. 10. — A boycott may be declared against some bakeries of this city because last Sunday the bakers and pastry cooks' union met and a sum was subscribed for the defense of Emma Goldman. At first the fifty members of the union were called upon to donate $1 each, but after a heated discussion it was decided that a voluntary subscription should be taken up. Just $3.57 was found in the hat after the meeting, and this was forwarded to Emma Goldman. The citizens of Elgin are indignant, and a committee waited on all the Elgin bakeries and demanded the discharge of those who had contributed to the Emma Goldman "defense fund" upon penalty of a systematic boycott.

GOLDMAN ARRAIGNED.

She Received Two Letters Threatening Her Life.

Chicago, Sept. 19. — Another recess in the anarchist habeas corpus proceedings was taken yesterday. The hearing was postponed until Monday at the request of counsel for the prisoners. Fear of mob violence should the anarchists appear on the streets was the chief influence with the prisoners in allowing their attorneys to make a motion which will keep them behind the bars another week.

Mill Changes Owners.

Kulm, N. D., Sept. 19. — The Kulm roller mills, owned by Ludwig Billigmeier, have been sold to G. J. Dobler of Freeman, S. D. Mr. Dobler is an enterprising business man and the mill will run at full blast from now on.

Raid Upon Reds.

Pittsburg, Sept. 19. — A special from a staff correspondent says thirty armed men raided the anarchists of Guffey Hollow, Westmoreland county, and forced twenty-five families to take their departure before daylight.

NO GUARD FOR ROOSEVELT.

President Walks the Streets of the Capital Alone and Unwatched.

Washington, Sept. 22.—The fact that President Roosevelt walked from the White House to the residence of Secretary Hay and back again at lunch time, and also to the Cowles residence at the close of his work yesterday, alone and apparently unwatched by policemen or secret service agents, has caused widespread comment. The act serves as an object lesson touching the new president's attitude on the much discussed question of the wisdom and efficacy of guards about the person of the president. Plainly President Roosevelt does not feel in need of any further protection than Citizen Roosevelt had, and does not mean to have it. The president is not led to this determination by a spirit of bravado, but because he knows that guards never have succeeded and never will succeed in staying the hand of an assassin. The president is evidently prepared to defend himself from threatened danger when going about his ordinary pursuits. He undoubtedly feels justified in assuming that if a man offers to attack him the assailant will be the man to be pitied rather than his intended victim.

WORK FOR MACARTHUR.

Report Upon Brevets, Medals of Honor and Awards.

Milwaukee, Sept. 22.—Maj. Gen. Arthur MacArthur arrived in Milwaukee yesterday afternoon and will remain a week or ten days. He has orders from Washington for indefinite duty on the board to examine and report upon brevets, medals of honor and all awards recommended for officers and soldiers who served in Porto Rico, Cuba, China and the Philippines. The war department attaches great importance to this, and wants the report ready so that it can be submitted immediately to congress when it meets in December. This duty will keep Gen. MacArthur occupied until he eventually is assigned a command.

SUSPICIOUS CHARACTER.

Asks for the Address of President Roosevelt's Sister.

Washington, Sept. 22.—The police are looking for a man who approached several pedestrians early yesterday and asked the address of President Roosevelt's sister, the wife of Commander Cowles of the navy. Several officers were detailed to guard the Cowles residence. The man is described as about forty years old, speaks with a foreign accent, has light moustache, wears dark clothes and carried a box about eight inches long and three and a half wide.

STRUGGLE FOR LIFE.

An Old Lady Assaulted and Murdered, Presumably by Tramps.

Deadwood, S. D., Sept. 22.—Mrs. Matilda Foust, an old lady, was found dead yesterday near Strawberry creek, half a mile beyond Pulma, by a teamster. Her head was badly bruised and her wrists looked as though they had been gripped tightly in a struggle. It is believed she had been assaulted and then murdered by some railroad hoboes. She had been missing for three days.

HALF-WAY TOWN

An easy road runs smoothly down
To Half-Way Town;
For everything that's but begun,
And everything that's never done,
Just rolls aside and, one by one,
Goes into Half-Way Town.

Half-finished walls are tumbling down
In Half-Way Town.
Half-finished streets are always lined
With half-done work of every kind;
And all the world just lags behind
In dreary Half-Way Town.

Keep straight along, and don't look down
Toward Half-Way Town.
They say, if every one should try
To keep on moving, brisk and spry,
We should discover, by and by,
There's be no Half-Way Town.
—Youth's Companion.

Dr. Mollie.

BY JAMES NOEL JOHNSON.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

In the town of Emmonsville there dwelt a young girl who had resolved to become a physician. Strange to relate, she was very beautiful; stranger still, she was not one of those new women that would have looked so much better in masculine togs, and still stranger, she was very much in love with a handsome, lovable, young man, Jerome Boucher, and had already promised to marry him.

Now this young man was a lawyer of great promise, but little present achievement. He was not in a position to undertake a dual responsibility at the present, and, during the interim, Miss Mollie Dalton couldn't see any great good sense in being unemployed. While her Jerome was struggling up the hill she believed it almost wicked that she should watch him, hands folded, in the valley of idleness.

But Jerome could not bear the thought of her being a doctor, and he told her well of it, as they sat together on the soft turf, beneath the shade of a great beech one August afternoon.

"Mollie Darling," said Jerome, his fine eyes brimming with lovelight, "how could I bear to hear you called Dr. Mollie? Oh, I couldn't, and shall not! Please get that notion out of that pretty head. Such a notion, long continued, will disfigure you, dear. If you keep nourishing that scientific idea it will drain all the sources of your beauty. Oh, you look like a doctor—you little nosegay of feminine sweetness! I tell you, though, you can transform and disfigure yourself. The mind can knead the body into most any shape it sees fit. By their looks ye know what people are.

"If you persist in your determination, the dimples of your cheek will sink, spread and deepen into concavities. Your golden, glossy hair will wear off short, and get straight, dry and pale as wheat stubble in dog days. Your plump lips, red and warm now, will get ironed down thin and tucked in at the corners. Your nose, straight, fine and Greek, will get a hump on itself, and sharp and hooked at the end like a 'hawk-billed' knife. Your expressive blue eyes will lose their adorable softness and luminosity and will become sharp, penetrating, analytic, scientific. Oh! how could I bear it! Mollie's sweet blue eye becomes the doctor's scientific eye!"

During this disquisition "Mollie Darling" gazed at him with face sparkling with smiles, but beneath those smiles, like a back wall, frowned a stern resolution. Jerome saw this, and looked discouraged.

"Jerome," she responded in a quiet, decided voice, "My mind is fully made up. I'm going to be something and know something in my own right. I have got rid of all those false notions respecting woman's sphere. Woman was given brain and hands to be used. She was not made to sit back in beautiful, rosy stupidity and idleness. A capacity for effort implies a duty to use that capacity. I shall study medicine. I'll equip myself for self-defense. I shall not lean helplessly against you as a pillar of strength. The pillar might get broken. I shall qualify myself to be a physician; then if good fortune will fix it that I'll not need to practice, very good; but if misfortune comes, I'll be ready to meet it with skilled weapons."

"When do you leave?"

"I can't listen to you patiently, dear," cried Jerome. "You have promised to be mine. I forbid your going to a medical school."

"But I'm not yours yet, understand!" returned Mollie, a good deal of emphasis in look and voice.

Jerome suddenly drew in his firm lips and faint lightning played in his eyes.

"I had no idea, Mollie," he spoke in a surprised tone, "that you could be so unreasonable and perverse."

"You mean you didn't know I could be so sensible and farseeing," she returned, with a defiant smile.

Jerome rose to his feet. He ran his long fingers through his soft chestnut hair, then pulled his hat down hard on his head. He gazed absently toward a cornfield a hundred yards away, in which a man was plowing, and a fine, buxom young woman was cutting weeds from the corn rows after him. The man halted, turned toward the woman, uttered some banter, then playfully picked up a clod and threw it at her. She dodged the clod, gayly cackling, and then playfully lifted the menacing hoe toward him.

Mollie caught the idylic picture, and, looking up at Jerome with a meaning expression, exclaimed:

"Happy young married folk!"

But the suggested picture of mutual help was lost on Jerome at that moment. He was a typical young southerner of the old school—one of those who contemplate women through chivalric ideals only. A woman, according to his doctrine, is a genius or inspiration for man, but she, her sacred self, must not achieve.

"When do you leave?" he asked in a sad voice.

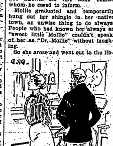
"Next Monday."

"So do I."

Mollie went to a medical school in New York. Where Jerome went was not known. He left none behind whom he cared to inform.

Mollie graduated and temporarily hung out her shingle in her native town, an unwise thing to do always. People who had known her always as "sweet little Mollie" couldn't speak of her as "Dr. Mollie" without laughing.

So she arose and went out to the liberal, welcoming West, and located in a booming mining town.



"You are a strange doctor."

Her shingle attracted little attention, but her beautiful face and figure did from the first. Before a week passed she had begun to get patients, and, what was better, fees were paid in advance, and usually double the amount of the charge. Before two weeks went by she was getting calls hourly. A novel fact soon began to dawn on her, however, that was disturbing. She began to discover that nearly all her patients were handsome young men, and that if they were diseased at all the complaints were so deep as to baffle her powers of discovery. Was she a failure in diagnosis?

A young man would come in complaining of heart trouble. He would lie down on a sofa and a long examination with stethoscope would ensue. The heart pulsations, except for a little nervous excitement, which the patient rather than she could have accounted for, was all she would find. Cases of monotonous similarity were multiplying and her professional pride and dignity were suffering. Some young gentlemen would insist on a second examination, and when she would sternly assure them that there was only functional excitement at most they would not be satisfied.

All these experiences set her to thinking, and quietly investigating. She soon learned that in nearly every instance her would-be heart patients were single men! Her landlady still further enlightened her one day by remarking: "You pirty little thing, you! Jest as long as you remain as pirty as you are now, heart trouble is goin' to be owful in these parts! It'll take the form of jealous heartaches among all the gals!"

Poor little doctor!

She felt so shamed and humiliated she didn't know what to do. To have her noble profession turned into a subject of mockery and burlesque and she herself made ridiculous she could not bear much longer. Only her need to do something for her daily bread kept her from tearing that sign from the door and flying back East.

One day she was sitting in her office sadly ruminating when her door opened and a tall, fine looking, bearded man entered.

"Is this Dr. Dalton's office?" he asked with an embarrassed hitch in his voice.

"I presume you saw the sign," she replied, hardly looking up.

"Ah-hem! Well, I want to get my eyes examined."

She cast a reluctant professional glance at his eyes, and replied:

"There's nothing the matter with your eyes, sir."

He stared at her dumbfounded.

"Well, I must say you are a strange kind of doctor!"

"A kind, probably, that you can't see through," she replied, with a professional air.

"Say, Dr. Dalton, I've got plenty of money, and you hold yourself out as a doctor. I insist that you look into my eyes and see what it is that's got in 'em. You surely don't pretend to thoroughly examine eyes merely glancing toward 'em."

She forced herself up and came slowly toward his chair.

She pushed up the left lid with professional deftness, and instantly dropped it, saying:

"I see nothing in your eyes, sir."

"Nothing at all?" he asked eagerly.

"Nothing, I say."

"Look at me doctor, and tell me! didn't you see a great deal of love in them—Say, Mollie Darling?"

And this strong, scientific woman began to cry, and he began to laugh, and a moment later her ear was at his great chest, but not to listen for irregular heart beats. An hour later, when he called her "doctor" she slapped him.

MAKING AN EXPLOSIVE.

The Care Taken by Britons in Preparing Powerful Cordite.

Hayle, a little port on the coast of Cornwall, has been attracting considerable attention of late, owing to the fact that it is the place where cordite is made, and the making of high explosives has recently been a matter of parliamentary inquiry. Cordite was first adopted for military purposes by the British government in the year 1890. The manufactory at Hayle was established in 1888, when cordite was sold for use only in mining operations. The explosive is now said to be the perfection of smokeless powder, the most unerring propelling agency yet discovered. It derives its name from its shape, and in process of manufacture its shape suggests the appearance of discolored macaroni. It is made in all sizes to fit the charges of various weapons used by land and sea forces, from the 12-inch naval gun, taking cords half an inch in diameter, down to the army pistol, which takes threads not exceeding one-hundredth part of an inch in thickness.

The progress of manufacture is intricate. But one of the essentials may be mentioned. Mixed acids must be forced up to a tower at the highest point of the estate, to be mixed with glycerine, when the first process of nitrating takes place. From here the nitro-glycerine permeates back to the lower levels, increasing in purity at each successive halting place. There are only two divisions of the cordite factory, colloquially known among the men as the "outside" and the "inside." The "outside" comprises those departments which are not primarily dangerous, and where the stringent precautions which rule the "inside" are not essential. In the "inside," on the other hand, there are iron rules which must be obeyed to the letter.

The visitor who crosses this danger area under the conduct of the manager must submit to be searched, so that nothing in the nature of glass, knives or matches is left in his pockets. He will not be allowed to pass beyond the door of the shops, though he can observe the operations from the entrance. No one is allowed to set foot upon the polished white floors who has not donned special soft-soled boots.—Chicago News.

AN UNAPPRECIATED INSECT.

The Mission of the Spider as Seen by Scientists.

It is a pity that such interesting and useful creatures as spiders should be so universally disliked, writes N. Hudson Moore in the Chautauquan. The chief prejudice against them arises from the poisonous nature of their sting or bite, but if one can put all this mass of testimony out of mind and believe that a spider's bite is no more harmful than a needle's prick one can endure their proximity, and study their habits at leisure. Who that kills a spider is prepared to do its work to mankind? Under the head of beneficent insects should be written large the name Arachnida. Their mission is to keep down the hordes of insects whose increase would threaten the life of mankind. Some scientist has advanced the theory that if dragon flies were raised in sufficient numbers they would keep down the hordes of mosquitoes that ravage our coasts, as well as our inland retreats. But Mr. Henry McCook, our most famous arachnologist, thinks that if spiders were protected and suffered to increase the mosquito plague would be lessened. Many people are prejudiced enough to consider the remedy worse than the disease!

Refitting Old Cars.

A car-refitting company in New York city buys old Pullman coaches, tears the inside furnishings out and refits them according to the wishes of its customers. Whatever kind of private car a man may wish he may order—parlors, handsomely carpeted, sitting-rooms, dining-rooms, sleeping compartments, smoking-rooms—all with equipment more or less perfect, according to the price. And cars are refitted in this way and sold for prices varying from $1,500 to $15,000. Very handsome and serviceable cars have been built from the old "castaways," and the man of moderate means can travel privately and comfortably in a home of his own.

Dinner Party of Twelve.

A charming dinner table, arranged for a party of twelve, was spread with a cloth of the finest white linen elaborately open-worked; lace-edged and inserted with Hungarian handmade lace. This cloth was laid over a slip of pale green satin. The flowers chosen were sweet peas of all colors, mingled with green and white ribbon, ribbon glass, [illegible] and the [illegible] napkins were lace trimmed and drawn to match the tablecloth.—Boston Journal.

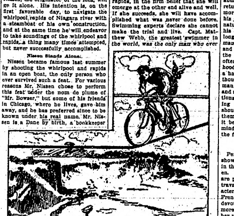
Niagara Sensations of the Past

Niagara Falls and the Whirlpool rapids are just now furnishing more sensations than at any one time in their history. The prospect of having unprecedented crowds to witness a feat, together with the desirability of doing something which will fit into the same niche in history with the Pan-American exposition, has set ambition ablaze in the breast of every person who thinks he is able to perform any record breaking freakish action at America's great wonder.

There is one man, however, who is ready to undertake a remarkable feat on the turbulent bosom of the Whirlpool rapids mainly in the interest of science—a feat so daring that he has not been able to get any expert scientist who would risk his life in order to assist in the enterprise. So, Mr. P. M. Nissen, the originator of the idea, will go it alone. His intention is, on the first favorable day, to navigate the whirlpool rapids of Niagara river with a steamboat of his own construction, and at the same time he will endeavor to take soundings of the whirlpool and rapids, a thing many times attempted, but never successfully accomplished.

Nissen Stands Alone.

Nissen became famous last summer by shooting the whirlpool and rapids in an open boat, the only person who ever survived such a feat. For various reasons Mr. Nissen chose to perform this feat under the nom de plume of "Mr. Bowser," but some of his friends in Chicago, where he lives, gave him away, and he has preferred since to be known under his real name. Mr. Nissen is a Dane by birth, a bookkeeper



CYCLIST FARREL CROSSING THE NIAGARA RIVER.

by occupation, a college graduate and entitled to write B. S. after his name. For some time he and a boat builder have been at work rebuilding the boat he used last year, which he called the "Fool Killer."

It is Mr. Nissen's intention to launch from the Canadian side, steam across and start on his trip from the American side. When he reaches the rapids he will turn the Fool Killer's head up stream and make a sounding through the pipe. Then he will let her drift down, stern first, start up again, make a sounding at a point abreast of the previous one, sound and repeat the performance until he has sounded clear across the river. Then he will drift farther down and make another line of soundings, and so on until he has sounded the rapids all over. Photographers he has previously placed at regular distances along the shore will take snapshots as the whistle blows, and this will show the location of the boat, this to be determined exactly by surveying instruments afterward. Mr. Nissen will make these surveys personally. The results he will keep to himself unless the governments on either side are willing to purchase them.

Over Falls on Bike.

A man poising himself on a bicycle with grooved wheels and scorching on a cable over the whirling gorge and through the mist that rises from the angry river far below is the sight that may be witnessed at Niagara mostly any day. The man that says he has every preparation made to make the trip is George H. Farrell of Chicago, who has proved himself an expert fancy trick rider, and believes his nerve will take him scathless even over the Niagara river. If successful it will be the first trip of its kind. A man named Jenkins rode over the river some years ago on a three-wheeled machine, but Farrell's venture is quite another matter. Farrell made arrangements with the veteran manager of such enterprise, William Leary of Buffalo, to take the affair in hand. He cannot say precisely the day on which he will make the attempt, but it will be soon.

Carlisle Graham, who recently went through the whirlpool rapids in a barrel, is arranging for a trip in company with Maud Willard of Canton, O. Miss Willard will go through the rapids in Graham's barrel. If she is swept out of the whirlpool Graham will leap into the river, protected by a life preserver, and swim with the barrel to Lewiston. If Miss Graham is rescued in the pool Graham will make the trip from the whirlpool outlet to Lewiston alone, the distance being four miles through frightfully rough waters. If Miss Willard goes to Lewiston she will be the first woman to go clear through the waters of the gorge.

To Swim the Rapids.

One of the most dangerous and thrilling feats ever attempted by a human being is scheduled to occur on Sept. 25 next, when Cora Beckwith, a slim English girl, who is now doing swimming feats at the Pan-American exposition, will, according to her own announcement, throw herself into Niagara river at the head of the whirlpool rapids, in the firm belief that she will emerge at the other end alive and well. If she succeeds, she will have accomplished what was never done before. Swimming experts declare she cannot make the trial and live. Capt. Matthew Webb, the greatest swimmer in the world, was the only man who ever tried to swim the rapids, and he was drowned.

Miss Beckwith frankly admits that she does not intend to risk her life for glory, but for the money which will subsequently accrue to her, through the reputation which she shall have achieved.

To all the expostulations of friends, and the warnings of experts, Miss Beckwith has only one reply:

"I can only die once, and if I must die it will be quickly over."

It Didn't Help Him.

"Yes," he said, "I've quit, and I want to say that I think these stories of the way men get ahead in the world are all fairy tales. I've tried the methods and know. Only a few days ago I read about Tom L. Johnson making his first big hit with the manager of a street railroad by picking up the scrap iron he found lying around. 'You're the kind of a careful man I want,' said the manager, and he promoted him right away. That was enough for me, so I began picking up things whenever the boss was near. 'What are you doing?' he demanded yesterday. 'There's no use letting these things go to waste, sir,' I answered, for that's what Tom Johnson said. 'Of course not,' he said, 'and we hire men for a dollar a day to do just that class of work. But we can't afford to have clerks wasting their time over it. Hump yourself back into the office, now, or I'll have you on the pay roll as a day laborer.' So I quit. Somehow things don't seem to happen in real life the way they do in print."

Doing Well.

Not long ago a certain village club arranged "a grand cricket match, admission 1 penny," for the benefit of John, the old man who looked after the ground. There were no tickets printed, and John stood at the gate of the cricket field and collected the pennies himself. It was a very hot day, there was a public-house just across the road, and John's thirst—always troublesome—was simply unquenchable. Some time after the luncheon interval a gentleman who takes a keen interest in the club approached the gate and addressed the old guardsman: "Well, John, you appear to be doing well. There's quite a big gate, I see." "Weel," replied John, deliberately, "it ain't a bad 'un, I must say. 'Owsumover, I managed to sup (drink) the gate money so far, an' I could do wi' a trainload o' folks yet!"—London Spare Moments.

Greatest Loss of Life at Sea.

The shipwreck in which the greatest number of lives was lost was that of the Royal George (108 guns), off Portsmouth, on the 29th of August, 1782, when nearly 1,000 lives were lost. In the case of the wreck of the Queen Charlotte, a first-rate ship of the line, which was destroyed by fire on the 17th of March, 1800, off the harbor of Leghorn, 703 lives out of a total of 859 were lost. The St. George (98 guns), Defence (74 guns) and the Hero (74 guns), on the 24th day of December, 1811, stranded on the coast of Jutland, and about 2,000 lives were lost, [illegible] of the seamen being saved. In the case of the wreck of the Princess Alice, which was run into by the Bywell Castle in the Thames, near Woolwich, and sunk on the 3d of September, 1878, between 600 and 700 lives were lost. On the wreck of the White Star company's steamer Atlantic, which struck on the Meagher rock, about 560 lives were lost, while 442, including the captain, were saved.—Tit-Bits.

LAUGH AND LIVE LONG.

World Full of People Who Are Glad to See Us.

Thackeray truly remarked that the world is for each of us much as we show ourselves to the world. If we face it with a cheery acceptance we find the world fairly full of cheerful people, glad to see us. If we snarl at it and abuse it we may be sure of abuse in return. The discontented worries of a morose person may very likely shorten his days, and the general justice of nature's arrangement provides that his early departure should entail no long regrets. On the other hand, a man who can laugh keeps his health, and his friends are glad to see him. To the perfectly healthy laughter comes often. Too commonly though, as childhood is left behind the habit fails, and a half-smile is the best that visits the thought-lined mouth of the modern man or woman. People become more and more burdened, with the accumulations of knowledge and with the weighing responsibilities of life, but they should still spare time to laugh. Let them never forget, moreover, and let it be a medical man's practice to remind them that "a smile sits ever upon the face of Wisdom."—London Lancet.

Tidy from Tip to Toe.

Perhaps no women in the world show as much taste and good sense in the matter of dress as French women. It is even safe to say that they are perfectly dressed. Thrift, not extravagance, is the foundation of character in rich and poor alike, and the French woman is educated to it. She devotes more attention to and has more pride for what is not visible—her underwear, such as petticoats, corsets, hose, etc.—and sees to it that these things are selected according to her occupation and station in life. One costly thing is not purchased at the expense of another. A servant, for instance, will not make herself ridiculous—as they constantly do in America—by appearing on the street in a red silk petticoat, colored stockings and ragged shoes. If she cannot afford to have feathers in her hat she will not buy stupid-looking imitations. In fact, she is tidy from tip to toe.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Greatest of Human Cargoes.

The Kildonan castle, when first fitted out as a transport for South Africa, carried 2,700 rank and file, 110 officers in the first class, 80 in the second class and about 300 of a crew, being 3,190 in all. In addition, twelve horses were carried, and the mere fitting of the necessary accommodation occupied 3,000 men for eighteen days. The Celtic, when full in its ordinary trade, slightly exceeds this, the passenger accommodation comprising room for 374 first-class, 160 second-class and 2,352 third—a total of 2,886. In addition the deck crew numbers 64, the engine room and stokehold require 92 men, and the steward's department has 170—335 in all—making the grand total 3,221 souls.—Pearson's Weekly.

Wild Flowers in Danger.

Persons interested in wild flowers are endeavoring to create—and to organize—a sentiment for the protection of our native plants, especially near large cities, says the Youth's Companion. The pond lily, trailing arbutus, native orchids, fringed gentian and many of the evergreens have been gathered in Massachusetts for sale in such quantities and so steadily sought by frequenters of suburban woods, that their extinction is threatened. The remedy suggested is that care be used to cut rather than pull the flowers, so that the roots need not be disturbed, and that those who gather rare plants for market should be discouraged by lack of patronage.

Columbus and His Salary.

In the building known as the "Lonja," at Seville, Spain, are preserved the archives of the Indies—the early Spanish colonies in America—from the time of their discovery until a few years ago. It contains the account of the payment of the crews of the caravels of Columbus upon his first voyage. The minister of finance in his report shows that there were 82 men under pay. Columbus himself, with the title of admiral, received a salary of $320 a year. The captains of the three ships received, respectively, $16, 18 and $19 a month. The sailors received from $2 to $3.40 a month, including their subsistance and two suits of clothes a year.

Our Great Language.

He had a check in his hand, and he was telling a policeman about it. Said he: "I went into the bank with this and said to the feller at the winder: 'Give me the oof.' 'What's oof?' says he. 'Plunks,' says I. 'What's plunks?' says he. 'The rhino,' says I. 'And the tin,' says I. 'That's too sweet,' says he, and he stamped the check 'N. G.' and I've got to go elsewhere for my spondulicks."

ALL HEADS BOWED IN SORROW

NATION PAYS ITS TRIBUTE

SIMPLE AND IMPRESSIVE SERVICES IN THE ROTUNDA OF THE CAPITOL.

LOVE AND RESPECT FOR THE DEAD

Representatives of Every Phase of American Life and of Almost Every Nation on Earth Gather Around the Bier of the Stricken Chief Magistrate—Bishop Andrews Delivers a Beautiful Eulogy on the Life of William McKinley—Tremendous Crush in Which Many Are Injured.

Washington, Sept. 19. — The nation yesterday officially and with state ceremony, paid its tribute of respect and love to the memory of its stricken chief magistrate. This was almost the closing act in the awful tragedy which has drenched the civilized world in tears. Beneath the great white dome of the capitol funeral services of state were held over the remains of the dead president. It was eminently fitting that the services should be conducted in that beautiful rotunda hallowed by the history of the last sad rites of two other martyrs to the cause of the republic. As befitted the occasion and the character of the man whose remains were lying cold and rigid in the narrow embrace of the metallic casket, the services were simple. They were conducted in accordance with the rites of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which President McKinley was a lifelong member. Consisting only of two hymns, a song, a prayer, an address and a benediction, they were beautiful and Solemnly Impressive.

Gathered around the bier were representatives of every phase of American national life, including the president and the only surviving ex-president of the United States, together with representatives of the capital of almost every nation of the earth. Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Spain and all the republics to the southward of the United States mingled their tears with those of the American people.

Despite the fact that no attempt had been made to decorate the interior of the rotunda beyond the arrangements made about the catafalque, the assemblage presented a memorable sight. The somber black of the attire of the hundreds of civilians present was splashed brilliantly with the blue and gold of the representatives of the army and the navy and the court costumes of the diplomatic corps. As the sweet notes of Mr. McKinley's favorite hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," floated through the great rotunda the assemblage rose to its feet. Bared heads were bowed and eyes streamed with tears. At the conclusion of the hymn as Rev. Dr. Naylor, presiding elder of the Washington district, rose to offer prayer,

The Hush That Fell

upon the people was profound. When, in conclusion, he repeated the Lord's prayer, the great audience joined solemnly with him. The murmur of their voices resembled the roll of far distant surf. Scarcely had the word amen been breathed when the words of the song, "Some time we'll understand," went straight to the heart of every auditor. The solo was sung by Mrs. Thomas C. Noyes of this city, and the refrain was echoed and re-echoed by the double quartet choir.

The venerable bishop, Edwin G. Andrews of Ohio, the oldest bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, then took his position at the head of the bier. A gentle breeze through the rotunda stirred the delicate blooms which lay upon the coffin and the "peace that passeth understanding" seemed to rest upon the venerable man's countenance as he began his eulogy of the life and works of William McKinley. His words were simple, but his whole heart was in every one of them. His tribute to the Christian fortitude of the dead president was impressive. Upon the conclusion of the sermon the audience,

As If by Prearrangement, joined the choir in singing "Nearer, my God, to thee." All present seemed to be imbued with a sentiment of hallowed resignation as the divine blessing was asked by Rev. W. H. Chapman, acting pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. church, upon both the living and dead.

Mrs. McKinley did not attend the services at the capitol. It was deemed wise by those now nearest and dearest to her that she should not undergo the ordeal. She remained at the White House, comforted by every attention that loving thoughtfulness could suggest.

Yesterday morning dawned grey and dreary. The sky was overcast with low flying clouds. Nature itself seemed to be in mourning for the nation's dead. As the hours passed dashes of rain fell at intervals, but despite this discomfort tens of thousands of sorrowing people appeared early upon the streets. Both sides of Pennsylvania avenue, from the White House to the capitol, were massed with an impenetrable cordon of people wishing in this way to pay final tribute of love and respect for the dead. As the funeral cortege, escorted by troops representing every department of the nation's martial service, and by representatives of organizations, passed down the broad thoroughfare to the solemn notes of "The Dead March From Saul," wailed by the bands, the sorrowing people bared their heads despite the rain, and the many tear-stained faces bespoke their grief more eloquently than words. It was a silent throng. Not a sound was heard. With aching hearts all remembered that only a few months ago the dead president, then in the fullness of life and triumph, had passed along that same thoroughfare to be inaugurated a second time president. The flags that had fluttered greeting to him in March were furled and crepe-bedecked in September.

Religious and Civic

As with solemn and cadenced tread the procession moved down the avenue the people recognized as one of the mourners their former president, Grover Cleveland, who had come to pay ognized, too, their new president, upon whom the responsibilities of chief executive had been thrust so unexpectedly. With silent salute they greeted him, and with them he mingled his tears in sorrow for the dead.

At the conclusion of the funeral services in the rotunda the casket lid was removed in order that the immediate friends of the dead president might be afforded the comfort of

A Last Glance

at his features, and that the people whom he loved and who loved him might pass the bier for the same purpose. At 11:30 the crowds began to pass through the rotunda, and, during the six hours in which the body was lying in state it is estimated that 55,000 people viewed the remains. Just a 1 o'clock a frightful calamity was narrowly averted at the east front of the capitol. For hours the vast throng of people had been massed in front of the capitol awaiting an opportunity to enter the rotunda. When the doors were opened tens of thousands of people rushed almost frantically to the main staircase. The police and military guards were swept aside and almost in a twinkling there was a tremendous crush at the front of the great staircase. The immense throng swept backward and forward like the surging of a mighty sea. Women and children, a few of the latter babes in arms, were caught in the crowd and many were badly hurt. Strong men held children and even women high above the heads of the surging crowd to protect them from bodily injury. Despite the efforts of the police and military and the cooler heads in the throng approximately a hundred people were injured. Some of the were carried into the rotunda and into various adjoining apartments of the Capitol, where first aid and treatment was given them. A number were hurried to hospitals in ambulances, but the majority either were taken to or subsequently went unassisted to their homes. After the crush had been abated upon the staircase and plaza immediately in front of it were found tattered pieces of men's and women's wearing apparel of all kinds, crushed hats, gloves and even shoes. Watches, pocketbooks, keys and knives, were picked up.

When the remains of the dead president were finally closed forever to the view of Washington people the cavalry escort again was formed and conveyed them to the special train which carried the body to Canton. The magnificent display of floral offerings numbering no less than 125 pieces, and making the most remarkable floral tribute ever seen here, were taken to the station from the capitol in carriages and wagons, and there placed aboard a special car which had been provided for them. Three section, comprising in all twenty passenger coaches, were necessary to accommodate all those who accepted invitations to make the journey to Canton.

CUBANS JOIN IN.

Impressive Services Are Held at Havana.

Havana, Sept. 21.—The memorial services in memory of the late President McKinley held last night in the Tacon theater was largely attended. The stage was tastefully decorated with American flags in front and palm branches behind. In the center was a catafalque surmounted by a broken column. The choir composed of Americans sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Several addresses were delivered by Protestant and Catholic clergy and the band sounded "taps." The arrangements, which were made by Maj. Ballier, were carried out successfully and the ceremony was very impressive.

IMMENSE CROWDS

Attend Memorial Services Held in Santiago.

Santiago, Cuba, Sept. 21.—A memorial service was held at 1 o'clock yesterday morning at the Oriental theater in honor of the late President McKinley. The hall is the largest auditorium in the city, and it was packed with people. All the American officers wore full uniforms and side arms.

Memorial Service in England.

London, Sept. 21. — By command of King Edward a memorial service in honor of the late President McKinley was held in Westminster abbey. It was attended by many Americans and Englishmen of distinction. The lord steward of the household, Lord Pembroke, represented the king.

The London morning papers again appear with black borders and accounts of the funeral at Canton and of memorial services and tributes throughout the world. The memorial services generally comment upon the widespread sympathy evoked everywhere.

Canada Shows Its Sympathy.

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 21. — Yesterday throughout Ontario was observed as a day of mourning for the late President McKinley. In accordance with instructions from Ottawa the schools and courts in Toronto and other cities were closed. Memorial services, attended by crowds, were held by the leading churches, where eloquent tributes were paid to the many good qualities of the martyred president, and his favorite hymns were sung.

Mourning at Manila.

Manila, Sept. 21.—There were impressive civil, military and naval exercises held here in honor of the late President McKinley. The mourning was universal. Most of the business houses were closed. After a service at the palace, the military escorted the civil officials to the Luneta, where all the available troops, sailors and marines were assembled, and paid honors to the late president in the presence of thousands of spectators.

ANGUISH IN EVERY HEART.

Neighbors of William McKinley Tenderly Receive His Martyred Body.

Canton, Ohio, Sept. 20.—Tenderly and reverently those who had known William McKinley best yesterday received his martyred body into their arms. They had forgotten the illustrious career of the statesman in the loss of a great personal friend who had grown dearer to them with the passing of the years. They hardly noticed the president of the United States or his cabinet or the generals and admirals in their resplendent uniforms. The beautiful flag-draped casket which contained the body of their friend and fellow-townsman held all their thoughts. He had left them two weeks ago this very day in the full tide of the strength of a glorious manhood and they had brought him back dead. Anguish was in the heart of every man, woman and child. The entire population of the little city and thousands from all over Ohio, the full strength of the national guard of the state, eight regiments, three batteries of artillery, one battalion of engineers, 5,000 men in all, the governor, lieutenant governor and a justice of the supreme court representing the three branches of the state government were at the station to receive the remains. The whole town was in deep black. The only house in all this strange as it may seem, without a touch of mourning drapery was the old familiar McKinley cottage on North Market street to which so many distinguished men in the country have made pilgrimages in the days that are gone. The blinds were drawn but there was no outward token of the blow that had robbed it of its most precious possession. The flowers bloomed on the lawn as they did two weeks ago. There was not even a bow of crape upon the door when the stricken widow was carried by Abner McKinley and Dr. Rixey through it into the darkened home from which the light, for her, had fled forever. Only the hitching post at the curb in front of the residence had been swathed in black by the citizens in order that it might conform to the general scheme of mourning decoration that had been adopted. Sad as was the procession which bore the body to the courthouse, where it lay in state yesterday afternoon, it could not compare with the infinite sadness of that endless double line of broken-hearted people who streamed steadily through the dimly-lighted corridors of the building from the time the coffin was opened until it was taken home to the sorrowing widow at nightfall. They stepped softly lest their footfalls wake their friend from

Sorrow-stricken City,

His Last Long Sleep.

Tears came unbidden to wet the bier. Perhaps it was the great change that had come upon the countenance which moved them more than the sight of the familiar features. The signs of discoloration which appeared upon the brow and checks Tuesday at the state ceremonial in the rotunda of the capitol at Washington had deepened. The lips had become livid. All but two of the lights of the chandelier above the head were extinguished in order that the change might appear less noticeable, but every one who viewed the remains remarked the darkened features and the ghastly lips. When the body was taken away thousands were still in line, and the committee in charge of the arrangements was appealed to to allow a further opportunity to view the remains this morning before they were taken to the church. But this had to be reluctantly denied to them and the casket may never be opened again. The funeral services will take place to-day at 1:30 p. m. at the First M. E. church, of which the martyred president was a communicant and trustee. They will be brief by the expressed wish of the family. An imposing procession consisting of many of the G. A. R. posts in the state, the national guard of the state, details of regulars from all branches of the service, fraternal, social and civic organizations and representatives of commercial bodies

From All Over the Country,

the governors of several states with their staffs, the house and senate of the United States and the cabinet and president of the United States will follow the remains to Westlawn cemetery, where they will be placed in a receiving vault awaiting the time when they will be laid in the grave beside the two dead children who were buried years ago.

The number and beauty of the floral tributes which are arriving surpass belief. Flowers are literally coming by the ton. The hothouses of the country seem to have been emptied to supply them.

President Roosevelt, his naval aide, Capt. Cowles, Secretary Root and Assistant Secretary Hill are at the spacious residence of Mrs. George D. Harter on Market street. A company of the Ohio militia guards the house. During the afternoon the president walked over to the McKinley residence to inquire after Mrs. McKinley. He was informed that she had stood the trip from Washington bravely, but in the opinion of her physician it would not be advisable for her to attempt to attend the services at the church today. She will, therefore, remain quietly at her home with Dr. Rixey.

In Germany.

Berlin, Sept. 21.—Memorial services were held in various German cities. Those in Dresden attracted a large attendance of the highest official society and the Anglo-American colony. The king of Saxony and the other princes were represented by their respective court chamberlains and among those present were the members of the Saxon cabinet, the various consular representatives and local authorities.

In St. Petersburg.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 21.—Under the auspices of the United States ambassador, Charlemange Tower, impressive memorial services in honor of President McKinley were held yesterday afternoon in the British-American church. Many prominent Russians were present.

CONSIGNED TO THE TOMB

ALL THAT WAS MORTAL OF THE MARTYRED PRESIDENT IS LAID TO REST.

SCENE OF MOURNFUL GRANDEUR

Greater Reverence Was Never Shown to Any Man Living or Dead Than Was Shown to the Dead President at Canton—Final Ceremonies Are Grandly Simple and Impressive—Pathetic Feature Was the Absence of Mrs. McKinley, Who Was Too Weak to Attend the Services.

Canton, Ohio, Sept. 21.—With majestic solemnity, surrounded by his countrymen and his townspeople, in the presence of the president of the United States, the cabinet, justices of the United States supreme court, senators and representatives in congress, the heads of the military and naval establishments, the governors of states and a great concourse of people who had known and loved him, all that is mortal of the third president to fall by an assassin's bullet, was committed to the grave. It was a spectacle of mournful grandeur. Canton ceased to be a town and swelled to the proportions of a great city. From every city and hamlet in Ohio, from the remote corners of the South and from the East and West the human tide flowed into the town until 100,000 people were within its gates, here to pay their last tribute to the fallen chief.

The final scenes at the First Methodist church where the service was held, and at the beautiful Westlawn cemetery, where the body was consigned to a vault, were simple and impressive. The service at the church consisted of a brief oration, prayers by the ministers of three denominations and singing by a quartet. The body was then taken to Westlawn cemetery and placed in a receiving vault pending the time it shall be laid to rest who were laid to rest years ago. The funeral procession was very imposing and included not only the representatives of the army and navy of the United States, but the entire military strength of the State of Ohio and hundreds of civic, fraternal and other organizations. It was two miles long. There was no greater reverence shown to any man, living or dead, than to the dead president yesterday. As the funeral procession passed women sobbed convulsively. It was a wonderful tribute of surpassing love that was rendered yesterday in his native place to the memory of William McKinley, and it will be long before greater or more reverent honor is paid to any man. It was exactly four minutes after 4 when the funeral car bore the remains of the dead president through the gateway of his last resting place. Twenty minutes after that time the brief services at the vault was over, the members of the family and distinguished men of the nation who had come so far to do him honor, had passed through the gates on their homeward way. One hour and forty minutes after the hearse had entered the cemetery the place was clear and the dead president was resting alone under the watchful care of the men of the regular army. A resounded from the cement walk before the vault, another kept vigil on the grassy slope above, and at the head and at the foot of the casket stood armed men. Before the door, which was not closed, was pitched the tent of the guard, and there it will remain until the doors are closed to-day. Sentries will then guard the vault every hour of the day and night until the body has been borne to its final resting place.

Beside the Dead Children

Sentry's Measured Tread

Nature was kind in selecting the last resting place for President McKinley. Westlawn cemetery is on a high knoll overlooking the peaceful valley, with the busy little city of Canton laid out below. If it was not for an intervening church spire one might get from this elevation a glimpse of the McKinley home. Here looking out on his native city and his native state the body of William McKinley is laid to rest. The beauty of the grounds here attracted the country's landscape gardeners who have journeyed here to study its attractions. Yesterday it was doubly beautiful with the rustling trees giving off their first yellowed leaves of fall and adding a golden touch to the green clad slopes. Just inside the stately entrance stands the gray stone vault where for a time the casket will repose. Its dreary exterior was relieved yesterday by banked all about until the gray walls were shut out from view. But in due time it will be taken from the vault and committed to the little plot of ground lying further on. This is the McKinley lot, and here lie his father, whose name he bore, the mother he guarded so tenderly in life, his brother James, his sister Anna and his two children. And when that time comes a stately shaft of granite will arise above the grave telling of the civic virtues, the pure life and the martyred death of William McKinley.

One of the most pathetic features of the day was the absence of Mrs. McKinley from the funeral service at the church and cemetery when the body of her husband was laid to rest. Since the shock of the shooting, then of death, and through the ordeal of state ceremonies, she had borne up bravely. But there was a limit to human endurance, and when yesterday came it found her too weak to pass through the trials of the final ceremonies. Through the open door of her room she heard the prayer of the minister as the body was borne out of the house. After that Dr. Rixey remained close by her side, and, although the full force of the calamity had come upon her it was believed by those about her that there was a providential mercy in her tears as they gave some relief to the anguish of the heart within.

At 7 o'clock last night President Roosevelt and the members of the cabinet started back to Washington.

GRIEF IN WASHINGTON.

No Need of a Proclamation to Insure Observance of the Sad Event.

Washington, Sept. 21.—Twenty years after the death of Garfield the nation's capitol was again in mourning; the wheels of government were locked and the voices of the people were uplifted in prayer for the soul of William McKinley while his mortal remains were being committed to the tomb in his Ohio home. There was no need of a proclamation to insure a proper observance of the sad event here. Everywhere were to be seen badges of mourning, and on every flagstaff the ensign was at half-mast. Private and public business was absolutely suspended and every face showed signs of sadness. The city gave evidence in most impressive manner that its heart was with Canton in the solemn hour of President McKinley's funeral. At exactly half-past 2 o'clock the city ceased from labor, practically from locomotion, for five minutes. There was no official proclamation requiring such observance of the funeral hour, nor had there been any general agreement for such observance. But, when the hour came, as if by common instinct, men, women and children, white and black, came to a sudden halt in whatsoever they were engaged and sat or stood as still as statues wheresoever they chanced to be. Men on foot and on bicycles, the drivers of carriages and draft wagons, chaffeurs and trainmen stood in mute supplication for the dead. Street cars throughout the city were at a standstill, and generally the car operatives and their passengers united in a silent service which caused spectators to look on as if it were "the hush of being newly born." It was a beautiful contribution to the nation's breath of prayer, and it is safe to say that Washington never before in its history beheld so unique and striking, nor so spontaneous and unconventional a token of respect and love for any man.

GIBBONS' EULOGY.

Impressive Ceremonies in the Catholic Cathedral in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Sept. 21. — Memorial services were almost universal yesterday througout this state. Many congregations united in other than their own places of worship. Perhaps the most important and most impressive were the ceremonies at the cathedral in this city, at which Cardinal Gibbons delivered a eulogy.

In the South.

Charlottsville, Va., Sept. 21.—Business throughout the city was suspended yesterday. Exercises in memory of the nation's dead president were held in the university chapel and in the churches.

Savannah, Ga.—Throughout the day artillery in the city and at Fort Scriven boomed at half-hour intervals with a thirteen-gun salute at sunrise and forty-five guns at sunset. Business of all kinds was suspended. Services were held by all religious congregations in the city.

Observed in St. Louis.

St. Louis, Sept. 21.—In obedience to a general desire to show respect to William McKinley, St. Louis was perfectly quiet for five minutes yesterday afternoon. At 2 o'clock all river traffic, every street car in the city, every wheel on all the railroads terminating in St. Louis, and all business pursuits stopped for that length of time. The police arrested their steps as the bells began to toll, and stood hat in hand with bowed heads until the time allotted had passed.

Business Suspended in New York.

New York, Sept. 21.—All business except work of necessity was suspended in this city yesterday in respect to the memory of President McKinley, and the day of mourning was observed by persons of all religions. In all churches and in the synagogues special services were held. In marked contrast to the ordinary holiday custom here, all sporting events scheduled for yesterday were either abandoned or postponed.

Bryan Participates.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 21. — Memorial services for the dead president were held in this city. There was almost an entire cessation of business throughout the day. Gov. Savage presided, speaking briefly, and was followed in turn by Rev. Fletcher Wharton, G. M. Lambertson, H. M. Bushnell, Rev. Lewis Marsh, Chancellor E. Benj. Andrews, Congressman Strode and W. J. Bryan.

Suspended Operations.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 21. — Every business house, factory, shop and street car line suspended operations a portion of yesterday in connection with the memorial exercises. The leading service was held in the new auditorium, where Congressman J. A. T. Hull delivered an address on McKinley, the patriot.

Senator Foraker the Orator.

Cincinnati, Sept. 21.—At the hour of the McKinley funeral in Canton yesterday everything stopped here in all shops and all business houses closed. The memorial meeting was presided over by Mayor Julius Fleischmann. The principal orator was Senator J. B Foraker.

Philadelphia—The entire population of this city united in the expression of profound sorrow for the untimely death of President McKinley.

FOUND NO POISON

ANARCHIST CZOLGOSZ DID NOT DOCTOR HIS MURDEROUS BULLETS.

EXPERTS MAKE CAREFUL TEST

MENTAL CONDITION OF PRISONER IS AGAIN EXAMINED INTO.

ASSASSIN IS PERFECTLY SANE

BELIEVED BY LAWYERS THAT NO DEFENSE PLEA WILL BE ADVANCED.

Buffalo, Sept. 24. — The most important development in the Czolgosz case yesterday was the announcement that no poison had been found on the bullets or the revolver with which the anarchist assassinated President McKinley. Chemical and bacteriological examinations which were made yesterday afternoon revealed the fact that no poison was used by the murderer. Another examination to determine the exact mental condition of the prisoner was made in the Erie county prison yesterday afternoon by Dr. Carlos MacDonald, the alienist who was brought here for the defense by the Erie Bar association, and Dr. Arthur W. Hurd, superintendent of the Buffalo state insane hospital. The alienists were with the assassin for an hour and a half, and when they left both declined to discuss the case. District Attorney Penney and his entire staff spent the whole of the day at the city hall preparing for the trial of Czolgosz, which will begin before Justice White in Part III. of the supreme court today. Mr. Penney has confidence in the alienists and with City Chemist Albert C. Hill, who submitted his report upon the examination of the bullets and revolver.

Found No Poison.

Immediately after the death of the president one of the staff of physicians in attendance on the president expressed the opinion that the bullets may have been poisoned. District Attorney Penney, who had possession of the prisoner's revolver, ordered careful and thorough examinations made. Dr. Hill was directed to make a chemical examination of the bullets and the chambers and barrel of the revolver, and Dr. Herman G. Matzinger, one of the surgeons who performed the autopsy upon the president's body, was ordered to make a bacteriological examination. Yesterday afternoon Dr. Hill reported to the district attorney that his work showed no poison had been used. He also presented a written report, but it will not be used on the trial as the question is now eliminated from the case. Dr. Matzinger has now finished his bacteriological examination and his work also showed the absence of any poison. The district attorney accepted the theory although no formal report has been submitted. Experts in this city accept the report, as the slightest trace of poison would have been revealed.

Dr. MacDonald and Dr. Hurd, alienists for the defense, called on District Attorney Penney shortly before 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon and remained with him until 3:15, when they were by Dr. Solomon. The insanity experts went into Czolgosz's cell in "murderers' row" and were locked up in the cell with him until 4:45 o'clock, when they returned to the city hall and held another conference with the district attorney. Fifteen minutes later Dr. James W. Putnam, a local alienist, appeared and joined the conference. Although great secrecy was maintained at the district attorney's office it was learned yesterday afternoon that Dr. Alan McLane of Hamilton, one of the most celebrated alienists in the United States, and who was expert witness at the trial of Guiteau, is in Buffalo. Not a doubt as to Czolgosz's sanity exists in the mind of District Attorney Penney, so it is presumed that Dr. Hamilton is here merely to meet the question of insanity should the defense determine to make a fight on that ground. Although the defense declines to make any definite statement on the question concerning the final finding of Dr. MacDonald, it is the concensus of opinion amongst lawyers that no defense plea will be advanced by Judge Titus and Judge Lewis. Mr. Penney is already in possession of the report of Dr. Charles W. Fowler, Dr. J. W. Putnam and Dr. C. Reggio, Buffalo alienists of some note, that Czolgosz is perfectly sane.

Escorted to the Jail

CHINESE IN CONTROL.

Official Occupation of Chili by the Allies Terminates.

Tien-tsin, Sept. 23.—Yesterday terminated the official occupation of the province of Chili by the allies. There are about 16,000 troops here and along the line of communication with Pekin, although the international agreement provides for only 12,000. Some of these will shortly depart, but 13,000 or 14,000 men, and perhaps more, will remain through the winter. In fact, their stay will be indefinite. The excess of troops is made up of British and Germans. The English say that the Third Bombay cavalry and two batteries of artillery have been delayed in getting away. The dominance of the Chinese in Chili is now complete. They are also in control in Mongolia northeast of the Gobi desert, except the district between Wehol and Shanhaikwan is in a condition of chaos owing to the bandits there.

BUYS 2,000,000 WATCHES.

United States Sells to London Dealers the Largest Single Order Ever Given.

London, Sept. 24.—The London evening papers, under the head "Another American Invasion," reprint an article from the Liverpool Post stating that an American firm has agreed to deliver 2,000,000 watches in London during the next twelve months. The American firm outbid the Germans and Swiss. This is said to be the greatest order of its kind ever given.

ALL WERE IN THE VILE PLOT

POLICE ARE TIGHTENING THE COILS ABOUT THE ANARCHISTS.

EVIDENCE WILL BE SECURED

EMMA GOLDMAN AND OTHERS HAD A HAND IN THE CONSPIRACY.

BUFFALO POLICE HARD AT WORK

EFFORTS BEING MADE TO GET BAIL FOR CHICAGO ANARCHISTS.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—Although the local authorities received no word yesterday from Chief of Police Bull of Buffalo regarding the conspiracy which is said to have been responsible for the assassination of President McKinley, dispatches from the Pan-American city say that its police department is confident that within a short time it will find evidence which will prove that Emma Goldman, Dr. Isaac Saylin, Abraham Isaak and probably others now held by the Chicago authorities were in the plot to kill the nation's chief.

In the meantime, while the anarchists are held in the county jail and refuse to see anybody but personal friends, William Urbin, business manager of the Arbeiter Zeitung, is trying to interest the wealthier citizens interested in the cause of the prisoners in an endeavor to Obtain Bail for Them.

Miss Goldman said she did not care whether bail was obtained or not. She admitted it was better to be free, but intimated that if she was held prisoner longer she would become as much a martyr to the anarchists as President McKinley is to the people of the nation.

"I don't want to say anything," said the priestess. "Just say I deny that Buffalo story, that I say the dates are wrong, and that I am content."

This story referred to has been compiled in an effort to show Emma Goldman's connection with Czolgosz and others whom the police allege were in the conspiracy to kill the president.

ROYALTY WARMLY GREETED.

Great Outpouring of Canadians to Welcome the Duke of York.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 22. — The Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York reached the Canadian capital yesterday, and there was another great outpouring of people to give them a greeting of loyalty and warmth. The royal special reached Ottawa at 12:05 and the duke, attired in his favorite uniform of admiral of the British navy, alighted at once, accompanied by the duchess and the members of his staff. They were formally received by Lord Minto, governor general, and escorted to a state barouche. It was in parliament hall, surrounded by the handsome group of government buildings, that the formal ceremony of greeting the heir apparent took place, and here was gathered the largest crowd of all. The duke was attended by Viscount Chreiton, Lord Burton and Lord Wenlock, Prince Alexander of Teck and his military and naval aides in brilliant uniforms, and the scene was most picturesque. The several addresses were presented and the duke made an extended reply, expressing his appreciation of the honor shown.

Wreckage of the Hudson.

Calumet, Mich., Sept. 22. — Advices received yesterday noon from Eagle River state that persons patrolling the lake shore in the vicinity have found wreckage, presumably from the Western Transit line steamer Hudson. This wreckage consists of a couple of spars, hatch covers and a quantity of flour. The cargo of the Hudson consisted largely of the latter. No bodies have yet been found. Some of those who saw the boat go down Monday morning say that a small boat put off shortly before she sank, but as no such boat has been found along the beach the story is not credited, and it is thought that the crew of twenty-five men went down.

North Dakota State Bar.

Grand Forks, N. D., Sept. 23. — The State Bar association decided to hold the annual meeting next year at Devils Lake during the Chautauqua season. All the former officers were honored with re-election, as follows: President, Seth Newman, Fargo; vice president, J. H. Bosard, Grand Forks; secretary, W. J. Burke, Bathgate; treasurer, Attorney Baldwin, Jamestown.

Town Almost Wiped Out.

Atchison, Kan., Sept. 22.—Almost the entire business part of Effingham, twenty miles west of here, was wiped out by fire late Thursday night, over a dozen buildings, including Wolverton's general store and the National Washing Machine company's factory being destroyed. Estimated loss, $50,000. Origin of fire unknown.

Sioux City Capitalists in Hills.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 22. — H. J. Mayham of Denver has several Sioux City capitalists looking over the properties of the Hidden Fortune company, which owns a large acreage of valuable mining ground north of Lead. In the party were J. Bluckerson, W. J. Taylor, O. Nystrom, A Swanson, C. J. Nystrom, H. Anderson and H. Cook.

Sued by a Former Agent.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 22.—President Martin Bergh of the Independent Scandinavian Workmen's Association of America has been served with notice of a suit for $5,000 against the society for libel by Adolph Rydal of the Twin Cities. Rydal was at one time agent for the society.

Capt. Draper Dead.

Hongkong, Sept. 23. — Capt. Herbert L. Draper, United States marine corps, appointed from Kansas, died here the 10th of heart disease.

MRS. M'KINLEY'S CONDITION.

Friends Do Not Think She Is on the Verge of a Collapse.

Canton, Sept. 21.—The friends of Mrs. McKinley do not regard her as being upon the verge of a collapse. On the contrary, they express themselves as quite confident that she will be spared to them for a long time, in at least as good state of health as she has enjoyed for the last five years. Dr. Rixey said late yesterday afternoon:

"Mrs. McKinley is bearing up as well as could be expected under the circumstances. She has been and is still suffering intensely from her bereavement. She frequently gives way to sobs and tears, but for all that she has been doing as well as any woman could do under similar circumstances. We have no immediate expectations of anything but favorable conditions in her case."

GOLDMAN TURNS HER BACK.

Anarchist Queen Shows the Stuff of Which She Is Made.

Chicago, Sept. 21. — Emma Goldman attended memorial services held in honor of the memory of President McKinley yesterday. It was not of her own volition that she was present at the demonstration of sorrow, and the course that she followed during the services appeared to show lack of sympathy with the spirit of the occasion. The ceremonies at which Miss Goldman was present were held in the woman's ward of the county jail. Rev. E. A. Larrabee of the Church of the Ascension conducted the services and 200 prisoners participated in them. Many of the prisoners manifested great grief as the services proceeded. Miss Goldman alone remained unmoved. When the hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sung by the prisoners the woman whom Czolgosz claims as his teacher, turned her back upon the preacher and the persons who joined in the singing and seemed intent upon perusing the pages of a book which she carried with her and continually reads. The local anarchists who are being held on the charge of complicity in the president's assassination were offered an opportunity to participate in the memorial exercises in the jail, but all refused.

CZOLGOSZ COLD-BLOODED.

Says He Killed the President and That Is All He Will Say.

Buffalo, Sept. 21.—The Courier this morning prints the following:

"What's the use of talking about that? I killed the president. I am an anarchist and simply did my duty; that's all I'll say."

Leon F. Czolgosz, the assassin of President McKinley, said those words to Frank A. Olozanowski, editor of the Buffalo Ski, a Polish newspaper, but would say nothing further about the crime, while willing to talk freely about other subjects. Olozanowski paid his second visit to the assassin's cell. He was sent by the district attorney in pursuance of vain efforts to move the prisoner's stubborn tongue. Last week Olozanowski was unsuccessful in his attempts.

HE REJOICED AT CALAMITY.

Old Veteran Is Dishonorably Discharged From the Grand Army.

Mitchell, S. D., Sept. 21.—At a special meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic C. F. Dutton, an old soldier, was expelled and dishonorably discharged from the post by a unanimous vote. Dutton, the day after President McKinley's death, said in substance that he was glad that the president was dead and that the country would be better off if thirty or forty more were drawn up in line and shot or taken on a boat to the middle of the ocean and drowned. His expressions nearly brought him violence, but his age and infirmity saved him any personal damage. Dutton draws a pension of $12 a month from the government he assailed. The old soldiers declared that they could not stand the disgrace of attending the memorial exercises with one of their members holding such treasonable views, and the above action was taken.

AFFECTS MRS. GARFIELD.

Memories of Her Own Affliction Are Painfully Revived.

Mentor, Ohio, Sept. 21.—Mrs. James A. Garfield, widow of the president who was assassinated in 1881, is prostrated by the Murder of President McKinley, which has so vividly recalled her own deprivation. No one outside her own family is permitted to see her, but her relatives say her condition is not serious. Recently she has not been well, and the shock caused by the terrible crime at Buffalo has accentuated her feeble condition.

CRAZED BY TRAGEDY.

Chicago Man Shoots Himself Because He Could Not Kill Czolgosz.

Chicago, Sept. 21. — While talking with two friends about the death of President McKinley and lamenting he could not get at the assassin to do him harm, E. H. Paramore of 3543 Indiana avenue, suddenly drew a revolver and fired a bullet into his brain. He died while being taken to the hospital. Paramore was formerly a deputy United States marshal.

Killed at a Crossing.

Rains Quenched Forest Fires.

Bayfield, Wis., Sept. 21.—The rains of the past few days have quenched the forest fires that have been raging through the northern part of Wisconsin, and the timber owners and farmers feel much relieved.

MUCH BLOOD IS SPILLED

REVOLUTIONISTS ARE PUT TO FLIGHT BY COLOMBIAN TROOPS.

BATTLE WAS UNUSUALLY BLOODY

KILLED OVER ONE HUNDRED OF THE REBELS, INCLUDING THE LEADER.

PRISONERS CONDEMNED TO DEATH

CAMP OF THE REVOLUTIONISTS WAS COMPLETELY DESTROYED.

New Orleans, La., Sept. 21.—The steamer Stillwater, which arrived here last night, brings the full details of the battle at Bocas del Toro, Colombia, in which the government troops were completely victorious over the revolutionists.

The fighting occurred last Sunday, and was unusually bloody for a South American battle. The government troops at Bocas del Toro, having been re-enforced by the arrival of a large contingent from Bogotá, soldiers of experience and discipline under the command of Gen. Nunez, marched on the revolutionists camp at Old Bank island. Here was the largest body of men, although there were several smaller camps on the mainland around Bocas.

A large red flag floated over the camp at Old Bank, which is said to have been under the command of an American adventurer. Among the revolutionists were many Jamaica negroes who had been fruit dealers at Bocas and many planters from the coast country.

For more than a week the government forces had been collecting launches to make the expedition. Enough were obtained by Saturday for a small force to be sent to Old Bank. As it approached the island the revolutionists wounding four of the soldiers. The government troops, however, succeeded in making a landing on the north end of the island.

Opened Fire on the Advancing Boats,

The next morning heavy firing was begun from the government troops at New Bank, who landed on the south end of the island, and the two parties advanced toward each other, catching the rebels between them. The center of the island is covered with brush, into which the revolutionists fled after their army broke. The government troops kept up a brisk hunt all day long, and over 100 of the revolutionists were shot down in the brush, including the American commander and most of the Jamaica negroes.

Some thirty prisoners were captured and brought to Bocas, the government troops returning amid cheering and great enthusiasm. The prisoners were tried at once by drumhead court-martial and condemned to be shot next morning, but it was given out that they tried to escape in the night and were killed while escaping. The government forces lost only two killed and four wounded.

The revolutionists' camp was completely destroyed, and the other revolutionists on the coast retreated into the interior, leaving the country around Bocas completely in the hands of the government force.

CZAR KEEPS THEM GUESSING.

Upsets Plans Made for His Entertainment.

Compiegne, Sept. 21.—Emperor Nicholas exercised the prerogative of an autocrat yesterday and kept President Loubet and all the French occupants of the Chateau Compiegne marking time the whole morning until he had signified his desires. It was fully expected that he would drive to Pierrefonds and visit the castle, and that afterward he would go shooting in the great park attached to the Chateau Compiegne. All the arrangements had been made and 500 pheasants were brought specially Thursday evening and let loose in the covers. But he did nothing of the kind. His majesty remained in his apartments after breakfast quietly until 10 o'clock, when he took a short promenade in the gardens, attired in a dark lounge suit and top-boots, with the czarina clad in her invariable half-mourning and followed by a hound. The empress carried her camera, with which she took a number of views. Their majesties passed a squad of infantry stationed in the park and the officer gave the order to present arms. Thereupon the czarina photographed the group, subsequently conversing with the officer and promising that he should have the photograph. After returning to the chateau the emperor had a long interview with M. Waldeck-Rousseau, the French premier. It lasted at least two hours. Count Lamsdorff, the Russian foreign minister also conferred with M. Delcasse, the French minister of foreign affairs. Naturally, what took place has not been divulged, but it is whispered that the principal subject of the two interviews was the commercial relations between France and Russia.

MORE TROUBLE.

France Has an Additional Cause for Complaint Against Turkey.

Paris, Sept. 21. — M. Constans, the French ambassador to Turkey, who left Constantinople some time ago because the sultan would not settle certain French claims, told a friend yesterday that a new Turkish question has arisen. He says he has received a complaint from M. Bartissol, a former deputy, stating that the sultan has refused to allow the collection of duties stipulated for when M. Bartissol formed a French company, with a capital of 40,000,000 francs, which constructed the quays at Salonica on the sultan's private account. M. Constans lays stress on the fact that this is a private matter which must be settled before diplomatic relations between France and Turkey can be resumed.

IN MEMORY OF M'KINLEY.

Impressive Memorial Exercises Held in Washington.

Washington, Sept. 24. — A very impressive national memorial service was held at Chase's Grand opera house in this city yesterday afternoon. An hour before the exercises began every seat in the theater, which holds over 4,000 people, was taken and an overflow meeting on Fifteenth street was arranged. Fully 8,000 people stood in the street throughout the afternoon listening to addresses in eulogy of the late president. President Roosevelt was invited to attend the services at the opera house, but having already refused many similar invitations he felt compelled to decline. Postmaster General Smith, however, occupied a box, and many prominent officials were in the audience. Lieut. Gen. Miles and Admiral Schley were in adjoining boxes. A good representation from the diplomatic corps also was present. The Chinese minister, Mr. Wu, and his suite, and the Japanese minister were together in an upper box. The exercises consisted of five-minute addresses by ministers of the different denominations and music suitable to the occasion.

FIRE AT MADISON, MINN.

Loss Estimated at About Sixty Thousand Dollars.

Madison, Minn., Sept. 24.—Early yesterday morning another terrible fire visited this place and caused a loss of about $60,000. The fire broke out in the Merchants hotel, a three-story wooden building, and before the flames were stopped the following business places were destroyed: E. O. Berg's hotel building, town hall, Sandwick's bakery and confectionery, E. O. Sage's saloon, H. L. Hayden's new building under construction, millinery stock of Miss Annie Tweten and building, Farnham & Jacobs' Independent Press office, Halverson & Skaro's general merchandise store, Dargue & Bro.'s notion store, H. J. Chalmers' photograph gallery and residence, H. A. Johnson's general store, Skjels' hotel, E. J. Berg's restaurant, J. M. Jones' flour and feed store. Quail & Swann's department store was badly damaged. The fire engine failed to work and the citizens could do nothing but watch the fire devour the property.

FAVORS CHANGE.

Deacon Moller, La Crosse, Wis., Would Substitute "Catholic" for "Episcopal."

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 24.—In speaking of the proposed change in the name of the Episcopal church to "American Catholic Church of the United States," Rev. C. N. Moller, deacon of the La Crosse diocese, said yesterday morning: "I am honestly and sincerely in favor of the change of name. The Episcopal religion dates back to a time when the Protestant churches had not been founded. It was the first church of God and there is no reason why it should not be called such— the word 'catholic' meaning God's own church, or the true religion. I think the change in the name will be formally made at the San Francisco convention."

WHEELMAN FOUND.

Victim of Steamer Hudson Disaster Picked Up on Lake.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Sept. 24.—All doubt about the fate of the steamer Hudson was removed when the steamer J. C. Ford landed here with the body of Sherman G. Brooks, one of the Hudson's wheelmen, aboard. The body was picked up seventy-five miles from where the Hudson is supposed to have foundered last Monday in the pilot house of the wrecked craft, which was floating bottomside up. The ship's compass was also found.

AIR BRAKES FAIL TO WORK.

Collision on Northern Pacific Near Tacoma—Several People Injured.

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 24. — By the collision of two sections of a train on the Northern Pacific line at Lake a number of persons were injured, one seriously. The cause assigned for the accident is the failure of the air brakes to work. An old man named Crankle, of Grant's Pass, Or., was the most seriously injured. He was brought to Yakima.

GUARDED BY REDS

ARMED ANARCHISTS SURROUND THE OFFICE OF THEIR NEWSPAPER.

PEOPLE ARE HIGHLY INFLAMED

CITIZENS OF SURROUNDING TOWNS ANXIOUS TO TAKE A HAND.

WILL EXTERMINATE THE REDS

RIOT IS ALMOST CERTAIN AND BLOOD WILL SURELY BE SPILLED.

Spring Valley, Ill., Sept. 24.—Twenty anarchists, armed with double-barreled shotguns and 1,000 rounds of ammunition, are standing guard over the office of l'Aurore, the notorious anarchist publication which expressed joy at the murder of President McKinley and satisfaction over the announcement of Assassin Czolgosz that he was an anarchist.

Meanwhile fully 2,000 citizens of adjoining towns have sent word to the authorities here that they are ready and extremely anxious to start at a moment's notice for this city and assist in exterminating the reds. The temper of the people here is at the boiling point, the defiant attitude of the anarchist colony serving to increase the general anger.

John Cabilli, the editor of l'Aurore, has been in hiding ever since a recent mass meeting gave evidence of a desire to demolish his publication and adorn him with a coat of tar and feathers.

To-day a committee will wait upon General Manager Dalzell of the Spring Valley Coal company, who resides in Chicago, and insist that he discharge every known anarchist in his employ. The anarchists and their sympathizers number fully 500, and if this step is taken it will mean that one or two of the mines will have to close down until other men can be brought in. The anarchists threaten to hold a mass meeting this evening. If they persist in this plan a riot is almost certain to ensue, and there can be but one ending, for the patriotic citizens here will be heavily reinforced by outsiders, who will come prepared for business.

DANCE IN MOURNING.

Fort Sheridan Officers Create a Sensation.

Chicago, Sept. 24. — While mourning for the loss of the late president the army officers at Fort Sheridan believe in being as cheerful in their sorrow as is compatible with good taste. Although wearing bows of crape on the hilts of their swords, they believe that dancing is balm for hearts bowed down with grief. There are other people, however, who think that crape is out of place in a ballroom, and among them are the enlisted men and civilians about Fort Sheridan, who believe that the officers in giving a ball acted with impropriety and disrespect for the departed commander-in-chief of the army. The affair has created a sensation at the military post, and criticism of the officers is freely indulged in. The ball was given in the officers' club and lasted from 8 o'clock until 11 Saturday night.

Senator Dolliver of Iowa was the principal speaker at the evening meeting.

A DAY ON THE FARM

Allers up afore the sunrise
(It's shif'less folks that stays in bed).
Douse my face in good cold water,
Sorter clears the eyes an' head.
Milkin's done an' horses's harnessed.
'Fraid they'll all get over-het,
Way the sun shines on that cornfield
'S goin' to be the hottest yet.
I'll fill the keg with right cold water
An' set it in some shady spot.
It'll taste most powerful coolin'
When I get so awful hot.
How them shovels stir the weeds up!
Makes the heat rise from the dirt.
Got my shoes plum full of cornstalks,
Ain't a doin' a thing but hurt.
Calves are callin' for their mothers—
Reckon all my work is done.
Stars are shinin' mighty purty
An' the moon's done killed the sun.

The Fletcher Affair.

BY EDNA S. BRAINERD.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

We were sitting at table over our coffee and cigars when Bob Tremont asked, "What ever became of Theodore Fletcher?"

"Haven't you heard?"

"Heard?" echoed Tremont. "Why, no; you must remember that I have been sweltering in the interior of Cuba for the past three years and that I have heard nothing, and with the exception of you fellows whom I met by chance this morning, I know nothing of the doings of the old crowds whatever."

"Tell Tremont the story, Henry," said Charlie Yates turning to me.

I watched the brandy burning on the spoon in my cup and as I felt in just the mood, I told the story. "You remember Eleanor Metcalf? Well, after you left her popularity increased, although it really seemed that she would never lose her heart to any one of the numerous hangers-on who courted her and flattered her and tried to win her love and her father's millions.

"As you already know, Theodore Fletcher came to town to settle up the Mercantile Bank affair. He had no sooner arrived than he was sought by all the clubs and societies and was received into the most exclusive of homes—in fact, he became a sort of Chesterfield to all the girls and women in our set, gained the respect and admiration of the older business men and was the most popular man in town.

"Eleanor Metcalf had received a college education, and two years abroad had given her a traveled air; there wasn't a man in town who would not have thrown himself at her feet, even had she been a seamstress or governess instead of the spoiled child of fortune that she was. She was really so dainty, so pure, so beautiful—I was in love with her myself, and sometimes think I can never love any other woman on earth.

"Well, someone took Theodore to call on her one evening, and the mischief was done. He fell head over heels in love with her and she with him. Of course, all the other fellows pulled out of the race, and we watched the society columns each morning to see the announcement of Eleanor's engagement to Fletcher.

"After Fletcher had been one of us for perhaps seven or eight months, there was a hop at the country club, and while each one of us made bold to engage the company of the proud Eleanor, each was in turn sweetly told by her that she 'was awfully sorry, but she could not accept—she was going with Mr. Fletcher.'

"About this time Edward Metcalf, the only son, and in whom old Metcalf's hopes were centered, was expelled from Yale and, coming home was placed in the bank under the supervision of Fletcher. Strange to say, he never liked Fletcher and was more than once heard to say at the club things that were insinuating and derogatory to Fletcher's character.

He walked up to Eleanor.

Young Metcalf was not popular himself; he was rather weak, and his habits were none of the best.

"The night of the hop, Eleanor came in with Fletcher rather late. I think I never saw her so beautiful and so regal; there was a look in her eyes that I would have given my soul to know had been inspired by me, and I'll venture there wasn't a fellow in the room who had not the same feeling. She danced with each and every one of us, but her eyes followed Fletcher, and she seemed sweeter and more far-off from us than ever.

"It was about twelve o'clock, just as we were dancing the last dance before going into supper, when I saw a tall, dark stranger standing in the door looking about the room. Finally his eye caught Fletcher's and I remember how Fletcher led his partner to a seat and walking up to the stranger spoke to him in low tones.

"After a few moments' conversation Fletcher continued the dance. When it was over, he walked up to Eleanor, who was surrounded by a little court of admirers and drawing her to one side he said:

"'I am sorry, but news has just reached me of some important work at the bank that must be attended to at once. Would you mind very much going home now, or will you prefer going later with some friends.'

"We did not know at the time what he said to her, but we saw the sweet light in her eyes as she answered him and presently hooded and cloaked she left the dance with Fletcher.

"The tall, dark stranger sat on the box with the cabby, and as it was a long way out to the Metcalf home from the country club, it must have taken them a full hour to reach it. What they said, what they talked about on the way no one of us will ever know. But when they reached the door, Fletcher handed her a great bunch of roses and bade her good-night.

"The next day the papers were filled with the story of the defalcation of Theodore Fletcher, the receiver of the Mercantile Bank. 'He had been the people's idol,' the papers said, 'and he had fallen from the pedestal on which he had stood and which had been erected by the people.' Edward Metcalf was brought on the stand at the trial and testified against Fletcher. At the club he said, 'I told you so,' and his most scathing remarks were directed toward Fletcher's action at the dance. 'Just to think,' he said bitterly, 'of a thief having the nerve to take my sister home as if nothing had happened, and daring to ride home with her with an officer on the cab.'

"We were all too excited to say much, and yet we all admired, secretly, the tact and delicacy which Fletcher had shown in the manner in which he had taken his arrest.

It was Eleanor Metcalf——

"Fletcher was sentenced to two years' hard labor; Edward Metcalf remained in town, swaggering and threatening what he would do to Fletcher on his release, and Eleanor went abroad with her parents.

"The world soon forgets these things and after a few months it was talked of no more.

"One day last spring I had occasion to visit the penitentiary at Kewanee. While there I thought of Theodore Fletcher and asking to see him, I was shown into his cell. I found him reading Les Miserables in the original French; his hands were white and his nails were polished to a nicety that any society belle might envy.

"He greeted me with the same old Chesterfieldian manner with just a touch of frigidity, I fancied, and it stung me to notice that he did not once speak of Eleanor—although I should have felt it sacrilege for him to have mentioned her name; Eleanor whom he had soiled with the gossip of having been her sweetheart.

"Finally disgusted with his evident sang froid, I left him, and as I went down the narrow corridor that led to the entrance, I met a woman coming swiftly down the hall towards me. She turned her face from me as I passed her, but I saw that it was Eleanor Metcalf; Eleanor Metcalf, whom every one believed to be in Europe; Eleanor Metcalf, the cold, the proud, the pure.

"I was stunned for a moment, and even when I reached the fresh outer air and sunshine, I was still bewildered and thought that I must have been dreaming. Yet I could not mistake that regal figure, that proud poise of the head, those beautiful eyes.

"After a stiff drink or two I tried to forget, and from that day to this I have never mentioned the subject before.

"It seems strange that this topic should have come up today, for the morning paper tells of the suicide of young Edward Metcalf.

"Three months ago Theodore Fletcher was released from prison; two weeks afterward Eleanor Metcalf married him and they went west to live; can't you fellows deduct a logical conclusion from what I have told you?

"You knew the Metcalf pride, of which Eleanor possessed more than is usual—I mean pride in her family, love for her parents and her high ideals of a child's duty. You all knew too Ed Metcalf, his weakness, his perfidy—and you all knew Fletcher."

I paused long enough in my narrative to notice the little flutter of excitement and understanding from each of my friends at the table.

Charlie Yates held up his glass.

"Here's to Fletcher, boys."

And no toast was ever more heartily given.

NOTES ON SCIENCE.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

The Cause and Cure of Nervousness—The Invention of Toys—The Primitive Mode of Irrigation Practiced in India.

NERVOUSNESS.

What may be called a minor degree of neurasthenia is the indefinite condition called "nervousness." Sufferers from it are not incapacitated for business or social duties, nor are they seriously ill, like the confirmed neurasthenic, yet their existence is often a pitiable one. They are restless and unable to fix the mind on any subject, sleep is disturbed, and often there is an indefinable fluttering sensation within the chest.

They may have a good appetite and not feel ill physically. And herein lies their greatest danger, for they persuade themselves that all they need is a nerve tonic of some sort, or a little stimulant, and they dose themselves with various advertised remedies, one after another, or begin to drink a little wine or spirits.

The stimulation makes them feel better for a time, but the inevitable reaction comes, when they feel worse than before, and run again and again to the bottle of "tonic," or drink until they become confirmed drug-takers or dram-drinkers—and which is worse 't would be hard to say.

The fatal mistake which these persons make is in assuming that they are not ill physically, but only "nervous." In almost every such case a careful examination by a physician will bring to light disorder of some organ, and show that the patient is physically ill and should be treated accordingly. It is not nerve tonics or stimulants that he needs, but a course of medical treatment—dietetic, hygienic, and perhaps medicinal.

In the majority of cases it will be found that the digestion is at fault. There may be no evident symptoms of dyspepsia—no nausea, distress after eating, or eructations—yet the food may be scarcely digested at all. The stomach does its work, perhaps, in the preliminary digestion of the food, but the intestines, where the assimilation of nutriment is, or should be, effected, are at fault.

The food is not elaborated into such shape that it can be taken up by the lacteal vessels and carried to the nerve and other structures that need constant renewing, and so the tissues suffer from partial starvation.

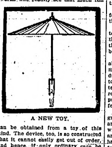
Furthermore, the imperfect intestinal digestion results in the manufacture of various poisons, which are absorbed and cause a morbid condition of the nervous system.

Treatment should be directed to the intestinal trouble and not to the "nervousness," which will speedily disappear when once the causal condition has been cured.

INVENTION OF TOYS.

In the accompanying picture is represented a new toy, the component parts of which are a parachute, a stick and a weighted figure. On the stick is a moveable link and from this link the weighted figure is suspended by means of a socket which holds it in correct position when the parachute is projected. The movement of the link is limited, a cross pin and loop near the lower end of the stick preventing it from descending too far.

Those who know how a parachute works will readily see that much fun can be obtained from a toy of this kind. The device, too, is so constructed that it cannot easily get out of order, and hence, if only ordinary care be taken of them, the parachute and the cunning little figure below it will do good service for a long time.



A NEW TOY.

REMARKABLE IRRIGATION.

In India a simple yet effective method of irrigation has long been in vogue, but only recently has it attracted the attention of foreigners.

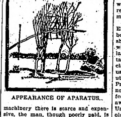
The apparatus consists of a long, clumsily fashioned balancing pole, which is fastened at the middle to the fork of a tree. At one end of this primitive balance, which is as stout as an ordinary beam, is fixed another long pole, the lower end of which is sunk into a well and carries a large vessel made of baked clay. At the opposite end of this pole are two coolies, who are constantly in motion and thus form a living counter balance.

One after another, they walk with great strides over this narrow pathway, passing with a mechanical yet a rhythmical and supple movement from one end of the pole to the other and hardly touching a slender bamboo balustrade, which is within their reach and which is intended to serve as a guide. When they arrive at one end and are bowed down beneath the weight they know that at the other end the enormous vessel has been filled with water and raised to the surface of the ground.

Large notches cut in the trees serve as a ladder for the barefooted Indians, and render it easy for them to reach the tip of the pole at the moment, when, having arrived at the end of its course, it is almost vertical. While they are making this ascent with incomparable agility another man empties the water from the enormous vessel into trenches by simply oscillating the vessel, after which the maneuvers is repeated.

The work of the coolies is by no means so onerous as it seems, for pains are always taken to have the pole balanced correctly and of the proper weight, and in this way the task is much simplified. The weight of the coolies themselves is also taken into account, and there are cogs by means of which the balancing pole can be lengthened or shortened, as may be desired.

"This method of irrigation," says Dr. H. Socard, a traveler, "is not applicable everywhere, since it is essential that the subsoil should be moist and doubtless it is inferior to the methods employed in Europe. On the other hand, it has the advantage of being entirely appropriate to the economic and social conditions of India, for machinery there is scarce and expensive, the man, though poorly paid, is still the most useful beast of burden."



APPEARANCE OF APARATUS.

A POWERFUL LENS.

Some years ago the writer paid a visit to Alvan Clark, at Cambridgeport, to witness the testing of the huge lens for the famous Lick telescope. At the end of the long, dark room the largest flint glass then in the world was set up on edge. From a distance of about fifty feet a pencil of light was flashed into the heart of the disk and reflected back into the observer's eye. The slightest imperfections, if any, in the glass, would then be revealed by the curves of light and the lines of polarization.

"Now," said Mr. Clark, "I will show you the wonderful sensitiveness of the lens to outside influences. Every human body gives out heat and when brought near to extremely sensitive substances, affects them to a greater or less extent. Now watch."

He walked down to the lens, and held his hand under it about two feet away. Instantly a marvelous spectacle burst into view. It seemed as if the great disk had become a living volcano; spurting forth jets of flame. The display was dazzling. Waving, leaping, dancing, the countless tongues of light gleamed and vibrated. Then, fitfully, reluctantly, they died away, leaving the lens reflecting only a pure, untroubled light.

"What is it? How do you account for the wonder?" were the eager questions.

"It is only the radiation of heat alternately expanding and contracting the glass. If I had put my hand upon the lens, the phenomenon would have been even more violent."

To a person ignorant of lenses the almost supernatural sensitiveness of a mass of glass weighing several hundreds of pounds was astonishing. But to the scientist it is an every-day matter, for he has instruments that will register with unfailing nicety the approach of a person fifty or a hundred feet away.

The human heart is not unlike the great lens. It is similarly sensitive, and so cannot afford to surround itself with evil. The radiations of influence are infinitely fine. Inevitably we vibrate to "the company we keep." Before we know it we have taken the color and tone of our neighborhood.

SCIENTIFIC NOTES.

The Largest of Deer Tribe.

The American Museum of Natural History in New York has recently secured specimens of the huge Alaskan moose, which is described as the largest representative of the deer tribe. It is larger than the moose of Maine and Canada, darker in color, and possessed of much larger antlers.

Russian Wheat the Best.

Mr. Carlton, of the United States Department of Agriculture, has devoted several years to the study of wheat, with special reference to its growth in different parts of this country. In discussing the question of the best varieties for cultivation here, he says: "Considering all qualities, the best wheats in the world are of Russian origin; coming particularly from eastern and southern Russia." These varieties, he adds, resist cold and drought, are more or less resistant to leaf-rust, and have the best quality of grain.

Long Distance Telephony.

The telephone which extends over the longest route is that between Boston and St. Louis, a distance of 1,400 miles.

CORNISH LANGUAGE

LAST SPOKEN A CENTURY AND A QUARTER AGO

Recent discussion of the position occupied by the Irish language reminds us that, though there is happily no fear of Irish becoming extinct, a kindred Celtic language has died out. Cornish is as dead as Queen Anne. Not quite so dead, perhaps, for it survived a little later than that much-quoted lady. There have been six Celtic languages that have come into immediate contact with modern times. These are Welsh, Cornish and Breton, which may be grouped together as Cymric or Brythonic; Irish, Scotch, Gaelic and Manx, which are Goidhelic. Breton is struggling bravely against the French. Whatever may be said of the Scotch Gaelic and Manx, Welsh and Irish may yet resist the supremacy of the English. But poor Cornish is altogether a thing of the past. It only survives in a few relics and in place names. It is not even a dead language in the same sense as Greek or Latin; it died without leaving seeds for any possible resurrection. Slow and sure was the mode of its extinction.

When the Reformation came an English Bible and an English service book struck the death blow. The share which the Cornish took in the western rebellion was in some sort a last struggle of racial impulse. "Certain of us understand no English," exclaimed the stout Cornishman; "give us back our old service in Latin. We utterly refuse this new English." Probably they had understood Latin no better, but they had an instinctive feeling that this new English must do away with their loved national speech. Unhappily none of them loved the old speech well enough to do the right thing. No one took the trouble to translate the Bible or the Liturgy into Cornish. The English Bible killed the Cornish tongue, but it did not convert the Cornish to Anglicanism. They became Nonconformist and finally Methodist. Everyone who knows anything of Cornwall knows that the credit of having last spoken Cornish is given to Dolly Pentreath, who was buried at Paul, near Mousehole, in 1775. But she could not have been the last person to understand Cornish; otherwise it is certain that the following epitaph could not have been written over her remains:

Coth Doll Pentreath caus ha deau
Marow ha Kledys ed Paul plea:
Na ed an eglos, gan popel bras,
Bes ed eglos hay coth Dolly es.

Which signifies: "Old Doll Pentreath, one hundred and two, dead and buried in Paul Parish. Not in the church with great people, but in the churchyard old Dolly lies." It is easy to recognize two words here, "eglos" and "popel" (people), as genuine Latin, just as we similarly find an infusion of Latin in present-day Welsh. But a traditional knowledge of Cornish, fast becoming corrupt, lingered after Dolly's death; it is even said that only ten years ago there was living at Zennor, near St. Ives, an old man who knew a good many Cornish words which he had learned from his father. These words seem to have been chiefly the names of places. It is only about two centuries since the clergy of some Cornish parishes, particularly toward Land's End, used to preach to their people in the old tongue.

For a parallel to Cornish we may now go to Brittany and hear the peasantry talking. It has been said, rather doubtfully, that these peasants, when they come over with onions, can go into the cottages of Welsh folk and converse. This sort of thing would have been far more possible in Cornwall a few centuries since; the Bretons and Cornish are very much of one race and their speech shared the kinship. There is still a Cornish dialect, which differs from Devonian, and which contains a few old Celtic words; but on the whole the words of West Country speech are old Saxon—it is only the accent and intonation that are Celtic.—Boston Pilot.

Fall River's Industry..

That City is the Greatest Cotton Manufacturing Center in the World.

Fall River, Mass., whose cotton operatives were recently threatened with a 15 per cent reduction in wages, which, however, was averted by the action of M. C. D. Borden, an independent manufacturer, in strengthening the market by a large purchase of cotton cloth, is the greatest cotton manufacturing city on the globe. In addition, it is the center of the cotton manufacturing industry of New England. Providence, R. I., another important manufacturing city, is only eighteen miles away to the northwestward; Taunton, Mass., is seventeen miles north; New Bedford, Mass., is fourteen miles east, and Newport, R. I., is eighteen miles south.

Fall River produces more than three-quarters of all the print cloths made in the United States, has one-seventh of all the spindles in the country, and about a fourth of those in New England, and more than twice as many as any other city in the country. Its mills turn out more than 1,500 miles of cotton cloth every working day. It is estimated that $47,000,000 is invested in the industry, although the incorporated companies conducting it are capitalized at only $23,801,000. The number of spindles in the mills is 3,042,472, and the number of looms is 75,878. The number of men, women and minors employed exceeds 30,000, and the annual output is about 860,000,000 yards of cloth. The aggregate of the weekly pay rolls of the mills is $215,350, an average of a little over $7 each for employes of all ages and both sexes.

The average wages of the weavers are about $6.60 a week for six loom workers on print cloths, $8.80 for eight loom workers and $11 for ten loom workers. The classification means that the worker is capable of properly running the number of looms specified. On fancy work, such as bed spreads, a weaver may earn higher wages than the highest stated with four or more looms. Carders earn from $7 to $9 a week, and card grinders about $10 a week. Slasher tenders earn about $11 a week, and loom fixers about $12, while spinners receive from $11 to $17. Of the weavers, about half are women and minors. The slasher tenders, loom fixers and the mule spinners are all men and the carders are nearly all women.

Lemon Juice for Nose Bleeding.

Dr. Benjamin Edson says in the Medical World that lemon juice is a remedy for nose bleeding. One part of the juice to three or four of water is used by insufflation after clearing the nostrils by "blowing." In emergencies he has used the lemon juice undiluted, but would not advise this procedure in ordinary cases. The author claims no credit for the method; he "picked it up" many years ago, he says, and he does not know who is entitled to the credit for first using it.

Has Run 4,000,000 Miles.

What is believed to be by far the longest record of travel in the railway world has just been completed by the Great Northern express engine known as "No. 1," which has covered the enormous distance of 4,000,000 miles, or 16 times the span from the moon to the earth. The engine is still daily employed on express trains between King's Cross and Doncaster, and is stationed at Peterborough. It has single driving wheels and was one of the first to be fitted with outside cylinders. Over 30 years have elapsed since it left the company's works at Doncaster, and the original wheels still carry their massive burden.

Some Destructive Earthquakes.

A most destructive earthquake took place on February 2nd, 1703, at Yeddo (or Jeddo), the chief city of Japan, when the place was almost destroyed and 200,000 people were killed. One hundred thousand people were killed by an earthquake that occurred in Pekin; the capital city of China, on the 30th of November, 1731. Eighty thousand people were killed by an earthquake at Schamaki in 1667; and 100,000 by an earthquake in Sicily in September, 1693. The cities of Arequipa, Iquique, Tacna and Cleancha, besides many other smaller towns in Peru and Ecuador, were destroyed and 25,000 people killed by an earthquake in August, 1868; while over 30,000 people were rendered homeless, and the loss and damage to property was estimated at $300,000,000.

Bring Coffee Tree North.

Twelve full-grown coffee trees have been imported from Coatepec, Mexico, for exhibition at the pan-American show at Buffalo. They average about six feet in height and are considered fine specimens. The leaves resemble greatly those of a peach tree and here and there green oblong coffee berries, varying from one to three-quarters of an inch in length, grow in clusters on the branches about midway between the trunk and the end of the limb. When ripe these berries turn to a dull red and the bean inside is then ready to be cured. Coffee trees begin to bear in the third season and remain fruitful for about six years.

Cricket Still the Favorite Game.

Cricket still holds its own in the British isles in spite of the increased attention paid to football, golf and other sports. This was strongly shown by the records of attendance and receipts at the annual match between Yorkshire and Lancashire. This match lasted three days, and the average daily attendance of spectators was 10,000. The profits amounted to a very large sum, which, in accordance with custom, was handed over to the champion professional player.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

Charles Hirschinger tells the Farmers' Review that the best way to cut the surplus runners from strawberry plants is to use a plow with a rolling coulter. He goes over his strawberry fields several times after the plants have ceased to fruit, each time cutting off the runners and cultivating the ground between the rows of strawberry plants. Keeping the plants well cultivated in the fall helps them to form large root systems and insures strong plants in the spring. The fall growth and development has very much to do with the power to bear a crop the following year.

Discussing the use of fertilizers on strawberries, A. L. Hatch suggests to the writer the more extensive use of wood ashes. The man that has a strawberry patch covering four square rods can use a bushel of ashes to advantage. It should, however, be applied at two different times, about a week apart. The first application should be made after growth starts in the spring and the second application a week later. Mr. Hatch believes that the ashes do good not by the amount of potash and other chemicals they contribute to the soil, but by operating on the nitrates in the soil and making them available for plant food. This view of it will doubtless not be readily accepted. In the use of ashes it must be taken into consideration that they vary greatly as to their make up, some woods giving an ash having three times the potash contained in others. The soft woods are quite generally deficient in potash, and their ash is therefore of little value.

* * *

In the planting of plum pits care should be taken that they are not too dry, as dry and shriveled kernels are of no value. This fact explains the cause of many failures in the planting of these pits. From the time the pits are separated from the pulp they should be kept slightly moist, just enough to prevent the drying out process from acting. Some men think it best to break the shells to liberate the kernels, but this is unnecessary, as, if the pits are left out of doors all winter they will start to grow very early in the spring.

Cow Peas in Wisconsin.

It has been believed that the cow pea could not be matured as far north as northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. Hitherto the men that grew cow peas have made a practice of purchasing their seed from the states south of the Ohio, it being recognized that the cow pea is a southern plant. Here and there in the states farther north men have asserted that they had matured the cow pea, but as they produced no proof of their success in the way of seed the general public has paid no attention to their claims. But the Wisconsin Experiment station has settled the matter, at least so far as this year is concerned.

At the station named a considerable area has been devoted to the cow pea, and the crop has been perfect. The writer saw the plots August 28 and 29. The lack of water was not apparent in the least, and it is hard to imagine a more perfect stand even with an abundance of rain. The seed had been planted in rows thirty inches apart and the growth of the plants had very nearly obliterated the spaces between the rows. Each stalk stood upright and bore an immense wealth of broad leaves. Professor Moore, who accompanied the writer, said: "Dig down here for five feet and you will find the ground perfectly dry, and it is a marvel how the plants have continued to grow apparently without any moisture. The drouth has been severe here and still continues, but the cow peas do not feel it."

As the professor talked he picked off and shelled some of the ripe pods, saying: "You see how many ripe pods there are now, and they ripen very quickly after reaching this stage. In a week or ten days most of these fully filled pods will be ripe enough to gather. We may reasonably expect thirty days more without severe frosts, and long before that time the crop will be out of the way."

Relative to the success with the crop Professor Henry remarked: "Of course this is an exceptional year so far as the amount of sunshine is concerned, but we have had great lack of moisture. Whether we can get the cow peas forward so rapidly in wet years remains to be seen. There now appears no reason why we cannot grow cow peas extensively in Wisconsin. The variety grown this year is the most common one, the Whippoorwill."

As a drouth resister the cow pea is this year demonstrating its value. As a gatherer of nitrogen it has great value and the same may be said of its value as a forage and hay crop. Its value as a soiling crop cannot be estimated. With this plant farmers can defy the drouth and tell it to do its worst. We will add that no irrigating has been done on the field of cow peas mentioned. The Wisconsin station has, we believe, done no more important work this year than the giving of this object lesson in the growing of the cow pea.

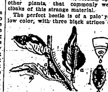
The Moth Traps.

These have come in for so much inquiry that I take this occasion to again caution about the use of moth traps. They do more harm than good in the orchard. They will not catch the codlin moth, curculio, borer, canker worm, or gouger and these are insects we want to kill. Prof. J. M. Stedman says: "The use of moth traps by the general public will do more harm than good." Miss M. E. Murtfeldt says that "The moth traps will catch more friends than enemies in the orchard." Mr. F. H. Speakman, who used 40 traps during one whole summer in the orchard, says: "I pronounce the use of lights to save our apples, peaches and plums a decidedly dismal failure." Nearly all of the state entomologists of the country have stated positively that the use of moth traps in the orchard does more harm than good. The testing of the moth traps at New Haven in June 4 and 5 by the Society showed that not one codling moth or curculio was caught. Dr. L. O. Howard, U. S. Entomologist, says: "I am glad that you are giving the facts about the moth traps in Missouri." It would seem that when we have such positive statements from those who know, we would do well to heed their instructions.—L. A. Goodman, Secretary Missouri State Horticultural Society.

Three-Lined Leaf Beetle.

The Three-Lined Leaf-Beetle (Lema trilineata) attacks the potato plant, both the larvae and the beetles feeding on its leaves. The larva may be distinguished from all other insects that prey upon the potato plant by its habit of covering itself with its own excrement, which is greenish in color and may act as some protection. In the illustration, "b" shows the last few joints of the abdomen of the larva, magnified and viewed, not in profile, but from above. The vent of the larva, as will be seen from this last figure, is situated on the upper surface of the last joint, so that its excrement naturally falls upon its back, and by successive discharges is pushed forward towards it head, till the whole upper surface of the insect is covered with it. There are several other larvae, feeding upon other plants, that commonly wear cloaks of this strange material.

The perfect beetle is of a pale yellow color, with three black stripes on its back. It bears a strong resemblance to the common cucumber bug. It is, however as a general thing, a slightly larger insect.



Viscogen in Milk.

Viscogen is the latest milk adulterant discovered by the Minnesota dairy and food department, says Dairy Record. For some time the department kept getting samples of milk apparently above the legal standard, which, on being tested, were found to be far below. The cause was a mystery until, by a shrewd piece of detective work, the reason was discovered and a sample of viscogen was obtained. The stuff is a syrup composed of sugar, lime and water, about the color of water, and is used chiefly to make the milk appear richer than it really is. When viscogen is placed in milk or cream the lactic acid turns the lime in the fluid into a white, thick substance, which, assimilating with the milk, gives it an appearance and taste of great richness. It is possible through its use to palm off upon customers milk and cream which is far below standard. Viscogen is so little known that the practice among dairymen is very limited; in fact, it has only been found in cream sold by one concern.

Fruit Notes.

Ohio.—Peaches are being marketed. The early varieties are small, but the late varieties will be improved by the rains. Apples are a light crop generally. Grapes are reported rotting in a number of sections of the state. Tomatoes show marked improvement.

Missouri.—Apples and peaches have not improved except in portions of the western, southwestern and southeastern sections, where they are somewhat better than when the month opened.

Illinois.—Apples are still falling and a very light crop seems inevitable. Pears, plums, grapes and peaches range from fair to good crops.

Kentucky.—Apples are scarce and poor.

Tennessee.—Peaches are abundant, but quality has been damaged by rainy weather. Apples are poor and scarce.

Indiana.—Apple prospects are now promising in many parts of the state. The crop is exceptionally fine in Washington county.

Wisconsin.—Drought has so reduced water supplies that the reserves to be used for flooding cranberry marshes in case of frost are low. Cranberry picking will begin September 2.

An exchange says: Duck quarters should have dry floors, these birds have such a tendency to frost-bitten feet. It is a dampness associated with cold, getting into fissures of skin and remaining there, not dry cold that make frost bites and chilblains.

The greatest milk production requires liberal feeding of the proper kind, and the selection of animals with milking tendencies. Since the cow has become a mere machine for the consuming of food and converting it into milk, it is essential in securing the most returns to have good cows.

Winter Feed.

It is too early to decide what will be the cheapest combination of feeds for winter. The shortage will be in roughness. There is enough straw in Kansas to supply roughness for every animal in the state, and with many stockmen straw will be the feed to use. Farmers usually feed from 20 to 30 pounds of hay or fodder a head per day to stock cattle. Very much less may be fed if a proper grain ration is used. In 1888 a milk man in Manhattan wintered his entire herd of dairy cows without a pound of roughness, and he sold milk all winter. The cows were fed all the grain they wanted and in the spring were strong, but they looked gaunt and rough. It always pays to feed a little roughness. The writer has brought cattle through the winter in good condition on three to five pounds of hay per head a day, feeding grain. Bran or wheat will take the place of nearly all the roughness and can be mixed with cottonseed, gluten, germ oil or linseed meals, oats, corn or Kafir-corn, which ever is cheapest and make a good ration at a reasonable cost. Wheat is worth about as much pound for pound as corn, and middlings are worth more as a hog feed. Fattening hogs fed all the alfalfa or clover hay they will eat will fatten on much less grain than without hay. Sorghum hay is good for hogs. A few winters ago some farmers in northwestern Kansas carried their stock hogs through the winter on alfalfa hay alone. Stock hogs fed twice daily all the alfalfa, clover or sorghum hay they will eat will require much less than the usual amount of grain. Hogs should be fed sufficient rough feed so that they will need to eat the leaves only.—H. M. Cottrell, Kansas Experiment Station.

Testimony for Brome Grass.

In a report on Australian Brome grass (Bromus Inermis), as grown on the Station farm, Prof. Ladd of the North Dakota Station, says:

"Brome grass, as grown on the College farm, contains twice as much nitrogenous matter—protein—as is found in the average Timothy hay for the whole United States. Brome hay contains 6 per cent more protein than is found in the native prairie grass hay as shown by our analysis above. In fact the results above indicate brome hay to contain nearly as much protein as the average for red clover hay. Judging from the chemical analysis this hay has a feed value superior to any other hay produced in the state, while the experiments show it to be a surer hay or pasture crop than timothy, especially for dry seasons or in regions of low rainfall."

Cow Logic.

Use the best bull attainable, if his progeny is to be raised. Who would expect a good crop of corn if he used half-filled nubbins for seed?—Holstein-Friesian Register.

During the last few years we have heard a great deal about the "fishy flavor" in butter imported into England from Australia. We have come to look upon the trouble as something belonging only to the other side of the world. The investigators in Australia have been unable to locate the cause of the trouble, while the jokers have suggested that the dairymen stop feeding fish to their cows. But now we hear of the trouble in this country. The Geneva station recently had a case of the kind to investigate. This peculiar smell, as though the milk had set in a close room with a barrel of not-too-fresh fish, was brought to the attention of the bacteriologist at Geneva by a dealer who had already located it as coming from the milk of a certain dairy. Bottles were supplied by the bacteriologist, which had been steamed to insure the death of all germ life and then sealed. These sealed bottles were taken by the dairyman to his farm; at milking time each was opened long enough to receive a little milk from each quarter of the udder of a single cow; and then resealed. All were brought to the station; and upon examination, the odor was found only in the milk of one cow. The owner rejected her milk and heard no further complaint from the dealer of bad smells. This was the practical point; and it was thus easily and simply gained. Investigations were begun to find the cause but no light was obtained. The cows had all been fed and treated alike.

In feeding sheep I find that it is necessary to start right, the same as in any other business. The first thing a feeder should know is, has he proper protection for sheep, such as sheds or barns for bad weather. Sheep cannot stand cold rains or sleet.—J. H. Starr.

The Absence of It.

If there is any truth in the saying that happiness is the absence of all pain, mental and physical, the enjoyment of it can only be found in heaven. But so far as the physical is concerned, it is within easy reach; at least, measurably so, as far as cure will go. The sum of human misery in this line is made up of greater or less degrees of physical suffering. The minor aches and pains which afflict mankind are easy to reach and are easily cured. There are none in the whole category, which, if taken in time, cannot be cured. They must in some form afflict the nerves, the bones, the muscles and joints of the human body. They are all more or less hurtful and wasteful to the system. St. Jacob's Oil is made to cure them, to search out the hidden pain spots, and to cure promptly in a true remedial and lasting way. Very, very many have not known happiness for years until they used it, and very many are putting off cure and happiness because they don't use it.

How the King's Taxes Are Paid.

It is not generally known that the king pays taxes under protest—that is to say, his majesty, like Queen Victoria, claims to be exempt from impost, and yet is willing to contribute without prejudice to the rates. For instance, part of the Windsor farm land lies within the radius of the borough. The municipal authority issues demand notes for the rates. The royal officials respond by paying a sum just under the amount requested, and the collector is satisfied. There is no question of going to law, for how can the king be summoned to his own courts?—Free Lance.

The Age to Marry.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the course of a letter to a young friend who had married, wrote:

"I do, indeed, congratulate you on changing your isolated condition into the beatific state of duality. The very moment one feels that he is falling into the old age of youth—which I take to be from twenty-five to thirty, in most cases—he must not dally any longer; the first era in his life is fairly closed, and he may live half his bright days over again if 'woman's pure kiss, sweet and long,' comes only to his lips before it is too late. If he waits until the next epoch of life begins, there is great danger that he marry his wife as a jockey buys a horse—sensibly, shrewdly and merely as a convenience in his domestic operations.

A Distinguished Missionary.

Washington, Ind., Sept. 23d.—There is at present, living at 100 East 16th street in this city, a most remarkable man. He is Rev. C. H. Thompson, and he came to Washington from Little York, Ind., a short time ago.

Rev. Mr. Thompson spent many years of his long and useful life as a missionary among the Indians of the West. The great exposure and the drinking of so much bad water brought on Diabetes, and at Wagoner, Indian Territory, he was struck down while preaching.

Physicians, one of them a Chicago specialist, pronounced his case hopeless. Dodd's Kidney Pills were recommended, and as a last resort he tried them. He was completely cured and restored to good health, and his case and its cure has caused a sensation among the physicians.

"Your name and address printed on all cigarettes made to order."

This sign, in bold characters, stands in the window of a cigarettemaker in the Bowery. The idea is novel to East Siders. Cigarettes are cheap. Therefore, the dealer has all the orders he can fill.

The charge for these cigarettes, of Turkish tobacco, is but $1 per 100. The dealer said he was prompted to do this work by a man who ordered 300 cigarettes with his name and address printed on the wrappers.

"I took the order," said the dealer, "but did not believe the man would be satisfied with the work. I thought the cigarette paper would be too thin to feed into a printing press. But when I went to a printer, and he agreed to do the work, and at a reasonable rate, I decided to make it a feature of my business."—New York Journal.

An Incomplete House.

We run wild over the furnishings of the house; its furniture, carpets, hangings, pictures and music, and always forget or neglect the most important requisite. A statistician has proved that the invention of the typewriter has given employment to 500,000 people, but he fails to state how many cases of weak stomachs and dyspepsia it has induced. All people of sedentary occupation need Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is a wonderful medicine and helps nature bear the strain which ensues from confinement. It also cures dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation and flatulency. Be sure to try it and you will not be disappointed.

Easily Dished.

"Say, my friend, in describing that house of yours in the suburbs, you say it is contiguous to the railway station."

"Eh! Did the types make it contiguous? It meant contagious, of course."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

THE NEWS.

Czolgosz has been found guilty of muder in the first degree. The trial was the shortest on record for a matter of so great moment.

The News would be pleased to see Daniel Shaw elected as one of the members of the city council this fall. Mr. Shaw stands for all that is progressive, and money spent under his supervision would not be wasted.

The opportunity of securing the agricultural lands on this portion of the Red lake reservation opened to settlement was never better, and if the matter is pushed a little by the citizens here it can be accomplished. Now is the time for everyone to get together and work hard to secure this end.

Just how the putting in of a system of water works and sewerage can be made an issue the city election this fall, we are unable to understand. Ninety per cent of the people are in favor of it, but there is some difference of opinion as to how the work shall be done, and the civil engineer employed. We believe some caution should be taken in the selection of a man on whose judgment the city expects to spend some $20,000.

While the general public is vaguely aware that enormous quantities of material are used in the making of the modern magazine, comparatively few persons have any idea of the vast amount required. If the paper used in the last twelve issues of The Ladies' Home Journal, for instance were in one gigantic strp a foot wide it would go nearly six times around the earth at the equator, or almost forty-three times from New York to San Francisco: In other words such a strip would be more than 140,000 miles long! If the copies of a single edition of The Journal were piled one on top of another, they would tower to a height of nearly two miles, almost two thousand feet more than the average height of the Alps, or half again as Mount Washington. To print The Journal on this huge mass of paper takes almost 6000 gallons of ink every year.

This is the way old Bill Harmon who belonged to the Bad Men's association of Missouri, confessed at a camp meeting. He was pressed hard to repent and at last he got up: "Dear friends," said Bill, "I feel the spirit moving me to talk and tell what a bad man I've been, but I can't do it while the grand jury is in session." The Lord will forgive you" shouted the preacher. "I guess that's all right," said Bill, "but he ain't on the grand jury."

The team which was in charge of Mr. Werstlein's son Nicholas, frightened while the latter was closing a gate and run about seven miles into the county and returned to this city again, covering a distance of about fifteen miles. The only damage done was the loosing of a seat. The happy ending of what might have proved a costly affair to Mr. Werstlein, so pleased him that he presented Will Rowley, an employe of Turville & Porter, who finally stopped the team, with a $5 bill.

A SURE THING

The Creamery Will Be Build at Tweet.

James Graslie, father of Cashier Graslie of the First National bank was out to Tweet last Saturday afternoon, and addressed the members of the co-operative creamery. Mr. Graslie has had a great deal of experience in this matter and was able to give the farmers many pointers which will greatly benefit them. The foundation for the creamery will be build this fall and next spring it will be in running order.

It Pays to Trade at Home.

There are a good many reasons why one should trade in his home town, and the main one is that it pays in the end, although a good many people do not realize it. The following from an exchange is worthy of perusal: "People, and especially farmers who own their land, who are in the habit of sending to the big department stores for their goods, should consider something besides the price they are paying for their goods. They should take into consideration the fact that market towns and the value of farm lands go together. Without the towns and the town market, without the stores, shops and small factories, farm lands would not be worth living upon. It is an old saying and a true one to a great extend that the farms build the cities. From the fact that this is true comes the other fact that the value of the farm comes largely from the opportunity to build these cities. If that farm was located away from the market its value would be much less. You and your farm have helped to build what there is of your market town. You should feel that you have an interest in that town and give its business men your trade. As the towns and cities increase in size farm land in that vicinity will increase in value and the business of farming will be on a more firm foundation. It is a false idea that the business man of the market town is robbing the farmer, and charging too high prices for his goods, as a rule. There are a few things sometimes that can be bought a few cents cheaper in the city stores but on the whole the prices asked by the country merchants are reasonable and the percentage of farmers that get wealthy is greater than that of the country merchant. Trade at home, and every dollar you spend in patronizing and encouraging legitimate enterprise in your home town will pay you better than a few cents you may sometimes save by sending away."

Goes to Pembina.

His many friends here will regret to learn that Fred Wells, who has managed the business for the Western Land company, has resigned and that the change in his arrangements will take him away from Crookston. Mr. Wells has joined forces with the Stevens Land company and will go to Pembina, N. D., to become the managing partner of the company in the office at that point. He assures the Journal that he will continue to reside in Crookston, and will spend all of the time here that his business will warrant. Mr. Wells has proved to be one of the best land men in the valley, and has a large clientele. He will be able to increase the business of the new company in his field, and can be relied upon at all times by intending purchasers of valley soil. —Crookston Journal.

Crookston College opened its fall term Sept. 9th. Its first winter term will open Nov. 4th. Board and furnished room in hotel or private family for $2.50 to $3.00 per week. Tuition $1.00 per week. Send for catalogue. Adress J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

Why One Should Trade at the Central Mercantile Store.

Not because we have the finest and freshest stock in town to select from (Though we have);

Not because our service is courteous and prompt (Though it is);

Not because our dry goods are modern and up-to-date (Though they are);

Not because our grocery department is the largest and best in town. (Though it is);

Not because our terms are the very easiest (Though they are);

But for these reasons combined, and on top of them, namely: that the Central Mercantile Co. sells GOOD GOODS only, and at the same price others charge for second and third rate articles. These are the collective reasons that cause our business to steadily increase and make trading with us always pleasant and profitable.

MARRIED FRIDAY

Louis Hanson and Miss Lizzie Brown, both of this city, were married last Friday at Cass Lake. The bride is an accomplished young lady of this city, while the groom is one of our most substantial business men. Both have a large circle of friends here who will wish them much happiness.

Deer Plentiful

Executive Agent Fullerton, of the state fish and game commission says that deer are more plentiful in Minnesota this year than, they have been for years. The absence of snow during the open season last year made it difficult to track and kill the animals, and this accounts for the large number in the woods this year.

PERTINENT POINTERS.

A Citizen—All our citizens should take a great deal of pride in the hospitable manner in which Mr. D. N. Winton entertained the senatorial party which was here last week. The courteous treatment he accorded them cannot fail to bear fruit.

A Real Estate Dealer—The best way to help build up a town is to be pleasant and courteous to strangers, who just now are quite numerous in Thief River Falls. Your civility will help to make a good impression and will be carried away and cherished. Never forget that you are a part of the town and that your department helps to make up the stranger's estimate of the place.

Guaranteed clothing, shoes and caps at the C. O. D.

We have unlimited money to loan on improved farms. Will loan on final receiver's receipt. Interest reasonable. No delays. Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office over First State Bank.

WANT TO KNOW.

Of Opening and Business Chances Here.

Station Agent Miller last week received a letter from the head officials of the Great Northern asking that a list of business opportunities which Thief River Falls, afforded be forwarded to the St. Paul office and they would be placed in the hands of people who would be interested. A large list was made out and as a result we'll have some new industries here.

NO SLAUHTER

State Lands Will Bring Good Prices or None.

State Auditor Dunn is determined that state land sold this fall shall bring a fair value commensurate with the present high prices realized by railroads and land companies. He says:

"I do not propose to let an acre of land go this fall for less than $7 unless it is remarkably poor soil. I will start the bidding at that figure. If the land will not bring as much as $7 this fall, the state can well afford to hold it a while. I am not going to let any syndicate get rich off state land. On the easy terms the state makes, a man wanting the land for farming purposes can well pay a good, fair valuation."

The inhabitants of the province of Ontario write more letters than those of all the rest of Canada.

The Jersey mosquitoes are playful, compared with those of North Carolina. A minister of that state, while traveling with a child in Hyde County, found the mosquitoes so rapacious that he had to put the child's head in a paper sack to keep the insects from devouring it alive.

Can a man live without his stomach? This question has been decided affirmatively by Karl Kruger, a Chicago gardener. Four months ago, because of cancer, his stomach was removed by an expert surgeon. Then he weighed 96 pounds; now he weighs 160, and is still taking on flesh.

Charles Ball, of Albion, Mich., believed that he could take poison without serious effect. He swallowed twenty-five grains of morphine, and in a little while he vomited it. This demonstration so pleased him that he thought even a pistol shot would not harm him. Aiming a revolver at his temple he fired. That was Mr. Bell's last mistake in this life.

A pair of Kansas lovers the other day went to Iowa to escape the law which forbids the marriage of first cousins. The same day in a Kansas town a couple from Colorado took advantage of a Kansas law which permits a divorced person to marry after the lapse of six months. These cases led the Kansas City Journal to suggest that the states send ambassadors to each other with power to negotiate treaties through which uniformity in marriage laws might be secured.

The Engineering and Mining Journal calls attention to the fact that the United States treasury now holds in round figures $510,000,000 in gold, which is the largest accumulation of the yellow metal anywhere in the world at present. Not all of this, however, is actually at the disposal of the treasury, only $64,000,000 being included in its current cash assets. The sum of $150,000,000 is by the present law held in the redemption fund, which the treasury must hold against the outstanding greenbacks and United States notes, while the balance of $296,000,000 is on deposit only, and is represented by gold certificates in circulation.

Old Home Week is not confined to New England. Nevertheless the recent gathering of "old settlers" to commemorate Colorado's silver wedding to the Union had novel features. Three months' sojourn in Colorado, for instance, entitled one to become a pioneer. During the celebration a colossal statute of Lieutenant Zebulon Pike was unveiled at Colorado Springs. Dressed in the military costume of 1806, he is represented standing on Cheyenne Mountain looking away toward the greater mountain which bears his name. Is he wondering, perchance, as he watches frequent trains lifting passengers up the once inaccessible slopes, how "Pike's Peak or Bust!" was ever synonymous with supreme courage and endurance?

Among the curios in the postoffice department exhibit at Buffalo are the postoffice ledger of Benjamin Franklin; the report of the committee of United States senate on the transportation of mails on Sunday; a postal card which traveled around the world in 120 days; history of the travels of a registered letter in this and other countries, some old books printed in the seventeenth century and obtained through the medium of the dead letter office; framed statistics of the postal service from 1775 to date; the magnitude of the postal service of the United States as compared with France, Germany and Great Britain; some old mail bags which have been cut open and robbed, in one instance the bag being stained by the blood of the murdered carrier.

The great department stores have been a serious problem to small traders all over the country, and in several states unsuccessful attempts have been made to regulate their growth by legislation. A new plan is now to be tried in Chicago in the form of a cooperative department store to which a number of small dealers are to contribute their capital and their work. The whole investment will be five hundred thousand dollars, and it is planned to sell everything from ice cream to a coal hod. Each department will be in charge of a skillful merchant, familiar with that particular branch and himself a stock-holder. As the rent of a single department will be less than the rent of a separate store, and as each man hopes to carry his old customers with him, the enterprise starts with rosy hopes.

In Corea the Gentlemen of the Court are making handsome profits out of the illicit manufacture of false money. They can buy for 10 dollars enough silver to make 400 dollars' worth of coin, and as they are on good terms with the King, the police dare not interfere.

A few days after shooting a neighbor's cat, David Bell, of Marietta, O., discovered that somebody had thrown several pounds of arsenic in his well. Fortunately the discovery was made before any one had used the poisoned water.

FIRM GRIP ON PURSE STRINGS.

Board of Control's Reply to the State Normal Board.

The state board of control has returned its answer to the "bill of rights" submitted recently by the state board of normal regents, and though several of the points in the normal board's "bill" are objected to, one of the members of the board of control expressed the belief that the two boards would get together and would reach an amicable agreement.

The normal board has waived the question of the validity of the law creating the board of control and the right of the right of the board of control to assume financial direction of the normal schools, and the only questions at issue now are the points of jurisdiction of each board.

The contention of the normal board is that it has the right to determine the quantity, quality and cost of the supplies for the educational part of the normal schools, while the board of control acts practically as an auditing board. The suggestion of the board of control in regard to these rights is that the normal board has full control of the educational functions of the schools where they are plainly educational; that the board of control has the management of the financial affairs so far as they are clearly financial, and that where the fields overlap the two boards should co-operate and carry on the work together. Great difficulty has been found in delineating the rights and powers of the two boards. The power to arrange the educational program involves questions of financial control—and the power to control finances affects the right to fix educational courses, so that it is expected that a committee of conference will become a permanent body.

The normal board also wants the right to fix the salaries of employes other than teachers. The board of control would not grant this request, as an opinion of the attorney general implicitly stated that this power resided in the board of control. The request of the normal board that the resident directors be continued as purchasing agents of the schools was not acceded to. The board of control felt that the spirit of the law forbade such action.

PATHETIC PLEA WORKED PRIESTS

Unique Swindling Scheme Is Unearthed at Duluth and Fargo.

One of the cleverest and most unique swindles in which Catholic clergymen of the Northwest appear to be victims, has just come to light. Duluth, Fargo and Moorhead are the only towns in which the game has been tried so far as known, but there are doubtless others.

A few weeks ago a man about thirty years of age, with a hectic flush on his face and distressing cough, appeared at the residence of Bishop McGolrick in Duluth and told the following story: "I have just been released from Stillwater penitentiary, where I was given a long term for grand larceny, the specific crime being the theft of a large sum of money in St. Paul. I did not steal the money, but was the accomplice of the man who did, and it went hard with me. My pal died in prison soon after incarceration. We had buried the money before we were arrested, and living up to the promise which I made my pal, I have never disclosed its whereabouts to the authorities. The priests who occasionally visited the prison learned all the facts from me and told me to return the money to its rightful owner. Not until I was released did I learn that the owner was dead and had left no heirs. Now what shall I do with the money? The amount is between $5,000 and $6,000." The priest who heard him advised its donation to some charitable institution. The fellow was painfully penitent and cleverly hinted that he was without means or clothing, but could not think of touching the hidden plunder. He was given $15 and an overcoat and left. A few days ago Bishop McGolrick was in Fargo and learned that the trick had been successfully worked there and in Moorhead.

NO FROSTS YET.

Causual Condition for Minnesota—Plowing Going on Rapidly.

The weather bureau's climate and crop service bulletin for Minnesota contains the following summary for last week:

In much of the Red river valley the week was dry till the afternoon of the 13th, allowing threshing to go on satisfactorily; in some places the stacked grain is being threshed. The cutting of a poor flax crop, plowing and cutting corn fodder have been the work of the week where threshing was out of the way. The northern potato crop is generally a good one.

In central and southern portions of the state there have been abundant rains, falling for the most part on the 9th, 11th, 13th and 14th. These rains stopped threshing entirely. The moisture has been nearly all taken up by the soil, their being no marked rise in the water of streams and ponds. In a few places the soil was too wet to plow, but generally it is in splendid condition for working, and plowing is going on rapidly. Some of the cut flax lying on the ground is beginning to sprout. Pastures and late vegetables are much improved. Corn is nearly all safe from frost, and a great deal of it now is in shock. Rye seeding is going on nicely. Grapes in the vicinity of Lake Minnetonka are said to be very fine. Though the temperatures are falling with the advance of the season, there have been no frosts reported in the state.

Sons of Hermann.

New Ulm, Minn., Sept. 22.—The state organization of the Sons of Hermann will celebrate German day at the National Hermann Park in this city Sunday. Excursion trains will leave St. Paul and Minneapolis Sunday morning to accommodate the societies of those cities, and it is expected that there will be a large crowd here. Hermann Park is a beautiful place, just on the edge of the city, surrounding the national monument, which cost the national society nearly $50,000, an ideal place for a picnic.

BISHOP WHIPPLE LAID TO REST.

Large Attendance of Clergy and Laity at Funeral of Venerable Bishop.

Faribault, Minn., Sept. 22.—The city of Faribault, the State of Minnesota, the entire Northwest paused yesterday to drop flowers on the bier of the Rt. Rev. Henry Benjamin Whipple, bishop of the Episcopal Church of America, but a man distinctly above any creed.

The funeral of the bishop brought to this city a distinguished concourse of churchmen, a special train which left the Twin Cities in the morning, carrying 265 people. Every train to reach the city brought with it men and women whose heads were bowed in grief, and who came to look their last upon the dead whom they had loved and revered in life and whom death had sanctified.

The distinguished visitors from outside the city included eight bishops of the Episcopal church, Bishops Tuttle of Missouri, Hare of South Dakota, Morrison of Duluth, Grafton of Fond du Lac, Millspaugh of Kansas, Leonard of Ohio, Morrison of Iowa, and Edsall of Minnesota. Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul sent his personal representative. This is thought to be the first churchman of another faith that has been so honored by the Roman Catholic church in the Northwest—possibly the first instance of the kind in the United States.

In the funeral services which begun at 2 o'clock the most distinguished churchmen of the West participated. Bishop Tuttle of Missouri was the officiating priest. He was assisted by Bishop Millspaugh of Kansas, Bishop Grafton of Fond du Lac, Bishop Hare of South Dakota, Bishop Morrison of Duluth and Bishop Edsall, now bishop of Minnesota. No departure was made from the ritual prescribed for the dead by the Episcopal church. The simple office for the dead was chanted; the cathedral choir sang the requiem.

After the service in the church a second service was repeated outside for those who were unable to find a place within the cathedral. The remains of Bishop Whipple were placed in the crypt beneath the cathedral altar.

PICKPOCKETS AT A FUNERAL.

Two Clergymen and a Layman Are Robbed.

Faribault, Minn., Sept. 22.—Two of the Episcopal rectors who came from St. Paul yesterday to attend Bishop Whipple's funeral were deprived of their pocketbooks in broad daylight while walking about the platform at the Faribault railway station. But the platform was small, the crowd large. Both divisions of the church were attacked. Although the clergy suffered the most, the laity did not escape. A third pocketbook was taken from a member of Christ church, St. Paul. The unlucky rectors were Rev. C. C. Rollit of Red Wing and Rev. Charles H. Plummer of Lake City. Mr. Rollit was relieved of $300. Of this sum $90 was in currency and the balance represented by a certified check. Mr. Plummer's loss was only $10. Isaac Lincoln of St. Paul was separated from $15. The police are at work on the case.

FAVORS CHANGE.

Deacon Moller, La Crosse, Wis., Would Substitute "Catholic" for "Episcopal."

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 24.—In speaking of the proposed change in the name of the Episcopal church to "American Catholic Church of the United States," Rev. C. N. Moller, deacon of the La Crosse diocese, said yesterday morning: "I am honestly and sincerely in favor of the change of name. The Episcopal religion dates back to a time when the Protestant churches had not been founded. It was the first church of God and there is no reason why it should not be called such—the word 'catholic' meaning God's own church, or the true religion. I think the change in the name will be formally made at the San Francisco convention."

MURGAW STILL AT LARGE.

Sheriff's Posse Fails to Locate the Supposed Murderer.

Grantsburg, Wis., Sept. 22.—No reports have been received from the sheriff's posse, but a party from near the scene of the Bosley murder arrived in town yesterday and states that it is believed Murgaw is in hiding at or near the Indian village at the mouth of the Yellow river, and the pursuers are working on this theory. It is well known that a Chippewa Indian will not harbor a murderer, and no doubt they will turn Murgaw over to the authorities as soon as they learn he is wanted. The country is wild, and Murgaw could easily hide in the tamarack swamps that are practically inaccessible to the white man.

TRAIN IN A SINK HOLE.

Serious Trouble on the Eastern Minnesota Railroad.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 23.—The Eastern Minnesota railroad is having much expensive trouble with sink holes on the Mesaba Range division. A few weeks ago a train went down in one near Stonybrook, causing the loss of a life and the damage of much property. Now another has developed about fifteen miles above the first. A few days ago while an ore train was crossing a swamp the track for the distance of about a block suddenly disappeared. Quick work resulted in the recovery of the train. The ore shipments of the road are being retarded by the condition of the track in these quagmires, and it is no easy matter to fill them.

Drunken Soldier Runs Amuck.

Fort Meade, S. D., Sept. 22.—Private Charles Lynch of Company M, while crazed with drink, entered the barracks yesterday, drew his revolver and began firing indiscriminately at his comrades. One bullet struck Private Caldwell in the thigh and another Charles H. Amich in the stomach. A guard shot Lynch in the leg and he was overpowered. Private Amich died last night. Lynch had been at Sturgis on leave of absence and there secured the liquor.

CUTS OFF PICKINGS.

Perquisites of State Reformatory Employes Reduced by Sweeping Order.

The state board of control has issued an order which cuts off about all the perquisites of employes at the state reformatory and it may strike others where the employes are not required to live within the institution itself.

At the reformatory the state furnishes a carriage and coachman for the superintendent. The coachman is one of the convicts.

The order provides that any employe who takes his three meals and lodging outside the institution will be entitled to a credit of $10 per month. He will not, however, be allowed anything additional for rent of the house he lives in. Neither will he be allowed to take one meal at the institution, or keep his horse at the institution. Stores of the state are not to be sold to employes at cost or any other price.

No officer or employe will be allowed any perquisite—other than those provided by law. Supt. Randall has repeated the order for the benefit of employes, and it is stated a second time in conclusion that no employe, except the superintendent, will be allowed to keep horses at the institution at the expense of the state.

FIRE AT MADISON, MINN.

Loss Estimated at About Sixty Thousand Dollars.

Madison, Minn., Sept. 24.—Early yesterday morning another terrible fire visited this place and caused a loss of about $60,000. The fire broke out in the Merchants hotel, a three-story wooden building, and before the flames were stopped the following business places were destroyed: E. O. Berg's hotel building, town hall, Sandwick's bakery and confectionery, E. O. Sage's saloon, H. L. Hayden's new building under construction, millinery stock of Miss Annie Tweten and building, Farnham & Jacobs' Independent Press office, Halverson & Skaro's general merchandise store, Dargue & Bro.'s notion store, H. J. Chalmers' photograph gallery and residence, H. A. Johnson's general store, Skjels' hotel, E. J. Berg's restaurant, J. M. Jones' flour and feed store. Quail & Swann's department store was badly damaged. The fire engine failed to work and the citizens could do nothing but watch the fire devour the property.

STRUGGLE FOR LIFE.

An Old Lady Assaulted and Murdered, Presumably by Tramps.

Deadwood, S. D., Sept. 22.—Mrs. Matilda Foust, an old lady, was found dead yesterday near Strawberry creek, half a mile beyond Pulma, by a teamster. Her head was badly bruised and her wrists looked as though they had been gripped tightly in a struggle. It is believed she had been assaulted and then murdered by some railroad hoboes. She had been missing for three days.

FARMER'S LOSS.

Building and Contents Destroyed by Fire.

New Richmond, Wis., Sept. 24.—The buildings on Thomas N. Rowe's farm were destroyed by fire. John Norton, the tenant, lost several hundred bushels of grain and some live stock. Snowbank & Starr lost a threshing outfit and team of horses. The fire started from a threshing engine. No insurance.

Succeeds Kittredge.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Sept. 24. — W. G. Porter, assistant United States attorney, and John King, who compose the new law firm of Porter & King, with offices in this city, have been appointed attorneys for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad company to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. A. B. Kittredge, who was recently appointed United States senator. Mr. Porter is well known throughout the state. For four and one-half years he has been state's attorney for Custer county.

His Conscience Troubled Him.

Aberdeen, S. D., Sept. 24.—Gov. Herried is the recipient of $200 sent him by a man in the East, who in the early days of the state filed on school land, sold it and went back East. His conscience troubled him somewhat and he wrote the governor, saying he wished to make a donation of the $200 to the educational fund of the state. Gov. Herried has decided to use the money for the purchase of books as a nucleus of a library for the new state normal school of Aberdeen.

Big Ranch Sold.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 24.—The Paul ranch, known as the Wavertree farm, consisting of 6,500 acres in Murray and Cottonwood counties, Minn., has just been sold to a syndicate embracing John Metcalf & Co. of Paulina, Iowa; George R. Slocum, St. Paul; Ed Smith of Morrison, and L. F. Lammers of Heron Lake, Minn. The consideration was $200,000. At present the largest herd of Galloway cattle in the United States is located there.

Nullifies Peddler Law.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 22. — Acting County Judge Doherty ruled that the peddler law passed by the last legislature is unconstitutional in working against residents of other states selling by sample before the goods are bought or brought into the state. He also held it was not good as to the agent of non-resident shipping. The decision practically nullifies the law as to non-residents.

Output of Spearfish Hatchery.

Spearfish, S. D., Sept. 22.—The government fish hatchery has planted a good many thousand fish this season in the streams of the Black Hills and in Northern Nebraska and Eastern Wyoming. This month the superintendent will collect about a million fish eggs which will be raised at the hatchery this winter, and next spring they will be large enough to plant. There are at present about 500,000 little fish at the hatchery.

THE TIME TO LAUGH.

SOME GOOD JOKES, ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

It Was a Close Call, but the Postal Clerk Anticipated the Danger in Time—Facts After Cases—Reason for the Deed.

IT WAS A CLOSE CALL.

"I want, sir," he said as he got speech with the chief clerk at the postoffice the other afternoon—"I want to report to you that on November 23 I wrote a letter to my brother in Kalamazoo, Mich."

"I see," replied the official.

"In that letter, sir, I inquired about celery—how to prepare the soil, how to grow it, how to bleach the stalks to a milky whiteness."

"Yes."

"I inclosed a dollar bill for seeds and asked my brother to respond at once. I folded that letter up, sir, and directed it and stamped it and mailed it. The days went by. Day after day fled into the past, and no response came. My Kalamazoo brother is not a procrastinator, sir. On the contrary, he is chain lightning at answering letters. When a fortnight had passed without a response, I wrote him again."

"And he hadn't received the first?" said the clerk as he tapped his nose with his pencil.

"He had not. My epistle had never been placed in his hands."

"And then you came and filed a report?"

"No, sir. I decided to handle the case myself. I had my brother watch the Kalamazoo postoffice while I watched this and had a friend in Washington keep an eye on the postmaster general. Night after night, sir, I have walked around this building at midnight in disguise. By daylight or darkness my eyes and ears have been open. It was the same with my brother at Kalamazoo, the same in Washington."

"And haven't you struck a clew yet?" was asked.

"I have, sir. Yes, sir, up to last night I had a clew leading up to the guilty party and was certain that his punishment could not be long delayed when a strange thing happened. I discovered the letter lying under some papers on my desk. It had not been mailed."

"All through your own carelessness."

"Yes, sir."

"And your clew was knocked into a cocked hat."

"Yes, sir."

"And you have no case against the Postal Department."

"No, sir."

"Well?"

"Well, sir, I thought I'd come and tell you about it and say that I had abandoned the case and no one would be arrested, but at the same time, sir—at the same time, in the interest of justice and integrity—"

"You feel it your duty to warn us not to do so again," finished the chief clerk as the other hesitated.

"That's it exactly and to hope that this narrow escape may be a lesson to you all the days of your life. That's all, sir, and now I wish you all good day, sir."

A REASON FOR IT.

There were only four or five male passengers in the parlor car, and after an all-day ride one of them remarked to another, with whom he had struck up an acquaintance:

"I could not fail to observe that the relations between you and the dark-faced gentleman were somewhat strained as we played cards together."

"Yes, somewhat," was the reply.

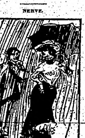
"Then you have not met before?"

"Well, not exactly, but I recognised him."

"As one about whom you had heard something to his discredit? I see."

"No, it was not that. I simply recognized him as the man who married my divorced wife."

NERVE.



Smith (who had forgotten his own umbrella)—"Pardon, madam, but might I not be of assistance in carrying your umbrella?"

HARDLY WORTH MENTIONING.

A clergyman says that he was one day called down into his study to perform the marriage ceremony for a couple in middle life.

"Have you ever been married before?" asked the clergyman of the bridegroom.

"No, sir."

"Have you?" to the bride.

"Well, yes, I have," replied the bride, laconically; "but that was 20 years ago, and he fell off a barn and killed himself when we'd been married only a week, so he really ain't worth mentioning."

IT ALTERED THE CASE.

She had looked the house over and was satisfied with it, but as she returned the key to the agent a thought struck her, and she said:

"Ah, there is one more thing. Let me ask if anyone has ever died in the house."

"Why, y-e-s, I believe so," he reluctantly replied.

"That settles it then, and I won't take the house."

"But people are dying in houses all the time," he protested.

"Yes, but the idea is uncanny. I'll look for a new house."

"But listen, ma'am. This was no ordinary death. It was a poet who had the house, and one evening they found him dead in his chair with a half completed poem, 'To Night,' in his hand. The angels took him as his soul searched for inspiration."

"Oh, well, that alters the case, and I'll take the house. I thought somebody might have died of pneumonia or something."

HIS PREDICAMENT.

"I notice that the landlady only helps you to the scraps," whispered the new boarder. "Why don't you leave?"

"I can't," responded the meek man. "You see I am the landlady's husband."

HAND TO MOUTH EXISTENCE.

"I hear you are making lots of money."

"My dear fellow, I lead a regular hand-to-mouth existence."

"You don't say! What are you doing?"

"Practicing dentistry."

RUBBING IT IN.

"Hiram," said his wife, "I wish you would go out to the shed and get a bucket of coals."

"Coals!" muttered Hiram to himself, as he went grumbling to comply with the demand. "Coals! That's her way of reminding me that she could afford to spend six months in England every year before she married me!"

LITTLE LAUGHLETS.

Then All Was Well.

He had just explained to her that he could not possibly defer the marriage for longer than three months, and that if she would not consent it were better to break off things at once than later. She had listened sadly, wondering. She did not see why he refused to wait longer for her—she had asked but a year—and then she consented to the limit.

"Do you know, darling, what I would have done if you had not consented?" he asked.

She looked quietly into his eyes. He could see she had been hurt. Her lips parted, but she said not a word.

"Why, I would have waited," he said.

Reasoning by Analogy.

Mr. Bronston—Mr. and Mrs. Upton both had on new suits in church today. Mrs. Upton's dress was tailor-made.

Mrs. Bronston—Huh! How do you know it was tailor-made?

Mr. Bronston—Because Mr. Upton's clothes were ready-made.

Truly Indispensable.

"It seems to me that you take a great deal of impertinence from that bartender."

"Well," answered Bronco Bob, "he's kind of got us where we can't kick. You see he is not only bartender, but he runs the only undertaker shop in town, and we've simply got to put up with him."

A Far-Seeing Youth.

The father wanted the young man to go into business and the boy wanted to be a lawyer.

"Which would you rather be," argued the father, "a lawyer or a millionaire?"

"I'll be both if you give me half a chance," replied the son, and the father hurried him away to a law school.

She Was Sure.

George—I see nothing but for us to elope. Do you think your father would forgive us?

Ethel—I am sure he would.

George—How can you be sure?

Ethel—I felt a little nervous on that score, and—and I asked him.

An Easy Mark.

Bill—I've been to see a palm reader.

Jill—And did you believe what he told you?

"Yes, I did. He told me I was too easy, and charged me two dollars."

In China.

"Some of these missionaries out here," said the heathen, "are regular birds."

"Yes; birds of pray," remarked the other significantly.

BRIDGE BUILDERS.

MAGIC IN AMERICAN ENTERPRISE IN THIS LINE.

The Shan State of Thibaw Opened Up to the World by a Railroad Over Hills, Through American Skill and Engineering.

There seems to be no spot in the world into which American enterprise is not penetrating. The way in which the United States is building great steel bridges in far off lands is something which will bring a wail of woe from the bridge builders of England, who have until recently had a monopoly of this sort of thing. How many people ever heard of the Shan State of Thibaw? It is a region lying between upper Burmah and southern China, and through it runs the old caravan route from China to Mandalay. Long before the British took Burmah the trade of the Far East filtered through Mandalay by slow stages, up and down the rugged hills and valleys, through the thick jungles and over the mountains, finally descending the Ghaut mountains and emerging on an open plain. Now this is all changed, and a railroad winds up the hills and over the plateau between Mandalay and Thibaw. American skill, American ingenuity and American enterprise made this possible, for by means of a great steel bridge and viaduct the obstacle of the great mountain gorge of the Goktelk Valley—an obstacle which seemed at first insurmountable—has been successfully overcome. This Goktelk Valley slopes from the mountains on one side to a canyon 500 feet deep, at the bottom of which rushes a turbulent river. Across the river precipitous cliffs tower high up, forming the further wall of the valley. Across this canyon the caravans used to cross, by a natural bridge, a causeway under which the river had tunnelled. Now over the valley and canyon stretches a spider-like structure of steel, crossing the river 850 feet above its surface and striking a series of tunnels and artificial ledges in the face of the opposing cliffs, by which the railway makes its way to the slopes of the next valley. In building this bridge use was made of the old natural causeway for a foundation for some of the bridge piers, so that the deepest pier of the bridge is only 325 feet high—high enough, but not so high as it would have had to be had not the old causeway been there. This Yankee bridge is 2,000 feet long and 4,000 tons of steel enter into its construction. It was built in sections in the United States, carried with infinite care and difficulty to this far off region and there set up, every bolt, bar, rivet and truss finding its place and fitting into each other with the utmost nicety. Such things are the very magic of mechanics, and more wonderful they seem than any of the stale old exploits of King Solomon's Djins. A man in Pennsylvania takes a piece of paper and makes a lot of figures on it. He then takes another piece of paper and draws a lot of lines on it—his calculations and his plans—the weaving of the magic spell. Then half-naked figures in the lights of flaming fires in dusky, cavernous buildings make pieces of steel as this master magician directs; they are his gnomes working out the spell. These pieces of steel are packed into boxes and shipped to the far off mountainous land, where dusty caravans wind through the hills laden with the products of Cathay, and the grave, white-turbaned merchants tell each other tales of the wonders of Oriental sorcery as they journey. The master magician from Pennsylvania waves his magic wand; his subordinate magicians spring to their work, and lo! before the astonished eyes of the people of the caravans appears a light and airy way of steel springing across the valley; and over it rush the iron devils, spouting smoke and fire—which means that the 6:30 train on the road to Mandalay is passing.—New York Press.

Learning Among the Clergy.

The idea that the business of a clergyman is to maintain and spread belief in a particular religion which he believes to have been revealed, and of a bishop to see that he does it, is slowly dying away, until there is a doubt whether learning is of any use, and the man who prossesses it, especially if it be of the older kind, is regarded often with kindness no doubt, and sometimes with admiration, but usually with a pity from which contempt is not entirely absent. "What could you expect?" said a country town magnate a few years ago when told that the largest parish was falling into disorder. "Why E—— (the rector) is a Hebrew scholar."—London Spectator.

Reassuring Him.

"Time flies, perhaps I've made my call too long," he said. Said she:
"Oh, no, it wasn't long at all—
It only seemed to be."

Charlie's mamma missed a small pot of jam one day, and as she noticed some tell-tale evidences about Charles' mouth and hands, she asked him if he had seen or eaten the jam. Charles insisted that he had not even seen the jam. Papa thereupon was called in, and Charles was punished severely. Drawing Charles close to her, and wiping the tears from his eyes, mamma said: "When I was your age, my boy, I never told a falsehood." "How old were you before you began?" asked Charles, between sobs.

PET DOGS ARE TATTOOED.

Fashionable Fad That Will Doubtless Be Extensively Followed.

A decidedly novel occupation which has of late been noticed is that of tattooing the names of their owners upon dogs, says the Baltimore American. Several months ago there appeared in northwest Baltimore a young man who is engaged in that pursuit and during the time he remained here he did a good business. Among the dogs which underwent the operation is a pretty little fox terrier belonging to Charles F. Wohrna, which rejoices in the name of Booze, and a fine bred bull terrier, Jip, the property of the Chesapeake Brewing Company. Both animals bear upon their breasts, where the hair grows thinnest, the names of their respective owners. Contrary to the belief of some that the operation is a cruel, painful one, those who have seen it performed declare that the animals apparently experienced very little pain. The operation lasts about fifteen minutes. The animal is usually held by two men, one having hold of the hind legs, while the other holds the front paws. With a set of very fine needles the operator then goes to work, deftly pricking the letters into the skin, just deep enough to draw a few drops of blood. Then he pours the Indian ink all over the wounds, or, rather, scratches, and the operation is over. In a few weeks the sores are completely healed and the animal bears during the remainder of its existence an unmistakable mark of identification. The price of the operation is 50 cents.

THEATRICAL BUSINESS.

Ingenious Devices Resorted to by Dramatic Managers.

The business of the claque has been subdivided into many branches, all of which are controlled by one man or group of men. The applauders—even the lady in the box who faints, and the man who hisses at a good part in order to arouse the indignant enthusiasm of the audience—were all provided for so many tickets a performance, to be sold by agents to the public. So carefully were the plans of campaign thought out that the Whiteley of applause used to provide a man or woman, dressed in provincial style, to jump up and scream out, "There's the villain hiding behind that tree," or the like. We also hear of cowboys in the far west pulling out their revolvers and peppering the melodramatic villain. On one occasion in a London theater the business instinct came out in the same way. A relative of the lessee was enacting the part of an indignant father, whose son had got into the hands of the money lenders. In the interview with the money lender the father severely lectured him, and then demanded his son's bill. "There, sir," he said, "is my check for one thousand pounds." The money lender was just reaching out for the check when a voice came out from the pit: "Don't you take it, old chap. I've got one of his now for six pound ten, and he's asked me to hold it for a fortnight."—Chambers' Journal.

REVIVAL OF ROAD HOUSES.

Rural Taverns Doing a Good Business at Present Time.

There are certain old country taverns here and there, up toward Westchester and down beyond Brooklyn and over on Staten Island—not only those which everybody knows, like the Hermitage in the Bronx and Garrison's over by the fort at Willetts Point, but remote ones which have not yet been exploited in plays or books, and which still have a fine old flavor, with faded prints of Dexter and Maud S. and much earlier favorites in the barroom. In some cases, to be sure, though still situated at a country crossroads, with green fields all about, they are now used for Tammany headquarters, with pictures of the new candidate for sheriff in the old-fashioned windows—but most of them would have gone out of existence entirely after the death of the stage coach, if it had not been for the approach of the city, and the side-whiskered New Yorkers of a previous generation who drove fast horses. If the ghosts of these men ever drive back to lament the good old days together, they must be somewhat surprised, possibly disappointed, to find these rural roadhouses doing a better business than ever in their day. The bicycle revived the roadhouse, and though the bicycle has since been abandoned by those who prefer fashion to exercise, the places that the wheel disclosed are not forgotten. They are visited now in automobiles.—Scribner's.

Affected Them Differently.

Recently the German Crown Prince called the Kaiser's attention to the fact that the teachers in certain colleges gave their pupils some extraordinary subjects on which to write essays. Whatever the subjects were, it is known that the Kaiser was displeased, while his heir could see only the comic side of the matter. It leaked out that a teacher in a college for girls of 12 to 13 years of age gave the following as a subject for an essay: "What Was the Idea of the Egyptian King Amasis About God, and What do We Christians Think About It?" This incident explains both the Crown Prince's hilarity and the Emperor's annoyance.—Berlin Correspondence London Telegraph.

She—So you've been across? He—Yes, for the first time. She—Ah! when you realized that you were on the broad bosom of the ocean did you not feel like shouting out with joy? He—I don't know about the joy, but I assure you I could scarcely contain myself.—Philadelphia Press.

Blackburn Family

Romances in History of Notable Kentuckians.

When he was a boy of 20 years, just fresh from the college halls of old Center, Joe Blackburn married the beautiful Theresa Graham. Now a man of 63, with long years of public life behind him and a third term in the United States senate opening before him, the authorized announcement of Mr. Blackburn's second marriage is made. Senator Blackburn has chosen the widow of his cousin, Judge H. H. Blackburn of West Virginia, to take the place left vacant by the death of his first wife. Mrs. Mary A. Blackburn has been a widow for more than three years. After the death of her husband she received a clerkship in the quartermaster general's office, which she continued to fill until last week. She is a woman of strong personal magnetism, of fine presence and gracious maners, and by her marriage will become the latest addition to the senatorial brides. For a number of years the former Mrs. Blackburn, together with Mrs. Carlisle, gave added distinction to the reputation of Kentucky's hostesses. All three of her daughters made their debut in Washington. There is something of a romance connected with the first marriage of Senator Blackburn. At 19 he was graduated from Center college. Before the day of graduation came he met and had fallen deeply in love with Theresa Graham, the 16-year-old daughter of Dr. Christopher C. Graham, who for over half a century lived at Harrodsburg. He died at last in Louisville at the age of 100 years. When young Blackburn left Center college he went to Chicago for the practice of law. Returning to his own state in a brief time, he became a volunteer elector for John C. Breckinridge. Before the campaign opened he was married to Miss Graham, and from that time until her death, two years ago, their married life was one of happiness, broken only by the civil war, through which young Blackburn, and several of his brothers, of whom he had eight, served with gallantry. Throughout the whole of his public life Mrs. Blackburn was his stanchest supporter and wisest adviser. Their home in Washington was one of the centers of the social life of that city. Of his three daughters two have married, and in the lives of both romance has played a part. Senator Blackburn's eldest daughter is the wife of Colonel Herman A. Hall, who is a member of the staff of General Chaffee. Years ago she was married and was widowed in two weeks, her husband dying of rapid consumption near Los Angeles, Cal. In her bereavement Lieutenant Hall was ready in his sympathy. A year later the young lieutenant was ordered to Washington, proposed and was accepted, the marriage following soon after. A Washington dispatch says that after the debut of Miss Lucile Blackburn a young attache of the Spanish embassy, whose wife has since died, became her avowed and ardent worshiper. She married Mr. Lane, however, whose tragic death made her a widow some time ago. Romances in the Blackburn family have not alone been confined to the present generation. Senator Blackburn's father, Dr. E. M. Blackburn, was the owner of a famous bluegrass farm, on which were foaled horses known to every turfman the world over. He was the father of nine stalwart sons and three daughters. His friends and neighbors were the Steels and the Bufords. But, as has been recorded of friends and neighbors since Bible times, differences arose. In one of them Dr. Blackburn lost an eye as a tribute to the superior fistic skill of old Abe Buford in a debate over division fences. The other dispute was more deadly in its nature, his third son falling before the pistol of young Captain Steel in a duel brought about by the heat of a political campaign. He left a widow, to whom many paid court, but the successful suitor of them all was his younger brother, James. Of the three sisters two were married to the same man—General Thomas Flournoy of Arkansas. The older sister died shortly after his marriage to her, and then General Flournoy pleaded his suit with the equal success with the younger. The third sister married Judge Morris of Chicago, who was known during the civil war as a "copperhead," and was imprisoned for his outspoken sympathy with the Southern cause and for aiding prisoners to escape. All the brothers married, and several of them set the example which Senator Blackburn is now following—that of marrying the second time. The people in the mountains near Rockcastle tell the story of a Blackburn who came among them to pusue his pet study of geology. He found there a mountain maid who taught him the lesson that he had never learned before. His eyes told him that she was beautiful, his heart that she was good. He argued that in everything but the place of her birth she was the superior of all other women, lacking but a part of their advantages to outshine them all. He married her, intending to take her back with him to his own world, but her influence proved the stronger. He settled down to the life among her own people, and until the day of his death, years later, was one of them in dress, action, and thought, lost to ambition, and content to live within the narrow horizon shut in by the mountains.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Her Fame Waning...

Kentucky's Historic Idols Slowly Falling.

One by one the idols of Kentucky are slowly falling. First, the great battleship named after the state was christened with plain, cold water instead of with the red and fiery liquid for which the commonwealth of Kentucky is so celebrated in song and story. This baptizing of the battleship Kentucky with water instead of whisky, and which is generally referred to in Kentucky as the "crime of the 19th century," was the first great prop of tradition knocked from under old Kaintuck. But now comes another, and if anything, a harder blow. Col. Henry Watterson, the guardian angel of the only original star-eyed goddess of reform, declared in an interview at Saratoga Springs recently that he had not seen a horse race in fifteen years.

An old Kentuckian on hearing of this statement relapsed into the following soliloquy: Shades of the old Kentucky home, whither are we drifting? In every one of the three great geographical divisions of Kentucky—viz., the blue grass, the b'ar grass, and the pennr'yal—there has always been a feverish idolatry of the trinity of Kentucky—good whisky, fast horses and pretty women. But whisky was scorned, suh, yes, suh, scorned, when the battleship Kaintucky, suh, was christened with water, suh, instead of good old licker, suh. And now, suh, Henry Watterson, ouar Henry, suh, the greatest man, suh, since Thomas Jefferson, such, and fast horses at that, suh, by bragging, suh, that he has never attended a horse race in fifteen years, suh.

The next thing and somebody will stand up and declare that the beauties of Kentucky squint and that they have big feet. Then what will there be left of the commonwealth of Kentucky? It is rumored that Henry Watterson, upon his return to his native land, will be called before a court-martial and tried for heresy. If nothing else will take him to a race-track he should be bound and gagged and carried out to one and made to lose all his money on the long shots.—Exchange.

Number of Dogs in Europe.

The European dog census has been completed and shows France, with 2,864,000 dogs holding the European record. Not only are there more dogs in France than in any other country in Europe, but there are more per thousand inhabitants than in any other European country. France has 75 dogs to every thousand of its inhabitants. Then follow Ireland with 73, England with 38, Germany with 31, and Sweden with 11. There are 2,200,000 dogs in Germany, 1,500,000 in Russia and 350,000 in Turkey, though tourists who have resided in Constantinople aver that this number falls short of the actual total, which they think to be larger in Turkey than elsewhere. In France there is a dog tax and every dog is registered, a condition which makes the computatnon comparatively easy in that country. The number of dogs in the United States is estimated at from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000.

The Meanest Woman.

"I've heard a good many stories about the meanest man," said Mr. Peckham, as he looked furtively around to make sure that no one was present who might carry tales to his wife, "but nobody has ever had anything to say about the meanest woman. I know her." His companion, being a man of sound judgment, preferred not to take any part in the poor fellow's domestic affairs and pretended not to be interested. But Mr. Peckham went on: "She lives around the corner from us and makes her husband send work to the office that he's sick about once a week, so he can stay home and look after the babies while she goes shopping. Then she finds fault with him because he isn't working his way up and getting his salary increased."

Caterpillars as Food.

In many parts of Africa and in portions of Central and South America the caterpillar is regarded as a delicacy. Travelers who have been prevailed upon to taste them pronounce them palatable. In Australia the larvæ of the longicornes or horned caterpillar are much sought after as food. They are found in the interior of decaying trees. The larvæ from each different species of tree have their own distinctive flavor. Many natives eat them raw, but certain civilized tribes prefer them fried.

An Elopement.

Tourist—"My good woman, did you see a bicycle pass a few moments ago?" Country Matron—"Naw, I didn't see any kind of a sickle, mister; but jest a while back I saw a wagon-wheel a-runnin' away with a man." Tourist—"Ha, ha, ha!" Country Matron—"You kin believe it or no. I wouldn't if I hadn't seen it myself."

GUARD ATTACKED

M'KINLEY'S VAULT THE SCENE OF A DESPERATE NIGHT ENCOUNTER.

SENTRY FIRES A SHOT AT A MAN

ANOTHER MAN DIVERTS THE SHOT AND TRIES TO STAB THE SENTRY.

MEN MAKE GOOD THEIR ESCAPE

INCENDIARY CONVERSATIONS RECENTLY HEARD AMONG VISITORS.

Canton, Ohio, Oct. 1. — A strange story comes from Westlawn cemetery, where a company of regulars from Fort Wayne, Mich., are guarding the vault in which the body of the late President McKinley lies. It is to the effect that a guard on duty on top of the vault fired a shot at one man who refused to heed his challenge; that the shot was diverted by another man who appeared from another direction and that an effort was made to stab the guard. Military regulations prevent either the officers or the men of the post from being quoted on any matter connected with their service, and for this reason Capt. Biddle, who is in command, was obliged to decline to be quoted at the camp last night. He will at once make a full report to his superiors. Reliable authorities made the following statement:

Private Deprend was on guard duty on top of the vault at a point commanding the entrance below and the approach from the rear. Shortly before 7:30 he saw what he took to be

The Face of a Man

peering from behind a tree about forty feet from his post. He watched it for twenty minutes, he says, and at 7:45 saw the man hurry to a tree ten feet nearer. He challenged the man to halt but this was not heeded and the fellow approached nearer. Deprend leveled his gun and aimed to shoot for effect, but just at that instant another man who came toward him from the opposite side, caught the gun, threw it up and the bullet was spent in the air. This same man struck Deprend on the right side of the abdomen with a knife or other sharp weapon, cutting an "L"-shaped gash in his overcoat an inch and a half long each way and a smaller one in his blouse. The flesh was not broken but was bruised under the cuts in the clothing. Deprend, in the struggle, fell and rolled down the side of the vault. Lieut. Ashbridge, officer of the day, was in front of the vault and rushed to the top on hearing the shot, but the men made good their escape. All members of the company on hearing the shot hurried to the vault, and besides searching the cemetery

The Guard Was Increased.

Deprend is a recruit enlisted in New York about four months ago. He is said to be an excellent soldier and to have a fine record with his officers. He says the man who attacked him was masked but that the first one he saw was not masked. He says the latter carried a white package in his right hand and something that glittered in his left. Since the incident stories have been told in camp of some incendiary conversations overheard in the crowds that have visited the cemetery, including one yesterday alleging that some stranger said: "Lots of people would like to see this whole thing blown up."

There are seventy soldiers at the cemetery, twenty of whom are constantly on guard doing duty about the vault and camp.

Stories regarding the incident when they reached the city were connected with the jail delivery that occurred about the same time. While there seems to be no doubt that at least two prowlers attempted to reach the vault there is much difference of opinion as to the object of the intruders who evidently made good their escape.

CARRY LUXURIES.

One Reason British Are So Slow in South Africa.

London, Oct. 1. — Perhaps one of the reasons that the British who are so frequently reported as being in pursuit fail to overtake the Boers in South Africa is found in a remarkable army order recently issued by Lord Kitchener, as follows: "The commander-in-chief in South Africa desires to impress officers in command of mobile columns that the object of such columns is mobility, and that he has learned that such forces carry with them furniture, kitchen ranges, pianos and harmoniums, which nullify that object. These articles must be handed over to the nearest stores."

She Will Become a Countess.

London, Oct. 1. — The wedding of Miss Helen Morton, daughter of Hon. Levi P. Morton, former vice president of the United States, and Count de Perigord, son of the duke of Tallyrand-et-Sagan, will occur Oct. 5 at St. Mary's Catholic church in Chelsea. A civil marriage will take place at the French consulate the same day.

New Mayor for London.

London, Oct. 1. — Sir Joseph Dimsdale, M. P., who is engaged in the banking business, has been elected lord mayor of London for the ensuing year, to succeed Frank Green. The election was accompanied by the usual quaint customs.

Three Persons Drowned.

Kanamazoo, Mich., Oct. 1. — A small sailboat containing seven persons capsized on West Lake, eight miles south of here yesterday, and Mrs. Peter Krondyke, P. Van Halst and Miss Edith Maud were drowned.

Gutted by Fire.

Logansport, Ind., Oct. 1.—The large printing establishment of Wilson, Humphreys & Co., this city, was gutted by fire. Loss, $45,000. Insured for about half. Two firemen were badly injured.

BOAT GOES DOWN.

Twelve Men Have Narrow Escape on Lake Superior.

Duluth, Minn., Oct. 1. — The tug Annie Smith and scow were caught in the blow on Lake Superior, and the latter went to the bottom soon after. The twelve men aboard of her were rescued by the tug. The tug and scow were bound from Duluth for Little Marais, eighty miles from here, on the north shore. The gale overtook them twelve miles southwest of the two islands, and Capt. Eli Jacques of the tug turned back and made for them for shelter. When within a mile of the islands the storm had risen to such an extent that it was plain neither craft could live long unless shelter could be had. About this time it was seen that the scow was sinking. Capt. Jacques cut the tow lines, and performed the perilous task of turning his tug in the sea and going to the rescue of the men. Great skill was necessary to avoid a collision. At one time they were so close together that two of the men on the scow leaped when she was on the crest of a wave to the tug's pilothouse below, in the edge of the trough of the sea. The men were all rescued and the tug succeeded in reaching the lee of the islands with the crew drenched and almost exhausted.

SPARKS FROM PIPE.

Curious Happening to Two Men in a Wagon.

Steven's Point, Wis., Oct. 1. — Harvey Norton and Tug Wilson, two residents of the town of Plover, were driving along a country road when a spark from one of their pipes fell into the wagon box and ignited a package of boat pitch and a roll of tarred paper. A fierce wind was blowing at the time and in a trice the blaze was fanned up so vigorously that the clothes were burned off their backs, and but for the timely arrival of assistance they no doubt would have been fatally burned.

THREE KILLED.

Fatal Rear-End Collision on Great Northern.

Devils Lake, N. D., Oct. 1. — At Penn, in this county, a rear-end collision on the Great Northern railway killed George Conne, engineer; Clayton Saunders, fireman, and Fireman William Gill. L. Bissell, brakeman, had a leg broken. Eighty cars of stock were wrecked. The wreck is the most disastrous that ever occurred in this section. Both were through freights, the last one being a double-header, which ran into the other train while taking water.

IOWA TOWN SCORCHED.

Fire Sweeps Two Streets and Destroys Many Buildings.

Dubuque, Iowa, Oct. 1. — Fire originating in the Mississippi hotel at Clayton early yesterday morning, swept two streets and destroyed five business houses and ten residences, comprising the principal part of the town. The McGregor fire department was sent to the scene on a special train. Estimates of the loss range from $50,000 to $100,000.

IT IS COLUMBIA'S

VICTORY IN THE FIRST CUP RACE GOES TO THE OLD DEFENDER.

CLOSEST IN THE CUP'S HISTORY

THE YANKEE BOAT WINS BY THIRTY-NINE SECONDS ACTUAL TIME.

SHAMROCK AHEAD AT THE TURN

AMERICANS DO NOT CONSIDER THE CUP ENTIRELY OUT OF DANGER.

New York, Oct. 1. — After the most marvelous exhibition of light weather sailing on record the Yankee single-sticker, Columbia, Saturday defeated Shamrock II. by the small margin of thirty-nine seconds actual time and one minute and twenty-two seconds corrected time.

Both yachts were handled with consummate skill by their skippers. Never in the history of cup races have the contending yachts been so "close aboard" each other as during their duel Saturday. There was never a time while the Irish yacht and the Yankee were on the same tack and while they were slipping down the wind that their skippers could not hail each other, or, perhaps, toss a biscuit from deck to deck.

Through the long, gentle, crestless swells on the fifteen mile stretch to windward Shamrock proved conclusively that it was a trifle the better ship. Its advocates have declared from the start that in smooth water and with a breeze at eight knots or more it would surprise the Yankee talent, and it did. On the weather work it vanquished the Columbia by thirty-nine seconds, which is officially four seconds less than the time allowed the white sloop.

Where Shamrock Failed.

In running, notwithstanding an advantage of about 800 feet of sail, Shamrock II. sent a dumb chill through its admirers and warmed the circulation of stupified patriots by dropping astern of the Yankee yacht. It was apparent that the unapproachable Herreshoff model, with less driving power, was doing the work its designer expected of it. Sleek and knifelike, it carved the long rolls, incidentally cutting its way to the port of the challenger. Within four miles of the outer mark, on the run in, the Columbia had overcome all the gain of Shamrock II. on its splendid struggle to windward. Then the pent-up feelings of the multitudinous patriots began to find vent in yells and cheers, and the bands began to play "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," a sentiment which seemed to be, at that time still, somewhat debatable.

Down the wind Columbia gained not only the time lost in the windward work, but added thirty-seven seconds to it, beating its rival in the running by 1:16. It crossed the finish line 35 seconds ahead of Shamrock II.

Americans Are Anxious.

New York, Sept. 30. — An anxious but determined lot of yachtsmen gathered at the New York Yacht club yesterday to talk over Saturday's exciting events, the chances of Columbia in her next contest with Shamrock II. on Tuesday, but above all that dreaded question of the famous cup returning to whence it came after being in American hands a brief month over half a century.

The anxious members seemed to be in the majority, although the grim air of determination not to give up the cup was quite prevalent. Every member frankly admitted that he had experienced something like a scare and no one wanted to have Columbia win another race by so close a margin.

If Capt. Barr can win Tuesday's race the clubmen will heave a long sigh of relief, but until that triangular course contest is decided in favor of Columbia the cup will be considered, if not in actual danger of returning, at least as rocking in its glass case in its depository.

A DOUBLE MURDER.

Two Brothers Accused of Killing Their Sister and Her Suitor.

De Soto, Mo., Oct. 1. — Daniel and William Greenhill are under arrest on suspicion of having murdered Mrs. Uren, their sister, and John Meloy, a suitor for her hand. The two were killed Saturday night at the home of Mrs. Uren's father, Robert Greenhill. It was at first thought that Meloy had killed the woman and then shot himself. At the inquest yesterday, however, it developed that the forehead of each had been cut with some sharp instrument and bullets fired into the wounds. A bloody ax was found in the bed of William Greenhill, and a blood-stained hatchet was discovered elsewhere in the house. Mrs. Uren last spring was divorced and since that time Meloy had been paying her attention.

WOMAN SCALDS HER DAUGHTER.

Then Attacks the Child and Inflicts Wounds That May Result Fatally.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sept. 29. — Tillie Burhans, aged fifty-three, the wife of Lafayette Burhans, a prosperous farmer living about four miles from Pleasant Valley, yesterday made two attempts to murder her 15-year-old daughter. Last night the girl was feeling somewhat better, but she is still in a very critical condition and may not live.

The Burhans family is composed of Lafayette Burhans, his wife Tillie and six children. This morning Mabel was in her room fixing her hair preparatory to going to school. The mother went upstairs with a pot of boiling hot tea in her hands. When her mother entered Mabel's room she poured the hot tea over her face and chest and the girl was horribly scalded. Then the mother attacked her daughter with a butcher knife. The daughter screamed for help as she ran about the room to escape being struck by the knife. The enraged mother finally caught the daughter and dealt her several blows on the face with the sharp edge of the knife. By this time help came and the woman was overpowered. She was afterward arrested. She will be examined by insanity experts.

COLLEGE STUDENTS IN A FIGHT.

Many Broken Heads at Washington and Lee University.

Lexington, Va., Sept. 20.—Cane rushes at Northern colleges are tame affairs compared with the desperate fight that occurred this week as an outgrowth of "class spirit" at Washington and Lee university. The struggle was waged over the possession of a statue of George Washington between a band of sophomores on one side and a large part of the freshmen on the other. The sophomores were armed with clubs and they used them. Three freshmen were made insensible from blows, one had his head cut open, another's collar bone was broken, another's nose was smashed, and the list of minor casualties is a long one.

A LIFE FOR A LIFE

LEON CZOLGOSZ MUST PAY THE PENALTY OF HIS AWFUL CRIME.

JUDGE PRONOUNCES SENTENCE

TO BE ELECTROCUTED DURING THE WEEK BEGINNING OCT. 28.

NO ONE ELSE IS IMPLICATED

PRISONER STATES THAT HE ALONE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CRIME.

Buffalo, Sept. 27.—Leon F. Czolgosz, the assassin of President McKinley, was yesterday sentenced to be electrocuted in Auburn state prison during the week beginning Oct. 28, 1901. Before sentence was passed the assassin evidenced a desire to speak, but he could not get his voice above a whisper and his words were repeated to the court by his counsel.

"There was no one else but me," the prisoner said in a whisper, "No one else but me to do it and no one paid me to do it. I was not told anything about the crime and I never thought anything about that until a couple of days before I committed the crime."

Czolgosz sat down. He was quite calm but it was evident that his mind was flooded with thoughts of his own distress. His eyes were dilated, making them appear very bright. His cheeks were a trifle pale and his outstretched hand trembled. The guards put the handcuffs on his wrists. He looked at one of the officers. There was an expression of the and helplessness in his eyes. He glanced about at the people who crowded the room in efforts to get a look at him. The prisoner's eyelids rose and fell tremulously and then he fixed his gaze on the floor in front of him.

At this point Judge Titus came over to the prisoner and bade him good-bye. Czolgosz replied very faintly, letting his eye rest upon the man who had been his counsel. "Good-bye," he said weakly. He was then hurried down stairs and through the tunnel to the jail where he will remain until removed to Auburn to pay the penalty for his crime. Although the time announced for the convening of court was 2 o'clock every seat and every foot of standing room were occupied before 1:30 and scores were clamoring outside for admission. The doors were locked and no more were admitted to the room.

In passing sentence Judge White said:

"In taking the life of our beloved president you committed a crime which

Shocked and Outraged

the moral sense of the civilized world. You have confessed that guilt, and after learning all that at this time can be learned from the facts and circumstances of the case twelve good jurors have pronounced you guilty of murder in the first degree. You have said, according to the testimony of creditable witnesses, that no other person aided or abetted you in the commission of this terrible act. God grant it may be so. The penalty of the crime for which you stand convicted is fixed by the statute and it now becomes my duty to pronounce this judgment against you.

"The sentence of the court is that in the week beginning Oct. 28, 1901, at the place, in the manner and means prescribed by law, you suffer the punishment of death.

"Remove the prisoner."

The crowd slowly filed out of the room and court adjourned at 2:26.

Now Safe in Auburn Prison.

Auburn, N. Y., Sept. 27, 3 a. m.—Leon F. Czolgosz, the condemned assassin of President McKinley, is now in murderer's row in the prison here, where he will remain until put to death by electricity during the week beginning Oct. 28. Czolgosz was accompanied by Sheriff Caldwell and a guard of sixteen men. The party arrived in a special car attached to the regular New York Central train which left Buffalo at 10 p. m. The departure from Buffalo was so unexpected by the citizens that practically no one besides the officers knew that the assassin is no longer in Buffalo. Czolgosz occasioned no trouble whatever during the trip. Soon after he was placed in his cell with the death watch before his door he was sound asleep.

WANTS WHAT IT HAS COMING.

State Desires Title to Land in St. Louis, Cook and Lake Counties.

Within the next three months Minnesota may receive patents to 100,000 acres of swamp lands in St. Louis, Cook and Lake counties. A special agent of the land office is on his way to Minnesota from Marquette, Mich., to investigate and report.

"There are about 100,000 acres of land in St. Louis, Lake and Cook counties appearing on the government surveys as swamp lands that have never been patented to the state," said State Auditor Dunn. "We have had a special agent, Timothy E. Byrnes, working on the matter, and the department at Washington has promised to give the subject immediate attention.

"We want to know whether these lands designated as swamp lands are going to be presented to the state. If they are, we want patents, and if the state is not going to get them all we want to know it and find out just how we stand. There is considerable trouble arising all the time with the squatters and settlers on lands to which the state has not yet received a patent.

"A decision should be made within the next three months, and then we shall know just how much of this land belongs to Minnesota. Some of the surveys on which the lands are designated as swamp lands, were made from six to nine years ago, and it is time the matter was settled."

INSTRUCTIONS ON TAX SALES.

State Auditor Issues Circular Letter to County Auditors.

State Auditor Dunn has issued a circular letter to county auditors on the sale of property bid in for the state. The letter gives instructions on the sale of real property sold for delinquent taxes under the general laws of 1901, which has been bid in by the state.

If the applicant offers to pay the full amount of taxes for which the tract was forfeited, together with the subsequent delinquent taxes, costs and penalties, the approval of the county auditor is sufficient. If the applicant offers less than the stated amount the application must be approved by a majority of the board of county commissioners.

The current taxes should not be included in the application. Redemption can be made by the owned before the time of redemption expires only upon payment of taxes, penalties, interest and costs. The interest is to be computed at 1 per cent a month. When redemption is made for tracts sold for less than the full amount of the taxes and costs the purchaser is entitled to a refundment of the actual amount paid in by him, with interest at 1 per cent a month.

NOT FOR SAMPSON

HIS ATTORNEYS CANNOT APPEAR BEFORE THE COURT OF INQUIRY.

HIS REQUEST IS TURNED DOWN

THE COURT DOES NOT REGARD SAMPSON AS A PARTY TO THE CASE.

CAPT. M'CALLA ON THE STAND

TELLS OF ARRANGING A CODE OF SIGNALS WITH THE INSURGENTS.

Washington, Sept. 29.—In the Schley court of inquiry yesterday a letter was presented from Rear Admiral Sampson asking that Messrs. Stayton and Campbell be permitted to appear before the court to represent his (Sampson's) interests. The court refused to grant the request on the ground that "the court does not at this time regard you as a party to the case."

After the court adjourned Mr. Stayton said he would to-day again renew his request to be allowed to appear in Admiral Sampson's behalf. He added that the continued references to Admiral Sampson were offensive and should be properly met. He further stated that he did not regard favorably efforts on the part of the judge advocate to prevent exploitation of Admiral Sampson's part in the war. He thought it better to bring the matter in and meet the questions squarely.

The principal witnesses of the day were Lieut. John Hood, who commanded the dispatch boat The Hawk during the Spanish war, and Capt. Bowman H. McCalla, who was in command of the Marblehead. The testimony of both these officers dealt with the delivery of dispatches from Admiral Sampson to Commodore Schley, and both related conversations with the latter. Capt. McCalla gave in detail his part in of signals with the Cuban insurgents, and his communications with them near Cienfuegos on May 24, 1898, when it was learned definitely that Cervera's fleet was not in the harbor there. He said that Capt. Chadwick, who was Admiral Sampson's chief of staff, was the only person at Key West to whom he had communicated the signal code.

Capt. McCalla expressed the opinion that coaling was feasible off Santiago at the time Schley began his retrograde movement.

Two naval officers, one representing the government and the other Admiral Schley in the court of inquiry, were at the signal office of the war department yesterday searching the records for copies of dispatches that were exchanged between the fleet and the signal station at Aguadores between July 1 and July 3, 1898, inclusive. Nothing could be found and it is supposed that as the messages were wig-wagged and communicated to Gen. Shafter's headquarters by telephone, the signal officer in charge made no record of them. The officer, Maj. Green, has been telegraphed as to whether or not any records were kept of these messages. The messages sought were those between the flagship New York and the shore.

Exciting Experience of a Party of Duck Hunters.

Ashland, Wis., Sept. 29. — A fierce electric wind and hail storm wrought considerable damage in this vicinity early yesterday. Several places were struck by lightning and trees and fences were demolished. At Kakagon, a fishing point, four duck hunters, including two sons of Prof. Burr of Beloit college, were sleeping in a boat. Lightning struck the spar of the boat, ran to the bow and struck a water flask made of aluminum, perforating it from one end to the other. The bolt struck George Burr just back of the shoulder and made zig-zag streaks of highly-profiled red marks all down his back. The bottom of the boat was punctured and it was with the greatest difficulty that it was kept from sinking. All four of the men were severely shocked and dazed, but George Burr was the worst injured. He was brought to Reinhart's hospital, where he remains unconscious.

WAR IS NOT OVER

GEN. MERRITT RECEIVES INFORMATION FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

SAYS SITUATION CAUSES WORRY

POLICY OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT IS SAID TO BE A GREAT MISTAKE.

DISCREDITED BY ARMY OFFICERS

GENERAL'S INFORMATION, THEY SAY, IS NOT ACCORDING TO FACTS.

London, Sept. 27. — War in the Philippines is by no means over, according to advices received recently by Gen. Wesley Merritt from a staff officer in the islands. Gen. Merritt said to-day:

"The present situation is a source of great anxiety to the authorities in the field. There is a strong feeling among them that the real facts in the case have been kept back by the Washington government. The United States is in possession of a rich but small area of the whole territory. The insurgents are likely to maintain guerilla fighting for an indefinite period, thus seriously retarding the final conquest of the islands. The enemy is blackmailing the native towns and villages without difficulty, obtaining all necessary supplies, since a native can live on a handful of rice a day. Doubtless the American people will be sorry to be assured that of 40,000 soldiers will be required to hold the Philippines, but conservative officers on the spot are convinced that this view of the situation is correct. In the opinion of my correspondent the policy of civil government for the islands is an absolute mistake. The Filipinos are thoroughly dishonest and unreliable, according to his view, believing with a celebrated diplomat that language was given to conceal thought, so that it is impossible to place the slightest reliance on their promises. The idea of appointing such men to official positions he thinks distinctly foolish, since it only serves to impress the natives with the belief that the United States is weakening and inclines them to show their teeth accordingly."

A Permanent Army

Not According to Facts.

Washington, Sept. 27.—Army officers in Washington, commenting upon the interview with Gen. Merritt in London, say that the general's informant has given him some information that is not according to well-known facts. They say that the situation in the Philippines is promising in the extreme.

SIGN HIS OWN COMMISSION.

Rather Unique Proposition for President Roosevelt to Face.

Milwaukee, Sept. 27. — One of the duties to be performed by Maj. Gen. Arthur McArthur, as a member of the board of officers at Washington which is to pass upon certain recommendations for promotions, medals, and other things, will be to determine whether President Roosevelt shall be given a rank far below that which he now holds—brevet brigadier general of volunteers, for services performed at Santiago.

This will probably be the first time in the history of this country at least, if the recommendation is granted, that the president has been called upon to sign his own commission. The board will simply be obliged to sit in judgment upon the acts performed long before Roosevelt was president.

It was reported by a military man, who is qualified to speak with intelligence upon such subjects, that the board, of which Maj. Gen. MacArthur will be president, will consider the matter just the same as it would were the president simply a colonel of volunteers.

GOV. ATIENZA CAPTURED.

Maj. Pitcher Captures Governor of Island of Mindoro.

Manila, Sept. 27.—Maj. Pitcher has captured Gov. Atienza of the island of Mindoro, with seven of his staff. There have been many surrenders of insurgents in the Camarines and on the island of Samar.

The depleted bands of the insurgent Gen. Malvar continue to dodge the most active American commands. These, like the insurgents, are operating in small detachments.

The customs receipts show an encouraging increase despite the present depression on account of delay in putting the new tariff into operation. This will take place on Nov. 15. The Philippines commission has decided to transfer jurisdiction over the harbor of Cavite to the navy.

Nine companies of artillery will sail for the United States Sept. 30 on the transport Meade.

Last of a Bad Trio Gone.

Greensburg, Pa., Sept. 27. — Vassel Laketch was hanged in the jail yard yesterday, in the presence of about 400 persons. Oct. 30, 1900, Paymaster Wilfred Hessler of the Southwest Coke company and his colored driver, Harry Burgess, were driving to Moorewood with $5,000 to pay off the coke workers, when they were held up by Vassel Laketch and three companions, all foreigners. In the ensuing fight Paymaster Hassler and one of the highwaymen were killed and another highwayman seriously wounded. Burgess whipped up the horses and escaped with the money. Later the three men were discovered hiding in a ravine, and before they surrendered one of them, Vasell Nicholas, was killed. The two others, Mike Markovitch and Vassel Laketch, were taken to jail, and one day, while waiting for trial, Markovitch hanged himself in his cell.
